For State Senator

Dear Citizens;

I am a candidate for State Senator for the 67th Legislative District and certainly would appreciate your support.

I would like to make a personal call, but road conditions forbid. My word is good and I promise to fight for just and economic laws. Having been in the farming game for 12 years, in the Red River Valley, I know farm conditions as they really are. In curing the ills of the farmer one percent, it would help the business man and laborer as well.

For your support I promise to repay you with honesty and loyalty.

Your friend, Herman J. Berg.

To Our Patrons

Now is the time to be on the look out for grassy and weedy flavors in your cream. Flavors that show up even with the best of care.

Cream may be ever so sweet and still will go for second grade, just because it has that grassy flavor, which makes it unfit for use in Land O' Lakes butter.

By taking the cows off pasture two or three hours before milking, and by thoroughly stirring while cooling the cream it is possible to do away with a good deal of these off flavors.

Secures 25 Year Lease

Olaf Neset, Theodore Quale and G. L. Biddick of the Red Lake Summer Resort Association met with the Indians in council at Redby Saturday, and secured a release on the lots now used by the association.

The lease is for a twenty-five year period, and will take effect when the present one expires in 1932. There are now eleven buildings on the property. Those who are interested should see Mr. Neset or Mr. biddick.

Pave The Highways

Those who contend that it is extravagance to pave roads have had an object lesson in what continuous rains do to dirt highways. Minnesota got through the frost exit very comfortably but the recent continous rains have made many highways nearly impassable and Minnesota,s good soil mixes readily with water, making soft and sticky mud that makes autoing very costly as well as unpleasant and somewhat dangerous. Those living on pavedd roads have a better appreation of their good fortune.

County Will Soon Get Money

A certificate indicating that payment of $123,467.28 will be soon forthcoming to Marshall county from the Minnesota Highway department in the near future has been received by W. O. Braggans, county attorney. The money will be used to pay off the 125,000 bond issue for the construction of Trunk highway No, 6 thru Marshall county.

Trunk highway No. 6 was constructed by Marshall county before the state adopted the trunk highway system, this county issuing bonds for the construction in 1920. However when the Babcock road amendment went into effect in 1921, the costs of construction were taken over by the State highway department. The bonds are due this summer and will be paid as soon as the state check is received.

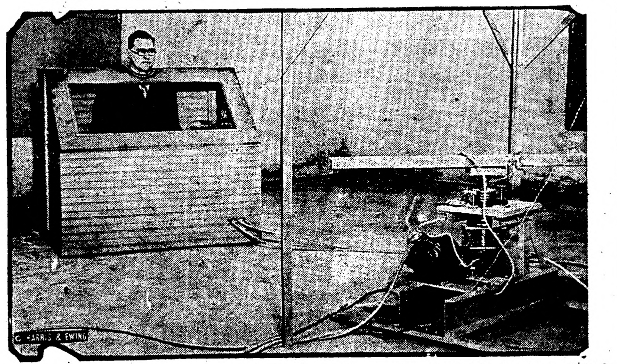
Uncle Sam Tries to Improve Theaters for Talkies



How to improve theaters for talking motion pictures is a problem now being tackled by the bureau of standards. V. L. Chrisler of the sound section, who looks as if he is imprisoned in stocks, is really studying the "echo" effect in this room, and his body and the observing instruments are enclosed so as not to interfere with the tests. It has been found that cushioned seats in talking picture theaters aid in the absorption of the "echo effect."

Powder Odor Is Key to Murder

Short Work of Crime Mystery Made by Detective in Iceland.

Reykjavik, Iceland.—A pair of goggles and a box of face powder are not among the things that usually come to one's mind when thinking of Iceland.

Neither is murder, cold blooded, brutal murder, the hammering of a man to death with a heavy pipe.

Yet the third murder in Iceland in 60 years was solved largely through the fact that the murderer dropped a pair of goggles at the scene of the crime and bought a new pair, and both smelled of the same face powder.

Murder in Iceland, the land of fjords, frost, and fire; the land from which Leifur, son of Eirikur the Red, discovered "Wineland the Good," or America, is uncommon. The history of Iceland is crowded with battles and bloodshed, but the present peaceful population could hardly believe the report that traveled over the island one bright morning that a respectable citizen of Reykjavik had been attacked during the night, robbed, brutally beaten, and murdered. It was the third killing in over half a century.

Found Dead in Bed.

Jon Egilsson, bachelor, forty-one, conducted with his brother a motor car agency and repair shop, situated on the outskirts of the town but facing the main thoroughfare. On the night of the murder Egilsson went to bed as he was accustomed to, sleeping alone in the building. At ten o'clock the next morning he was found dead in his bedroom, barefooted and almost naked, his head horribly battered. About $500 in cash was missing from the company's safe. The weapon with which Egilsson was murdered was a bar of brass.

Detectives who first examined the room noticed one very unusual thing; the killer had left his goggles and the brass bar behind, but he had taken time to wash his hands before leaving the scene of the crime.

The chief of police of Reykjavik, Hermann Jonasson, took charge of the case personally and worked it out according to his own ideas, for there are no real specialists on criminology in a community with so few criminals.

Chauffeur Has New Goggles.

All the employees of Egilsson's firm were questioned, but apparently they all had perfect alibis. Finally a chauffeur, Egill Hjalmarsson, attracted the particular attention of the detectives because he had a new pair of goggles. He claimed that he had been out late the night before, driving a party into the country, and that when he got home at about two o'clock in the morning he went direct to bed.

This part of the story was true. He did go straight to bed, but got straight out again, and was away from his room for a long time. Hjalmarsson could not explain how he got several scratches on his face. And then a detective examined the new goggles. Goggles are not usually perfumed, but those had the same scent as the pair found beside Egilsson's body. The new goggles were found in a drawer, next to a box of face powder.

Little more than 12 hours after Egilsson died the police had sufficient evidence to arrest Hjalmarsson. He was taken into custody the same evening and charged by the chief of police the following day. Hjalmarsson confessed, and thus the crime was solved in little more than a day and a night.

The murderer is now awaiting sentence and is liable to sentence to prison for life—capital punishment was abolished in Iceland some time ago. Reports on the sanity of the prisoner may influence the sentence.

Montana Youths Plan Swim of 3,500 Miles

Livingston, Mont.—Livingston's endurance swimmers, Thomas Currier and Jack Mola, Jr., are still determined to swim from Livingston to New Orleans—an aquatic jaunt of a mere 3,500 miles—via the Yellowstone, Missouri, and Mississippi rivers. The boys plan to "dive off" in June and, accompanied by a companion and boat, to complete the trip inside of 110 days. By swimming eight hours each day they believe they can cover 35 miles between dawn and dark.

Dog Obeys Command to Go for Doctor

Lovell, Wyo.—A child of a Mrs. Dempsey was ill. Medical care was imperative. There was no telephone and the mother could not leave the child.

Mrs. Dempsey called the family dog, a cross between a collie and a shepherd, attached a note to his collar and commanded him to find a doctor. The canine understood—he seemed to sense the fact that here was an emergency—dashed off through the snow, and inside of fifteen minutes a physician was en route to the Dempsey home.

Alaskan Island Timber Called Forestry Wonder

Ketchikan, Alaska.—With a dense stand of fir and cedar timber Kosciusko island, off the northwest coast of Prince of Wales island, near here, is a forestry wonder. The island is ten miles long and seven miles wide. Heavy timber begins almost at the water's edge and terminates in the center with groves of fir trees ten to twelve feet in diameter, standing so closely as to appear as one tree trunk.

The island is watered freely by rains and fog clouds. The abundant moisture has developed red cedar trees of immense girth, exceeding in that respect the shingle trees of Washington and Oregon. The forestry service is measuring the timber for prospective sale this summer.

GIRL COLLEGE STUDENTS DISPLAY POWER IN CRISIS

Come Vigorously to Aid of Fire Fighters When Apparatus Is Stranded.

Norton, Mass.—With all the dramatic effects of a movie scenario, 20 girl students, members of the Wheaton college volunteer fire deaprtment, removed every portable object from a burning house after Norton's solitary piece of fire apparatus had become stranded half a mile away.

Heretofore a fire department in name only, the college organization won the plaudits of townsfolk by the salvage work which it performed after hope of saving the furnishings of Dr. Clarence N. Davis' home had been virtually abandoned.

The fire started just as classes were over at the near-by college, and it required only a few moments for the volunteer fire-women to race across a field to the scene of the blaze.

A dozen ablebodied men were standing in front of the burning building, deploring the fact that Norton's only fire wagon had gone out of commission en route to the fire.

The girls, under direction of "Chief" Constance Campbell, of Grand Rapids, Mich., went to work immediately, lugging miscellaneous furniture out of the smoky interior. Within a few minutes the house had been emptied of everything moveable except for a piano valued at $3,000.

The piano, though unusually large and heavy, left the firewomen undaunted. Eight girls lifted it and carried it to the front door. As one end of the piano protruded through the doorway, several of the men along the curb rushed up to lend a hand, but the girls elbowed them aside and carried their burden to the lawn.

Meanwhile fire apparatus had arrived from Mansfield, and while visiting firemen extinguished the blaze, the girl volunteers powdered their noses, brushed their clothes, and returned to their dormitories.

Wild Geese Killed When They Crash Into Chimney

Anaconda, Mont.—Apparently confused and temporarily blinded during a storm, eleven wild geese, en route from southern climes to northern marshes, crashed headlong into the 585 foot Anaconda Mining company smelter stack and tumbled earth-ward, dead.

Stage "Brick" Holdup

St. Louis.—St. Louis bandits are working "a new one" on their victims. Two negroes strode up to the entrance of a store. One walked in. The other waited on the outside.

The one on the outside hurled a brick through the large show case window. The owner started after him. The one in the store obtained $35 from the cash drawer and fled.

Greatest of Tributes, "He Died for America"

One need not have stood by the Unknown Soldier's tomb at Arlington to understand why such a shrine evokes today in many countries a tribute of reverent silence, why it draws the thoughts of millions of Americans by its austere yet tender significance. It is the element of mystery, so beautifully woven into the fabric of the idea, that gives to it a universal appeal.

Because no human being knows, nor ever will know, what body rests there, it perfectly symbolizes each and all of the legions of America's dead.

No state, no section, can claim this veiled figure as its own; it belongs to the nation. No pride of birth or breeding can sully the sacrifice it represents; forever sealed is the question whether the nameless warrior was cultured or illiterate, rich or poor, whether the blood he shed had strains of Celt or Saxon, Slav or Latin, Norse or Puritan.

One thing, and one alone, makes illustrious his memory—an American, for America he laid down his life. "For greater love hath no man than this."

To be the solace of those that mourn, the symbol of a nation's gratitude and its ideals of sacrificial service—these are the glories that exalt the Unknown Soldier who lies there, pillowed on earth from the battlefield where he gave his life, asleep under the mantle of everlasting remembrance.

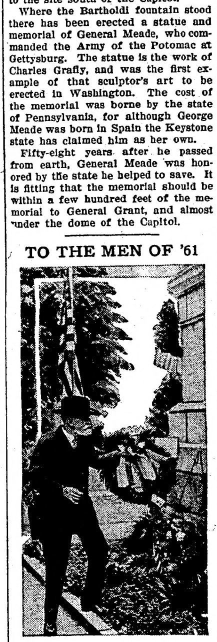
Proper Recognition of Meade's Great Services

Five years after the death of Gen. George Gordon Meade there was erected in the Botanical garden at Washington a memorial fountain designed by the eminent French sculptor, Bartholdi. Fifty years later the fountain was taken down to be stored until the new Botanical garden shall be transformed to the site south of the Capitol.

Where the Bartholdi fountain stood there has been erected a statue and memorial of General Meade, who commanded the Army of the Potomac at Gettysburg. The statue is the work of Charles Grafly, and was the first example of that sculptor's art to be erected in Washington. The cost of the memorial was borne by the state of Pennsylvania, for although George Meade was born in Spain the Keystone state has claimed him as her own.

Fifty-eight years after he passed from earth, General Meade was honored by the state he helped to save. It is fitting that the memorial should be within a few hundred feet of the memorial to General Grant, and almost under the dome of the Capitol.

TO THE MEN OF '61



Commander B. W. Boney of the G. A. R. placing a wreath on the tomb of the Civil war unknown dead during memorial day ceremonies at Arlington cemetery.

Loose Flowers Chosen for Graves of Heroes

Clusters of loose bloosoms strewn over the graves, and artistic sprays and bouquets supplant the old set pieces of harps and flags of former years at Arlington national cemetery on Memorial day.

Florists say the public taste in floral tributes is changing. Now beautiful Arlington is blanketed on Memorial day with snowy peonies and glowing roses and gladioli. The flowers rest softly, carelessly on the graves of those of high or low rank.

One leading Washington florist annually raises 40,000 peonies for use May 30. Most of them go to the great national cemetery on the Potomac. Nowhere in the country are so many men of renown at rest.

Private and official automobiles laden with floral tributes fill the road leading to the majestic city of the dead. Airplanes move above the beautiful tree-covered slopes.

The most imposing tributes are at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Yet even here sprays and loose bouquets of flowers are supplanting the set pieces which often were placed on the tomb a few years ago.

Nobody knows who leaves most of the Memorial day flowers at Arlington or why they are left on certain graves more than others. There is a well-worn path leading to the hilltop where Admiral Peary and Floyd Bennett rest. Their resting places always are masses of flowers on May 30.

APPRECIATION

The veterans' march is never done,
And if the footsteps lag,
Honor the men of '61
Who still uphold the flag.
Not many now to watch and ward,
And those few are bereft
Of comrades of the old-time guard—
Only a remnant left.

As autumn leaves, no longer green
And shaken by the breeze
A moment, falling, drift between
The grasses and the trees,
So those who marched off in their prime
To fight the war they won
Are drifting on the winds of time . . .
The men of '61.

Prayers at All Graves in French Cemeteries

Americans have a solemn duty in striving "to find a way whereby nations may settle their differences other than by force," Gen. John J. Pershing said last year in a moving tribute to the war dead at Memorial day services at the Belleau Wood cemetery.

On Memorial day nearly every American in Paris attended one of the many services held at the various churches.

The graves of all American soldiers who died in the World war were decorated and a prayer said over them by their late comrades in arms or grateful compatriots.

Whether lying in thousands grouped in the magnificently kept cemeteries at Belleau Wood, Romagne, Fere-en-Tardenois, Thiaucourt, Bony and Suresnes, or sleeping where they fell along the slopes of war-torn hills, deep ravines or thick forests, all were remembered.

Ten major ceremonies marked the day.

Arranged under the auspices of the American Memorial Day association, founded in 1920 for the decoration of American soldiers' graves abroad, care was taken that upon every "scattered grave" there rested a bouquet of Flanders poppies.

Dean Frederick W. Beekman of the American Church of the Holy Trinity, chairman of the association, and Col. T. Bentley Mott of the American embassy staff, honorary chairman of the American Graves Decoration committee, with the assistance of the American Legion, the American Graves Registration Services and the initiative of private American citizens residing in France, had perfected arrangements and the day was celebrated with religious and military pomp.

Commander Stephen S. Szlapka of the Paris Post No. 1 of the Legion was in charge of the ceremonies at Suresnes, at which Norman Armour, the American charge d'affaires, presided. A large number of French and American dignitaries were present.

General Pershing, Julian M. Thomas and some American legionnaires journeyed to Belleau Wood and decorated the graves of American soldiers who fell during the Aisne-Marne drive.

THE HERO DEAD

This tiny bugler sounds taps over the graves of men who sacrificed their lives for the sake of democracy and the preservation of their country.

Tribute to British Soldiers

British war veterans last year unveiled in Northwood cemetery at Philadelphia a large granite cross of sacrifice in memory of soldiers of Great Britain who are buried in the cemetery. There was a parade of British-American war veterans and other organizations. Sir Esme Howard, British ambassador to the United States, was the principal speaker. The shaft, 22 feet high, is similar to 1,050 others erected to the memory of British service men in all parts of the world.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter.

She felt her horizon widening. What a world men lived in! Papa had his quarries, and Will his curlicues, and Loring his law! How wonderful to live in something, and for it! She felt that her own life was dim and futile. Now that she was out of school, she was expected to have a good time until she married. Will was the only man she knew outside the old familiar circle. How dull her interests were compared to his thrill over a twenty-five-dollar-a-week job.

"But, Will,"—she turned to him in such a manner that it seemed their faces would touch, drawn by the strong attraction that brought them so close—"I thought you were going to be a real artist."

"Ho," he said, "that's why I couldn't stand the Art Institute! I want to be a cartoonist. I've discovered that you can do a whole lot more with a pencil line than make a petunia. I think you can make a line stand up and howl. You can make it do all sorts of things for you, caricature, design—nonsense. I don't want to be a color artist."

"But the birds you made for me, when you were only ten—the colors, and the way their heads bent—it's a beautiful book, Will. I showed it to my zoology teacher when I was in school, at Lake Forest, and he praised it. I wouldn't take anything for it."

Will brushed the birds aside impatiently.

"Kid stuff," he told her. "Have you seen these little shadow figures, just straight lines for body and limbs? You can get action into one of those things. Look here," He had been busy with a soft pencil on the edge of the stiff menu card, and he showed Ernestine now a sketch of a cat, sitting there looking at the fish list, licking his whiskers—a predatory hungry Tom. She laughed involuntarily, and her eyes filled with admiration.

"I see what you mean," she said. "It's a new kind of art, like jazz is a new kind of music. I know what you're trying to get at, and you do it, too. It's disrespectful though—don't you think?"

He was entranced with her understanding.

"Of course it's disrespectful," he said robustly. "Why not? I think the time has come for a little healthy disrespect. We'll show them."

He was very compelling. Ernestine's look of admiration was extravagant, and he was becoming a little drunk with it.

"I've done several column heads. You watch the first page of the second half of the Sun. I always put a little cat's head down in one corner of my stuff. We're not allowed to sign our things, but you can identify mine if you watch the paper. The fellows all encourage me, and my boss does, too."

He looked at her for a long moment and then exclaimed:

"Gosh, it's good to talk to you, Ernestine. You always did get right inside of my heart. I wasn't a bit surprised to see you. You may not believe me but all these years I've often thought I'd meet you. I never forgot that day you came to our house. I've often seen your shadow, sitting there in the kitchen eating bread and milk, and talking to mom. I remember I wanted to give you all my things—every one. You should have taken them. It would have made a lonely kid happy."

She was tender, remembering.

"I made an awful fuss because they dragged me to the lake that summer," she told him. "I wanted to stay in Chicago with you, and the practical difficulties of leaving a child behind did not interest me. We should have been together more. We were real friends."

"A boy never forgets kindness," he said soberly. "You were so good to me and always took my part."

"But, Will, you did something you never knew, for me. You told me one day a thing I've never forgotten. I thought your brace gave you a wonderful advantage, in the way of a lever to get your own will, and you scorned me for such a thought. It would be taking advantage, you said. I've never forgotten that. You were the one who taught me to be sporting."

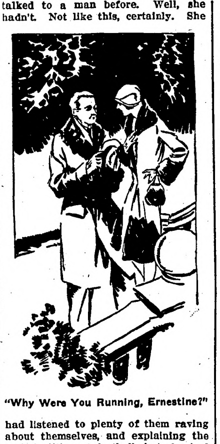
The spell was cast. The mysterious bonds of spiritual understanding were forged.

"You're awf'ly pretty, Ernestine. You were a cute kid—but fat. I can remember what round cheeks you had. But now your cheeks slope down in that perfect line." He touched the line of her cheek with a tentative forefinger, then quickly withdrew his hand and flushed. "Dark eyes, dark hair and pale clear skin. What more could a girl want, unless it is such perfect bony structure? You'd be pretty anyway, dark or thin, or pale or flushed, because it's real—deep. Now you're blushing—and that gray coat." He laughed delightedly, and the deep color suffused Ernestine's cheeks at his personalities. But she was not displeased, only smiled at him.

"Aren't you glad we knew each other when we were kids?" he said to her. "It makes us seem so much closer now."

They swayed together and fell into a warm hypnotic silence. His little finger brushed her hand, as he knocked his ashes into the tray the waitress had placed for him, and at once they rose, talking and laughing artificially.

Ernestine felt the need to masquerade her bright joy in him. She was acting like a moon-struck high school girl, acting as though she had never talked to a man before. Well, she hadn't. Not like this, certainly. She had listened to plenty of them raving about themselves, and explaining the technicalities of football, but she had never taken part in such a satisfying conversation. But she dissembled as they left the tearoom and turned toward the newspaper plant.



"Why Were You Running, Ernestine?"

It was dark now, and the streets were crowded with homegoing workers, so they instinctively drew close together. She asked after his mother in a formal tone.

"She'll never be well," he told her sorrowfully, and at once her sympathy drew them back into intimacy. He tried to put the conversation back into place.

"How's your pretty sister Lillian?"

She answered that Lillian was a beauty now, fair and slender and exquisite. A lady.

"She's going to marry Loring Hamilton, I guess," she said. "He's at the house a lot, as he's always been. He's awfully good to both of us, but Lillian's his choice. He's in his father's law office now. He inherited a nice practice. I believe he wants to be a judge. Don't you remember him?"

"A big blond boy? He was almost grown when we were kids. Yes, I remember him. He treated me with an air of weary patience. I hated him. He used to tease you and pull your hair. If he prefers Lillian, he's changed, for he always noticed you. I admit I was simply jealous. He had the run of the house, and I was an outsider and treated well only because I was a kid."

"Why, Will, that's not a bit nice of you to say," she protested, and he laughed good-naturedly. Both of them knew it was true.

"Is your mother just the same? She had such a pleasant voice, but she was bossy. Kind of a queen. I admired her tremendously. She fitted entirely my juvenile notions of a grand lady."

Ernestine laughed now.

"There's nobody like mamma for managing every one," she admitted.

They came to the Sun offices, and as they went in through the squirrel cage, the rhythmic crash of great presses came muffled to Ernestine's ears. Will took her over the whole place.

"Upstairs and downstairs, and in my lady's chamber," he said.

In the syndicate rooms he introduced her to half a dozen young men who were much impressed with her youth and beauty. He showed her the stool he sat on, the work on his board.

Mr. Poole came out and shook hands with her, and she was conscious of disappointment. He was a huge, untidy old man, with fat cheeks that had fallen a little, and a shiny bald head. But his eyes were intelligent, his voice was very kind. She felt that she might like him, if she could only know him.

Will's vanity seemed excessive. Although she knew he was proud to show her, he was none the less proud of himself. But it was like the vanity of a capable child, not at all displeasing. Not until they got into the street again did Ernestine realize that they had walked all over the big plant with their fingers interlaced. But she clung to him now shamelessly. He was such an old friend. She was filled with strong reluctance that this vivid hour should end.

He said goodby at the bus, without mentioning another meeting. Ernestine could not let it go at that.

"But you must come to see me," she said, as the conductor waited impatiently for her to board the bus. "I want to see you again, Will."

"Sure," he said vaguely. His mind had already gone back to work. "Sure. Call me up some day."

Ernestine went quickly along. Her feet were dancing, and her heart was dancing, too. She was extraordinarily happy and full of life. If only such an encounter could be a daily occurrence!

Some one was standing on their doorstep, watching her, waiting for her. She ran up the steps, and Loring Hamilton was there, big and fair and handsome, in his dark coat, with the fur collar.

"Hello, Lorrie. Have to rush in. I'm late. Are you just leaving?"

He looked down at her, the light from the drawing room window streaming on to his face, and Ernestine paused, surprised. She was filled with an inward dismay for she had never seen him like this. His face, usually complacent, was keen now, his blue eyes were brilliant sparks, his whole countenance quickened and fired. His voice, when he spoke again, had a barely perceptible quaver.

"Why were you running, Ernestine? You're still a kid half the time. When I heard you running, I knew it was you, because my heart began to run, too."

"Nonsense," said Ernestine briskly, but he was persistent.

"I was just going away, disappointed that I hadn't seen you, and here I have you alone for a moment at last. I've been wanting to tell you how beautiful you are, since you're grown. Where have you been? Your face is shining. I could see it luminous in the dark street. Ernestine—don't be silly. I'm trying to tell you I care for you—I—"

She pulled away from him with determination.

"You're the silly one," she said impatiently. "And dumb, as well." She passed him quickly, and closed the door behind her, shutting out his handsome, desirous face.

In her room, dressing for dinner, she was furious with him for intruding on the enchantment of her hour with Will. Didn't he know that he had made himself conspicuous, all last year, with his attentions to Lillian? He was not her lover. What was the matter with him?

Lillian came in from her room, which adjoined Ernestine's, and the younger sister looked at the elder one with old but ever-fresh admiration.

"Loring was kidding me," she told herself. "Of course he's crazy about Lillian."

Writer Has Long List of Rail Superstitions

Black cats are eyed with horror by railroad men, but dogs are considered lucky. Cross-eyed people avoid approaching American engine cabs because they are evil omens liable to be driven away with well-aimed lumps of coal.

Their proper function is to sit on the first seat of the rear coach, thereby conferring one day's luck on the conductor. As a matter of fact, while the engine driver is giving his steed a final inspection all adults who stare at him are considered unlucky unless they are accompanied by children.

Accidents on United States lines are believed to occur in triplets. An engineer who reports one is gloomy and despondent until he has worked off the spell by reporting two more.

Neither will any engineer who has not lost all interest in life cheerfully write "13 cars" on his report; he prefers to report "13 cars and an engine." The brakeman supports the driver in his observance of superstitious rites by never carrying his lamp above his waist. To do so is considered fatal.

But the strangest of all tales of railway superstition is the story of the engine on the New York, New Haven and Hartford line. On the thirteenth of every month, no matter who he may be, the driver of that engine reports sick. The number of the engine is O-13.—London Mail.

Date Set for Sessions

The Constitution provided that the congress should assemble March 4, 1789, and thereafter convene "in every year" on the first Monday in December unless it shall by law appoint a different day. Up to and including May 20, 1820, 18 acts were passed naming dates other than December. Since then, with few exceptions, congress has convened in December.

Emeralds Long Prized

Emeralds have always been found in Africa, and there were Egyptian mines many centuries before the Christian era. Asia, North America and Australia also produce the gems in small quantities. But the principal source is still the South American continent, Colombia and Peru being the centers of supply. The mines of Muzo and Coscuez in Colombia, discovered about 1550, supply the world with the greatest quantity, and finest quality, of emeralds.—World Traveler.

Acrostics Old

An acrostic is a short stanza so constructed that the initial letters of the lines, taken consecutively, form words. Such verse is of great antiquity, having been common in ancient Greece and Rome.

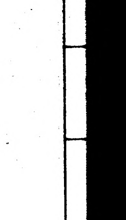
In condemning the vanity of women, men complain of the fire they themselves have kindled.—Lingree.



Would you like to try this doctor's laxative free of charge?

Every family has occasional need of a laxative, but it should be a family laxative. One that can't form a habit, but can be taken as often as needed. When breath is bad or tongue coated. Or appetite fails. Only a doctor knows the right ingredients. Dr. Caldwell discovered the correct combination years ago. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin combines harmless herbs and pure senna. It starts muscular action and soon corrects constipation. Gently, but surely, it relieves a bilious or sluggish condition. It is mild. Delicious. Effective. All druggists keep this famous prescription ready, in big bottles. Or write Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, Monticello, Ill., for a free trial bottle postpaid.

Brazilian City's Elevator

Bahia, in northern Brazil, has an elevator tower containing two elevators to bring people from the plateau to the level of the bay. The city is built on two levels, and each elevator has a capacity of 27 passengers and speed of 700 feet a minute, which means that nearly 4,000 passengers an hour can be carried the distance of 195 feet which separates the two parts of the city.

Social Stimulus Needed

The highest ideal a man might visualize could only be put into effect in a personal environment, and the finest powers of his mind remain unrealized apart from a social stimulus.—Exchange.

Only one boy and girl out of four attends high school in rural districts, whereas 71 per cent of city children continue education there.

Memorial Day

Another year has rolled along
'Tween now and those campaigns
Of which we write in word and song
The thought that still remains

We tell the stories o'er and o'er
Of valor on the field,
Of each and every man of war
Who fought for his ideal.

They lived and died so you and we Could carry out the Plan
To mold from Life's complexity
A stronger, finer Man.

A tribute then, to those who've done.
And gone upon their way.
To let them know their fight's been won,
On next Memorial Day.

Proposed additions including Elm Lake and Green Stump Lake on the south and a series of pot holes extending about five miles north of Mud Lake were included in the survey of the original project, andthe two officials also investigated the area around Thief Lake which the state is converting into a bird sanctuary.

Mr. Hedderson and Mr. Diffenbach will make their report to Paul Reddington, head of the department of biological survey and as a result, the local men hope that further action will be taken by the government this summer.

BRAGGANS
for
COUNTY ATTORNEY

To the Voters:

In asking for your influence and vote at the elections this year, I submit the following for your consideration: As a result of court proceedings there has been collected from closed banks and bondsmen $61,001,97, since I became county attorney. During the years 1927, 1928 and 1929 as a result of court proceedings delinquent real estate taxes amounting to $12,657.47, delinquent personal property taxes amounting to $6,979. 55, and fines and costs in criminal cases amounting to $8,699.59 have all been turned into the county treasury. Thus far in 1930 $6,423.90 has been turned in. The total is $95,762 49. These figures tell their own story. Regardless of whether you think Iam a good fellow, or whether you like or dislike me, you want a man as county attorney who will work for you as he would work for himself. My time is and has been spent in your interest. Those of you who come to my office usually find me working. There is much work left to be done. and if nominated and elected I shall continue working for your interests. Our financial condition must not for one moment be neglected. For the past two years I have been laying the foundation for a reduction of taxes, and if I continue as your county attorney, I hope to see that foundation bring results. It is going to require the best thought and best endeavers possible to handle our financial matters and at the same time get a reduction in our county tax, but it can be done if I receive the co-operation of the people of the county.

Respectfully submitted,
W. O. Braggans.

Arrangements have been made with the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads for a reduced rate of one fare for the round trip to the Junior Short Course to be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, June 9-12. Tickets are to be on sale June 9th and 10th. The final return limit is June 14.

When buying tickets, boys and girls who will come on the Great Northern or Northern Pacific Railroads should be sure to mention that they will attend the Short Course at the Nothwest School Crookston. They should also ask for the rate of one fare for the round trip.

Judging from advance room reservations and requests for information a large crowd should be in attendance during the Short Course.

An attractive program of education, entertaiment, and recreation has been arranged by H. A Pflughoeft, district 4H club leader, who is in charge of the Short Course. In addition to lectures and demonstrations in cooking, sewing, gardening, live stock, and club work; there will be games of all sorts, stunts, movies, excursions, parties and community singing. Members of the Northwest School Staff, boys' and girls' club leaders, county agents and others will be in charge of the program.

The Course is open to any boy or girl in Northwestern Minnesota between the ages of 12 and 20 years. Teachers and club leaders may also attend.

Those who plan to come should reach Crookston, Monday afternoon, June 9 or Tuesday morning, June 10. The school bus will meet all trains Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning. Bedding such as sheets, blankets, pillows as well as soap, and towels should be brought in addition to necessary change of clothing for the four day encampment. Those having musical instruments should bring these along and contribute to the annual stunt night. Tennis shoes and bathing suits should also be taken.

The total expense for the course is $3, which includes board room and entertainment.

For additional information pertaining to reduced rate offered by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads those who plan to come should see their station agent. For room reservation and further information pertaining to the Short Course write to the Northwest School, Crookston, Minnesota.

On behalf of the members of the Nazareth Lutheran Church Council, I wish to express our thanks to all those who came and assisted with the work at the Lutheran Church last Friday

The dance which was to be held here Saturday nighh turned out to be a lemon. A good sized crowd came to town to take in the dance but for some reason remained outside the hall. County Play Day Tomorrow

Marshall county's rural school play day will take place in Warren on Saturday June 7, according to an announcement made by Nels M. Engen, county superintendent of schools.

The dates for the play day had been originially set for May 17, but because of unfavorable weather conditions at that time the annual event was posponed.

Play day events will begin at 10:30 Saturday morning when a series of informal and social games will be held. The afternoon sessions will be devoted to classified games and contests. Cash prizes will be given to winners by the Warren Commercial club.

The State Highway Department has this week removed the steel culvert at the end of main street, near the creamery. It was hard to keep this culvert covered with gravel because it was in a turn. The State Highway Department pulled it out and filled the ditch with gravel and we believe a solid turn will be safer than an exposed culvert

Keeping Out The Weeds.

THE careful farmer cultivates his crops regularly and keeps out the weeds which would rob the growing plants of their nourishment.

The prudent man of affairs saves his money regularly, depositing a certain sum in his savings account.

Why regularly? Because the habit makes it easier for him to keep his surplus beyond the reach of the daily temptation for easy and wastefull spending. Those little temptations, like weeds, tend to destroy success.

Modern business and manufacturing methods are carried on with an efficiency our grandfathers would never have dreamed possible.

Death Record of Motor Cars Grows

Unprecedented Increase in Fatalities Reported by Safety Council.

Chicago.—An unprecedented increase in motor vehicle fatalities overbalanced decreases in all other walks of life last year and America's accidental death toll rose to a new high total of 97,000. The private automobile driver is responsible for most of this increase and he must be curbed before definite reduction can be realized in the national accident picture.

The 1929 total for all accidents has just been made public by the National Safety council on completion of its accident analysis for the past year. The accident fatalities for 1928 were 95,086.

While total fatalities were increasing slightly less than 2,000, automobile casualties alone reached 31,000, an increase of 3,000 over the previous year. These figures tend to show that motor vehicle fatalities alone are on the increase and that other types of accidental deaths are on the gradual decline.

Children Suffer Most.

Accidents to children are increasing far less rapidly than to older persons. In the seven year period from 1922 to 1928 fatalities to persons of all ages increased almost 25 per cent. In the same period accidental deaths of children under 15 increased less than one-tenth of one per cent. If accident prevention work among adults had been as successful as among children, approximately 20,000 lives would have been saved during the past year.

There was very little change in the railroad-automobile fatalities during 1929 and there was an improvement in the accident situation among commercial vehicle drivers. A large part of the increase therefore can be charged directly to careless owners of private automobiles.

The 97,000 death toll for 1929 included 28,000 fatalities in or about American homes; 23,000 fatal accidents in industry; and still another 20,000 persons who lost their lives in public accidents not involving the motor vehicle.

The principal cause of home accidents was falls, 9,200 persons losing their lives in this manner. Burns, scalds and explosions accounted for the next largest number of home fatalities. Asphyxiation and suffocation were the third most important causes. Carbon monoxide poisoning in closed garages was an important contributing factor. About 200 nonfatal accidents occurred in American homes for every fatal accident, it is estimated.

Where Blame Lies.

In addition to the annual study of accident statistics of the United States for the past year the National Safety council conducted an interesting survey during recent weeks. Inquiries were sent to all governors, the mayor of every large city and numerous other officials and civic leaders asking their opinions as to the reason for increases, or decreases in last year's experience, and personal studies were made in twelve leading cities. This survey brings out some interesting facts:

The states which have strong drivers' licenses continue to make better records, in relation to their own past experience, than the non-licensed states.

Speed is a major consideration in the opinion of quite a number of the state and city officials and other experts. Intoxication is partly responsible for the "obsession to speed" according to the reports. Inadequate enforcement is blamed by many authorities.

There is one hopeful sign brought out in the analysis of the accident experience for 1929. If we could ignore the annual toll from motor vehicle accidents, our national experience would show that the national death rate from all other accidents has been reduced more than 30 per cent since 1913.

Rare Disease Kills Woman in Toronto

Toronto, Ontario.—A rare disease, of which only 52 cases have been reported throughout the world since 1922, has claimed the life of a Toronto woman who died after an illness of three days.

Similar to "trench mouth," which afflicted many soldiers in the World war, the disease known as "noma," was discovered in a woman who called upon a surgeon for treatment for a throat affliction. The surgeon sent her to a hospital where an operation failed to check the disease.

U. S. WILL NEED 979,000 NEW HOMES DURING THIS YEAR

Leaders Predict Building Activity, Curbed by Bull Market, Will Restore Prosperity.

New York.—The present year will see a demand for home building throughout the United States which will play a leading part in bringing the nation back to a high and stable level of prosperity, in the opinion of a group of outstanding industrial leaders and economists whose statements appear in the Review of Reviews.

One manufacturer, Clarence M. Woolley, president of the American Radiator and Standard Sanitary corporation, estimates that there will be a demand for 979,000 new homes during the year.

Banking conditions favor the builder, both the individual who plans a home and the professional builder, at this time as they have never done before of recent years, Merryle S. Rukeyser, the economics writer, points out in the article.

The tremendous flow of money into stock market speculation during 1928 and 1929 was a serious deterrent to building since it both raised interest rates to abnormally high levels and engaged much money that otherwise would have gone into building, he shows. The subsequent easing of interest rates which has followed the market depression has removed perhaps the most formidable barrier to building activities.

On the Pacific coast, George I. Cochran, president of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance company, says: "I think there is a reasonable basis for an increase in the building industry during the year. It ought to reach normal."

Victor A. Lersner, president of the Bowery Savings bank, New York, one of the heaviest lenders of funds for home building, believes: "It would appear that building will have some advance within the reasonably near future, due to the belief that in most sections of the metropolitan area demand and supply have very closely crossed each other."

Mr. Roberts, head of a company whose mortgage activities are nationwide, contributes this analysis to the Review of Reviews symposium:

"We feel there is a sound economic basis for a revival in construction this year. Chief among the reasons for this is the fact that building operations have been on the decline since the peak year of 1925, and surpluses which had been created for certain types of structures in certain localities are steadily being absorbed. With the added stimulus of cheap money which should enable at least the major part of the public works and public utility program reported to President Hoover to be carried through, and with underlying conditions in business remaining fundamentally healthy, we believe the outlook is favorable. We would not be surprised if 1930 ends up ahead of 1929."

With the New Science of Syllabics

Dean of All the Enumerators

Ruth

Ruth is the latter part of the word Truth, after we take off the first T. If we may pun a bit, truly Ruth was true to her ideals. And you generally are, aren't you, Ruth?

Ruth's Gentle Hands.

To take your last syllable first, or the latter part of your name, rather, the Hebrew word, UTH, in ancient days, meant to speak in season. If you will read the Bible story you will see that she did, and that most effectively.

The gentle hands of Ruth are capable both of labor and caress.

The fore part of your name, Ru, had the general meaning of a thought voiced "with the breath." We would say that it represented the words that "come from the heart."

One of your dangers is that you will make use of the first three letters of your name only, RUT, and get into the rut of being the slavey for the household. It is all right for you to be kind and gracious, for you are happiest when doing so, but learn the great lesson of letting others serve you once in a while.

One of the great laws of life for you to learn is, "we love most those for whom we do most, and they love most those for whom they do most." Therefore, learn to accept graciously, and attract more to yourself thereby.

Taking the letters of your name separately, the R would signify both Resourcefulness and Righteousness; the U stands for the Unknown, the mystery of your gentle heart and willing hands; the T shows us your Tidiness, for which surely you are well known by now.

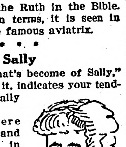
Your last letter, H, can produce in you the Haughtiness that you must exert when temptation shows its ugly head in your presence.

Your fearlessness may be exemplified in the life of the Ruth in the Bible. In more modern terms, it is seen in Ruth Elder, the famous aviatrix.

* * *

Sally

"I wonder what's become of Sally," as the song has it, indicates your tendency to be "Sally in a corner."



Aunt Sally.

Always there when wanted, and almost never in the way, you are the salt of the earth, the consoler of the race.

The dictionary says that Sally means to issue, to leap, to rush out suddenly. It indicates a sudden overflow of spirits, but it suggests that that overflow will start from the corner, from the inconspicuous place.

Your smile is almost fairylike, with its funny little combination of sauciness and timidity. Children just love you, as do most of us grown folks. If it's buttons to sew on, toys to fix, or any one of a thousand other small but necessary duties, you're it, Sally.

But I don't mean that you can't do things in a big way. We have Sallys who have made definite careers for themselves.

Of course, Aunt Sally as seen here, may not be you at all, yet.

One of the ancient meanings of the equivalent of your name was to forgive or pardon, and I know you will forgive me, Sally, if I just don't want you for a career.

Maybe I can sort of appropriate you for my sister, Sally, now, and then later on have you for my Aunt Sally. Anyway you do fit all of those things, even if you go on and make a career and blast all my hopes.

You haven't asked me to marry you yet, but I think you would be just the girl who could do that, or for some splendid, timid man, made fearful by your wise and practical nature.

Anyway, you can go on dictating to us about our food and clothes, our cuts and bruises, and we will behave.

Not All Peoples Wore Gloves

The early custom of wearing gloves is mostly confined to Continental Europe. In China the long-sleeved robes made gloves unnecessary and so they were unknown, but in Japan hunters and archers found them most convenient. Among the American Indians only the Eskimos are known to have worn gloves. They have not been found among the African tribes. In fact, gloves are not traceable to the tropics.

AUNT IS ACCUSED OF LOVE PIRACY

Sister vs. Sister Suit Filed on Story of Boy.

New York.—Sister vs. sister, one accusing the other of love piracy, formed the background of a divorce suit filed against Edward Ruth, Jr., wealthy Long Island and Westchester real estate man.

The woman alleged to have flouted the bounds of sisterly ethics is Mrs. Stanley Rysavay, wife of an electrician. She was a central figure, swore Mrs. Ruth's son, Edward III, in a rather surprising domestic scene.

Edward told how he and detectives visited a certain house in Mamaroneck. There, he said, he found not merely his father and Mrs. Rysavay, but also his grandfather, Edward Ruth, Sr., and his fourteen-year-old cousin, Ruth Rysavay.

Father, said the son, evinced no hostility, whatever, when informed of the "surprise party."

The love affair between her husband and her sister began in 1917, the wife charges.

Mrs. Ruth, telling of her marriage in 1904, when her husband was not so wealthy, said he is now worth $250,000. He has showered riches on her sister, says the wife, including homes in Port Washington and Southampton, and charge accounts in department stores.

Mrs. Ruth asked alimony. This Justice Fawcett, Brooklyn, granted her temporarily in the sum of $75 weekly. Counsel fees of $3,500 were allowed.

Convict Can't Dress Himself When Freed

Ossining, N. Y.—They turned Frank Singer out of Sing Sing recently but the poor fellow lost an hour of his new freedom because he couldn't put on the civilian suit they gave him. It'd been twenty years since he had on a decent pair of pants, and so unfamiliar to him was the construction of the freeman's collar that he had to get a warden to help him put it on.

In point of service he was the oldest prisoner in Sing Sing. Except for Emil Totterman, who was freed a few weeks ago after serving twenty-eight years for murder, Singer, a former bandit, had served longer than any man discharged from Sing Sing in ten years.

"The attendants had to help him get on his collar, adjust the collar buttons and the necktie, as well as other things he was unaccustomed to," explained Warden Lewis E. Lawes. "You see he had not had on civilian clothes since he came here over twenty years ago."

When Singer was freed he said:

"I've been in here a mighty long time. I'm glad to be free again. I'm through with wild life. Now for real life."

He was committed to prison by Judge Mulqueen in Manhattan with a thirty-nine year sentence for robbery December 16, 1909. He reduced this term by good work and good conduct.

St. Louis Police Seek Man, Find Him in Jail

St. Louis, Mo.—Police here sought high and low for Elmer Sutton, 26, when his wife and mother became alarmed at his failure to return home one night. Authorities continued the search for ten days without success. Sutton was recently found in the city jail where he had been for the entire period, charged with carrying concealed weapons.

Wind Takes Money From Wife; Gives It to Hubby

Anaconda, Mont.—An ill wind that whisked $24 from Mrs. McCallum's opened purse the other day relented a few minutes later and blew $20 of the currency into the hands of her husband, who happened to be down the street. Mr. McCallum noticed the bills lodged against a street drain.

Man, 80, Sentenced

Virginia City, Mont.—An errant impulse that impelled him to set fire to the county poor farm has sent an eighty-year-old man to the state penitentiary where, if he lives that long, he must remain for two and one-half years. He is James Daly, who admitted he touched a match to the institution in a fit of anger.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. They lunch together and recall their school days.

Lillian was ash blond, and very lovely. Her eyes were a kind of deep violet, serene calm eyes, and her lips were thin and bright red, beautifully cut. Her nose was patrician, her skin a clear milky white, and she wore just enough rouge to give her a faint rose color and make her eyes more lovely. The two girls plunged at once into the conversation of sisters, without beginning or end.

"I've been to the matinee with Sadie and Juel. Sadie's seen Delancey's show ten times. She's as crazy as she can be. Imagine falling in love with an actor. She's written him letters and letters. But he won't see her."

"She is kind of old for that line," said Ernestine, perched on the edge of her bed, a silk stocking in her hands. "I saw Will Todd today."

"Will Todd? Who is he?"

Ernestine reminded her, and Lillian admitted that she remembered.

"He's charming," Ernestine said. "I thought I'd ask mamma to invite him here for tea some afternoon, or for dinner, some night when he doesn't work."

Lillian stared, then laughed. "If you want to see him again, if you want an affair with him, don't tell mamma," she advised Ernestine, "or that will be the end of it. A little lame boy about the house one summer is quite a different matter from an attractive grown man. Mamma will make him miserable."

Ernestine considered this. "I don't see why," she said stubbornly.

"Certainly you see, darling," said Lillian. "We are not to have any irregular affairs now. We are to marry."

"Well," said Ernestine, "what of it? You can't marry unless you're asked. I can be friends with Will without marrying him, can't I?"

"I doubt it," said Lillian calmly. "You always go to such extremes, Ernestine. You are always blundering around, taking such awful chances and making wild friends. You've been spoiled and have had your way about lots of things. But this is one thing you can't have."

Ernestine pooh-poohed Lillian, but felt at the same time that she would say nothing about Will just now.

"Beth's going to be married. She's going to marry Johnnie Allison."

"I'm not surprised, are you?" asked Ernestine, thinking of Will's gestures—the way he moved his hands continually.

"No, I'm not surprised. It's just what she wanted. One ought to know what one wants. I do. We talked about it today."

"I can tell you what you want without talking to you about it," said Ernestine with sisterly decision. "You want a house in Hubbard Woods, or else one of those big co-operatively owned apartments on the drive, near downtown. And you want a limosine, and a rich handsome husband. You've got it all planned out."

"In detail," agreed Lillian, unperturbed. "Pretty much as you named it. I want Loring, for myself—"

"Why don't you ask him?" exploded Ernestine, her feelings a confusion of resentment that Lillian had showed her the fallacy of her own dream, of hurt for her sister, that Loring should have been such a fool, of scorn for these plotters.

"I probably won't need to," Lillian answered, and went on, before Ernestine could interrupt her again: "If not Loring, then somebody much like him. I merely mentioned him as an example. After I've been married a few years, I want a son, and if I get along nicely, I wouldn't mind a daughter. I want everything right. A man who is already a member of good clubs, so that the money he makes will take us in the right direction, and we won't have to stand and wait. All right, go on and hoot. I know what I want, anyhow, and that's more than you know." She looked at Ernestine with some severity, and added darkly: "What's more, I'll get it. Watch me."

Ernestine could see Lillian as she had planned it all out. A correct house, a correct husband, perhaps even a correct baby or two. The same old business over and over, with correct people coming and going and Loring stalking handsomely about.

Not for her. She knew what she wanted. She wanted love! She wanted something not mentioned on Lillian's list. She wanted passionate, romantic love. She wanted adventure, an inevitable great adventure.

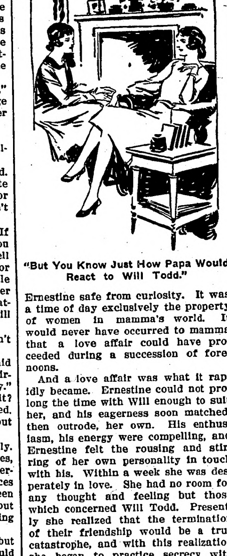
Suddenly she stood trembling, her heart beating with great strong strokes. She was terrified with the intensity of her feeling, with the vivid, almost material picture of Will Todd's violent personality before her. One person, one in all the world, and never anybody else. She wanted love, and all her wakening instincts warned her that she had found it.

CHAPTER II

The Lady Promises

Again and again Ernestine resolved to tell mamma all about Will, but again and again her confidences faltered before mamma's bright energy, before mamma's staccato bossiness. It was really her first secret from her family, and she did not feel right about it. Of course she was old enough to have a friend if she wanted one, a friend of her own choosing, but Lillian's attitude that she was having an "affair," a romance on the side, purely for the thrill of it, dismayed her. Yet she couldn't tell mamma, and an incident occurred which sealed her silence.

She had called Will on the telephone the next morning after her encounter with him on the street, and that had been the beginning of an absorbing intimacy. He worked in the afternoon and at night six days a week. He had nothing better to do with his forenoons and his luncheon hour than share them with Ernestine. But the very time of these engagements made Ernestine safe from curiosity. It was a time of day exclusively the property of women in mamma's world. It would never have occurred to mamma that a love affair could have proceeded during a succession of forenoons.



"But You Know Just How Papa Would React to Will Todd."

And a love affair was what it rapidly became. Ernestine could not prolong the time with Will enough to suit her, and his eagerness soon matched, then outrode, her own. His enthusiasm, his energy were compelling, and Ernestine felt the rousing and stirring of her own personality in touch with his. Within a week she was desperately in love. She had no room for any thought and feeling but those which concerned Will Todd. Presently she realized that the termination of their friendship would be a true catastrophe, and with this realization she began to practice secrecy with skill and determination.

One blowy, gusty Sunday morning in December she had escaped church and met him and talked, hand in hand, as they always talked, quickly, starvedly.

Eventually a little silence fell between them, and in its magic, without speaking a word, they turned and kissed each other, and smiled a little dimly and leaned together. The touch of lips, and then the pressure of cheek to cheek was magic. His arms slipped about her, and for a long, long time they sat in a swing of joy.

There was no word spoken, no promise, but Ernestine knew now that she must tell mamma. The family was home from church when she reached the house, sitting in the big living room, all of them engrossed in gossip. Mamma looked at Ernestine sharply.

"Why didn't you come to church?"

"I went for a walk," evaded Ernestine, and her face flamed with color, for they all looked at her, and she felt that Will's love-making was visible upon her. Mamma said no more, however, and Lillian turned to her with the news.

"You remember I told you Sadie Hall was in love with the actor, Lon Delancey?" Ernestine nodded, and Lillian said with some satisfaction, "Well, she finally succeeded in meeting him, and they were married last night. Every one was talking about it in church this morning."

"Well, what of it?" said Ernestine. "She can marry him, can't she?"

"Ernestine!" said her father sternly. "You know it isn't suitable." He was a big man, a little too stout, with a handsome florid face. His brown eyes were warm and kind, but his big nose was acquisitive, his mouth stern and hard, a man of brilliant mind, but limited by prejudices.

"It is her money he wants," said papa, "and nothing else. The girl's a fool, and was not brought up properly, or she would never have done such a thing."

Loring put in his oar. He was always there on Sundays, thought Ernestine, who was tired of having him around.

"Any man who urges a girl to keep her love affair a secret from her folks is a blackguard, and a girl may as well realize it first as last. No real man would do such a thing. He would be honorable." He looked at her when he said it, with such meaning that Ernestine felt a faint dismay.

"But how ridiculous," she exclaimed. "You all know, every one of you, that if she had told her folks of her infatuation, they would have carried her off to Europe, or had him forced out of town. They would have separated them instantly."

"But that's why she ought to tell her people," said papa. "No girl can trust her own judgment, when she gets out of her own class. Her people know best, and she should confide in them."

All this while mamma had been watching Ernestine. Mamma was so pretty, with her violet eyes, and smooth fair hair, and her slender vigorous body. But mamma was sharp.

"Neither of my girls would do such a thing," she said now in her soft quick voice, but with a meaning that Ernestine and Lillian both sensed. "I am sure that neither of my little girls would do such a thing to me—have a secret love affair. Would either of you?"

"Don't be nutty, mamma," advised Lillian, and Ernestine was silent.

Later, alone, Lillian turned to Ernestine eagerly.

"You'd better come across. I think the folks are on to you."

"You haven't told them?"

"Of course not," said Lillian impatiently. "It's your own business. But, Ernestine, you aren't really going to fall in love with him, are you? Papa would be furious."

Ernestine shook the bright tears from her eyes and smiled at Lillian. After a moment, Lillian went on uncertainly.

"Loring saw you yesterday morning. He asked me who the young man was, and I told him, but asked him not to mention it. Still he may tell. He's awfully fond of you, Ernestine. He's always telling me that you are just like a little sister to him. He might feel it his duty to tell papa about you and Will."

"But there's nothing about Will that anybody could object to," protested Ernestine. "I'm not engaged to him, but if I should become engaged, I don't see who could care. He's fine and good and gentle. He's brave, too, a real man."

Lillian shook her head.

"It's your funeral," she said, with the heartless laissez-faire of her generation, which feared, above all things, that it might become its brother's keeper. "But you know just how papa would react to Will Todd. He's the son of papa's old carpenter. He's poor, and he hasn't been to school, and he's not very strong—there's nothing but objections to such an idea, Ernestine. Anyhow, I can't see why you could let yourself even think of such a thing as getting engaged. Imagine taking a chance like that!"

* * * * * *

Will said nothing about marriage. He was full of talk, overflowing with his own vitality, enraptured with Ernestine's beauty and dearness. One day, however, when they had gone for their usual walk north along the lake shore, he seemed oddly silent and thoughtful, and at times he looked at her, as though wondering whether to speak his mind or not. When he left her, he kissed her again and again, and said oddly, "Remember me," as though it were farewell.

"I'll see you tomorrow," she whispered to him, and turned her fur collar up against the wind.

Motorist Learned That Small Boy Was Correct

Humor can be found even in parking difficulties. A Brooklyn motorist had circled two blocks in an effort to find a place to park the other night. He was taking his family to a neighborhood motion picture show and already was ten minutes late for the feature picture. Finally he sighted an ideal space near the theater. Speeding up ahead of other motorists he stopped and started to back into the space.

"You can't pawk heah, mistah," volunteered a fat negro boy from the curb.

Ignoring the negro boy, the motorist completed backing his car into the space, then looked out and angrily demanded:

"What's the matter with you? What do you mean, I can't park here?"

"Nothin', mistah, nothin' at all," replied the lad with a frightened look as he hastily walked away and revealed a fire plug upon which he had been sitting and which had been concealed from the view of the driver.—New York Sun.

Dyes Used to Change Colorings of Flowers

Painting the lilies is now an established fact, thanks to scientific research. Cut flowers have been colored artificially for some time past, but most common dyes are poisonous to the flowers and make them wilt almost immediately. Now, according to Dr. R. B. Harvey of the Minnesota agricultural experiment station, some brilliant, nonpoisonous dyes have been discovered, Popular Science Monthly reports.

Sweet peas, for example, are colored a brilliant blue five minutes after the newly cut stems are placed in a water solution of the dye. Lilies and carnations are also colored by the new dyes.

It is also found that flowers so dyed behave somewhat like photographic plates, and that miniature portraits, initials or messages may be imprinted by light upon the dyed petals.

Life Saver for "Sub" Crews

For the use of submarine crews when trapped within the craft, German engineers have introduced special diving suits that can be quickly donned in case of emergency. The outfit permits the wearer to rise to the surface where he can float for an indefinite length of time, protected from the water by his apparel. The inventors have also perfected a telephone buoy which may be released from the sunken submarine, to rise to the surface by compressed air, and is available for connection with ships above so that direct contact can be had with men still imprisoned in the submarine.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drug stores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

Milk for Soldiers

In the interests of the agriculture of his country, the Czech soldier will in the future be called upon to fight on milk instead of the traditional black coffee of the old Austro-Hungarian empire. It is estimated that the army will drink 75,000 liters of milk a day for breakfast. This measure has been adopted primarily to help the farmer, but perhaps the soldier will not object. He will at least know what he is getting, whereas his former guesses at the actual constituents of the army coffee varied from dried turnips and mangolds to acorns. It is said to have tasted like all three.

Bring Your Cream Early

Modern business and manufacturing methods are carried on with an efficiency our grandfathers would never have dreamed possible.

Products are turned out in such voloumes and with such speed that the ordinary man can't hardly grap the imensity of their numbers. But nevertheless it takes about 5 hours to pasteurize and cool 1200 gallons of cream and if we don't get started before 3 o'clock we can't get thru before 8 o'clock. Kindly bring your cream early.

for

COUNTY ATTORNEY

To the Voters:

In asking for your influence and vote at the elections this year, I submit the following for your consideration: As a result of court proceedings there has been collected from closed banks and bondsmen $61,001,97, since I became county attorney. During the years 1927, 1928 and 1929 as a result of court proceedings delinquent real estate taxes amounting to $12,657.47, delinquent personal property taxes amounting to $6,979.55, and fines and costs in criminal cases amounting to $8,699.59 have all been turned into the county treasury. Thus far in 1930 $6,423.90 has been turned in. The total is $95,762.49. These figures tell their own story. Regardless of whether you think Iam a good fellow, or whether you like or dislike me, you want a man as county attorney who will work for you as he would work for himself. My time is and has been spent in your interest. Those of you who come to my office usually find me working. There is much work left to be done, and if nominated and elected I shall continue working for your interests. Our financial condition must not for one moment be neglected. For the past two years I have been laying the foundation for a reduction of taxes, and if I continue as your county attorney, I hope to see that foundation bring results. It is going to require the best thought and best endeavers possible to handle our financial matters and at the same time get a reduction in our county tax, but it can be done if I receive the co-operation of the people of the county.

Respectfully submitted,
W. O. Braggans.

For State Senator

Dear Citizens;

I am a candidate for State Senator for the 67th Legislative District and certainly would appreciate your support.

I would like to make a personal call, but road conditions forbid. My word is good and I promise to fight for just and economic laws. Having been in the farming game for 12 years, in the Red River Valley, I know farm conditions as they really are. In curing the ills of the farmer one percent, it would help the business man and laborer as well.

For your support I promise to repay you with honesty and loyalty.

Your friend, Herman J. Berg.

Keeping Out The Weeds.

THE careful farmer cultivates his crops regularly and keeps out the weeds which would rob the growing plants of their nourishment.

The prudent man of affairs saves his money regularly, depositing a certain sum in his savings account.

Why regularly? Because the habit makes it easier for him to keep his surplus beyond the reach of the daily temptation for easy and wastefull spending. Those little temptations, like weeds, tend to destroy success.

Hard Luck Due to Camel Kick

Ahmed Sure Had Run of Mishaps After Animal Hoisted Him.

New York.—Ahmed Karn was sitting on a cane-bottom chair in the Seaman's Institute, down on the East river front. He was puffing a funny-looking pipe with a brass lid.

O. Henry once wrote a story about a fellow named Kearney. This Kearney was afflicted with chronic tough luck. Every time he took hold of any project it went into the ground, except when he tried to plow. Every ship he ever got on went down, except when he boarded a submarine. Kearney was just that way. He couldn't help it. Ahmed Karn also gets bad breaks.

It seems that Ahmed comes from the land of the Pharaohs. Twelve years ago in Schogg, Ahmed was kicked by a camel. When he recovered he found himself lying in a field alongside the Nile. Ahmed tucked up his tunic and took a train for Cardiff.

Meets Lady Snake Charmer.

In Cardiff Ahmed struck up a friendship with a lady snake charmer. She must have misunderstood his intentions because one afternoon a lawyer approached and told him he'd have to marry the girl. Ahmed left town in the middle of the night and went to London.

He signed up with an Italian ship, sailing for Genoa. Thirteen days later, when he landed, he was arrested as a war spy. When he finally got out of jail his ship was gone and so were his clothes. He took another ship, bound for Naples. The first night out she was torpedoed. In the escape from the sinking vessel Ahmed got into an altercation with the mate and was laid low by a bottle.

He got to Genoa and signed up with an English tramp, bound for Port Said. The rest of the crew were Chinese. Before he could get aboard ship Ahmed was waylaid by a gang of sailors. He got two black eyes and a broken nose and was thrown in jail for two months on a charge of attacking eight peace-loving sailors.

Cannibals Rescued.

Ahmed got out of jail and had to bribe his way into a job in a steamer. She was loaded with coal, and two days out a torpedo sent her down. Ahmed was plucked out of the water by a steamer headed for South America. South of the equator the ship rescued four men in a rowboat. They were cannibals, it developed, and the first night on board they tried to eat Ahmed without benefit of salt and pepper. A squall came up suddenly and saved him.

The gale swept the decks clean and a wooden tub hit Ahmed in the small of the back, putting him in bed for the rest of the journey.

In 1920, after varied misadventures, Ahmed found himself in Tampico working on an oil ship. He missed the ship one day and was arrested as a deserter. Finally he was released on bond.

Then Ahmed came to the United States. He had sad adventures in Port Arthur, Texas, and in California, altogether too numerous to mention. Eventually he reached Baltimore, where, in a speakeasy, his skull was fractured in a brawl.

Ahmed told his story, displayed his scars, and announced that he was preparing to leave New York on the first ship which would take him back to Egypt.

He has a reason for wanting to go back to Egypt. He wants to look up that camel. He's going to kick the living daylights out of the beast. That's the way Ahmed is.

He thinks the camel started it all.

Motorist Robs Man Whom He Gave Lift

Santa Barbara, Calif.—Louis Turner, twenty-six-year-old resident of the Seamen's Institute in San Francisco, recently was clouted over the head with an iron bar and robbed of $180 on a side road off the Coast highway near Naples by a motorist who had picked him up near Ventura as he was "hitch-hiking" back to his home port, San Pedro.

Turner said a man driving a fine car had given him a "lift" from Ventura and that they had come to this city, enjoying several drinks together en route. Later, according to his story, they started north, the man driving the car off the Coast highway on a side road near Naples, explaining the action by declaring that some "beautiful scenery could be seen from the road."

After stopping, Turner said, his companion reached into the back of the car, grabbed an iron pipe and hit him over the head with it.

Canada Best Customer of U. S. in Year 1929

Ottawa.—Reports of the United States Chamber of Commerce show Canada to have been the best customer of the United States in 1929 for the second consecutive year as well as the principal distributor of foreign products in the republic. The reports show that Canada's purchases from the United States amounted to near $1,000,000,000 and were 18.1 per cent of the whole, exceeding those of 1928 by $33,788,000. The United Kingdom held second place with exports at $867,980,000 (from the United States). Imports from Canada amounted to $504,000,000, or a gain of $14,974,000 over 1928. Japan came second in its volume of exports to the states, the year's value being $431,873,000.

DISCOVER FIVE "BUGS" IN FRUIT WHICH AID HEALTH

Little Family of Germs Gives Human Body Vitamins We Must Have.

Norfolk, Va.—Five little germs—"a family of five"—discovered in fruits and vegetables such as apples, figs, oranges, beets, potatoes and turnips—germs that aid health instead of injecting poison into the human body, have startled the scientific world. The discovery was made by Quincy C. Tucker, laboratory statistician of the United States naval hospital corps school, Portsmouth, Va.

The United States Department of Agriculture has no name for the germs and had never heard of them until the discovery made by Mr. Tucker, who is an expert on germs.

These germs, according to Mr. Tucker, are vital to life. Unlike others, they impart health and strength to the human body.

"They are good germs, the kind we must have if we are to live," he said. "This family of five will give to the human body vitamins that we must have. If it were not for these germs the human race would be poisoned and would soon fail to exist.

"The family consists of five types of true germ cells, and are in the form of low vegetable life. They are about two microns in size. They resemble the ordinary germ that causes disease.

"We consume them every time we eat certain fruits and vegetables.

"These germs are easily isolated from a ripe apple in this manner: Sterilize the skin of the apple with 95 per cent alcohol, then flame the skin in a Bunsen, but not enough to cook the apple; then with a knife sterilized by flaming red flame cut the apple through the tissue, but not to the core. From the cut surface of the apple obtain a small amount of serum and tissue. Place it on a sterilized glass slide; to this add a drop of distilled water; cover with a sterile cover of glass and examine under high dry power of an ordinary three objective microscope.

"At first the germs are difficult to detect, but watch constantly a well-defined field and within 30 minutes from the time you locate the field you will detect the germ cells in active motion. You will see the cells grow and multiply in about eight to twelve hours.

"They resist any amount of heat and cold.

"Apples and figs found to contain this family of cells were preserved in the ordinary way. The germs stop their action when sealed in a can, remain dormant until the can is opened, and then recover life and renew multiplying. There are millions of them in potatoes, apples, peaches, oranges, and figs. We found them also in beets and we believe they can be found in cabbage and perhaps squash."

"FIRST SHOT" STILL AGITATES TWO TOWNS

Lexington and Concord at Odds Over Event.

Lexington, Mass.—The shot that was heard round the world is still re-echoing through this historic town despite the fact that it was fired 155 years ago.

Long have Concord and Lexington engaged in friendly rivalry for the distinction of being the scene of that epochal event, and, with Massachusetts celebrating its tercentenary anniversary this year, the controversy has been enlivened.

Despite Ralph Waldo Emerson's poem which described the firing of the shot at Concord bridge, contemporary historians for the most part appear to favor Lexington's claim.

The principal basis for this town's contention lies in the inscription, "I'll Give Them the Contents of My Gun," which appears on the monument on the grave of one Ebenezer Munroe in an Ashburnham cemetery.

Men Called to Arms.

Records revealed by research indicate that it was Munroe who fired the famous shot, and that at the time he was one of a group of "rebels" who faced the British on Lexington common.

Evidence includes a deposition by Ebenezer Munroe, describing the events of April 19, 1775. He was alarmed, he states, at about 2 a. m. and immediately repaired to the common. There Captain Parker ordered the roll called and every man to load his gun with powder and ball. The men were then dismissed but ordered to remain within call of the drum.

About daybreak, according to the deposition, there was a call to arms, and as the men assembled on the common the British approached to within eight rods. A British officer called the Americans "rebels" and ordered them to disperse. When the command was ignored the British troops fired.

Corp. John Munroe remarked to Ebenezer Munroe, who was beside him, that the British had fired nothing but powder, Ebenezer replied that it was more than powder because he had suffered a wound in his arm and he added that he would "give them the guts of his gun." This, many historians contend, was the shot that was heard round the world.

Ebenezer Wounded.

That Ebenezer Munroe actually was wounded in the battle on Lexington common has been well established by the discovery of a copy of the "Massachusetts Spy, or American Oracle of Liberty," published in Worcester just 14 days after the battle. The casualty list published in connection with the report of the battle includes Munroe's name among the wounded.

Moreover, Isaiah Thomas, editor of that ancient newspaper, appears to have considered Lexington rather than Concord as the birthplace of the revolution. Writing in the same issue, he said:

"Americans! Forever bear in mind the battle of Lexington!—where British troops, unmolested and unprovoked, watonly, and in the most inhuman manner, fired upon and killed a number of our countrymen, then robbed them of their provisions, ransacked, plundered, and burnt their houses! nor could the tears of defenseless women, the cries of helpless babes, nor the prayers of old age, confined to beds of sickness, appease their thirst for blood! or divert them from their design of murder and robbery."

The Lexington-Concord controversy was given impetus recently when Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, in his tercentenary greeting, recognized Lexington as the scene of the firing of the shot that was heard round the world.

"Poetry may not support me," he observed, "but history does."

Hangman Is Willing to Do Stuff on Heckler

Toronto, Ont.—Arthur Ellis, Canada's executioner, did not accept an invitation to join the Anti-Capital Punishment Association of Canada. In fact, he would willingly hang the man who sent him the invitation, according to his statement in an answering letter.

Among many abusive and some complimentary letters which Ellis receives now and then was one from L. P. Rees of Toronto, inviting him to join the association against capital punishment. In his letter Rees characterized public executioners as "legalized murderers of all times."

Ellis returned the letter and added: "You uplifters are a source of worry to any decent law abiding person, but if a jury finds you at any time guilty of murder and a judge sentences you to death, I will willingly hang you. Yours. A. Ellis."

Lacks Money for Church Wedding, Kills Himself

Los Angeles, Calif.—Leaving a suicide note in which he informed his bride of three weeks that he had "tried as hard as I could, going everywhere, but failed" to find work to earn money for a church wedding ceremony on Sunday, Michael Flores, thirty-five, shot himself to death in front of the house where Mrs. Flores was living. The pair was married in a civil ceremony three weeks ago, but Flores' note said that relatives insisted they should not live together until a priest solemnized the wedding.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Odds and Ends

The senior class at Columbia university is dry, and is against swearing by women. It is fifty-fifty on the subject of women smoking, and it thinks "Journey's End" the best stage play and "Bulldog Drummond" the best movie. Certain employment agencies in town are under police surveillance, because they have a habit of obtaining jobs for men, collecting the fees, and then having the workers discharged so that more fees may be collected. A morning newspaper carried a display advertisement of a music critic, who says he also writes a radio department and criticisms of the dance. He wants a job. The Welfare Council of New York sends out warning that girls who intend coming here to work should be sure of at least $25 a week. One can't live on less than that, except in Brooklyn, where the minimum is $24—if you want to live in Brooklyn.

Didn't Get the Point

A New York columnist recently ran an anecdote—and not a very funny one—about a movie director and a girl who were talking over the movie business at dinner. The director confessed that he was looking for a man who was tall, blond and something like Lindbergh. "So am I," said the girl. The next day the columnist was deluged with letters from young men, all claiming to look like Lindbergh and to be tall and handsome, and asking for the movie job. Not one of them volunteered for the girl.

Style Advisers

The more expensive apartment houses—the ones where the rent is $1,000 a room or more per year—are now employing women as style consultants. When a tenant leases an apartment, he is given the services of the consultant, who tells him just what he should buy in the line of furniture and draperies. The service is free. The consultant makes hers by collecting a commission from the interior decorators.

Speaking of decorating, the newest wrinkle is invisible lighting fixtures. Lights are recessed in the walls close to the ceiling, and switches are hidden under rugs, where the master steps on them as he enters the door.

This and That

The pinnacle of the new Chrysler building is made of steel, which condenses rain from the winds that blow around its lofty summit even when the sky is clear. . . . One reason why the streets surrounding schools are so much dirtier than the other thoroughfares is that the street cleaning department will not operate near schools until nightfall, for fear a child might be struck by a city truck. . . . And the other reason why the streets are dirtier is that the children follow the example of their elders and throw papers away right and left. . . . An architect tells me that modern skyscrapers are not built to sway in the wind, as the Woolworth tower is supposed to. . . . But the vehicular tunnels under the Hudson river swing up and down stream with the tide—a comfortable thought for the passing motorist.

Selling Dogs

An evening's walk along Fifth avenue is sure to bring you upon a man leading two puppies by leash. Invariably cute, the pups are. Bulldogs or Scotch terriers, usually. When the red lights stop pedestrian traffic, some one is sure to stop and fondle one of the dogs. Then the man leading them makes his proposition. "I want to keep one of them, but I'll sell the other cheap," he says. And he usually makes the sale. It isn't a racket; just good salesmanship. That street-corner contact between dog and prospective owner is much more effective than displaying the animal in a shop window.

The city line passes directly through the playhouse. Thus, when this city's mayor recently banned a certain picture, the Ball Square theater was able to show it just the same because its screen is located in Medford.

Expert Tells Bullet That Felled Fugitive

Indianapolis.—It took Patrolman Arch Ball, ballistics expert, to decide which one of four officers fired the shot which stopped Farrell Tate, alleged auto thief, as he was fleeing. All four officers claimed credit for the shot until Ball identified marks on the bullet as coming from the gun of Patrolman Charles Peak.

DESERT CHARLIE IS TIRED OF COLD EAST

With His Four Burros He Starts Back for West.

Washington.—It seemed to Desert Charlie, back where the solitudes gave a man a chance to think, that the universe had been put together along fantastic but logical lines.

There was the burning breadth of the Mojave sands, distorted by upheavals of rock inexplicable to the casual traveler.

There were the serrated rims of dead volcanoes, tossed up by forces no man could explain.

Yet all these illogical aspects of the desert appeared logical to Charlie, who had slept most of his nights upon the sand and who had lived most of his days under the eye of the uncovered sun.

Charlie came to understand, from drinking water spilt between the hands and from wandering the tortured hillsides with his head exposed to the sun.

All Seemed Simple.

It all seemed simple, as Desert Charlie explained. There were fires under the earth, consuming fires which would not be put down. Sometimes, in ages past, they belched forth.

The fires, Charlie said, were fed by subterranean coal oil, brimstone and asphalt. Now and then, the wanderer explained, sulphur must have burned, since the broken rock of the desert sometimes showed a yellow stain.

Charlie, who had comprehended these things, could no longer rest content upon the sand, eking out an existence by begging beyond the rim of the desert only to return and sleep in the sandy hollows.

These things, Charlie averred, were for the 250 old men who could not live apart from the desert, and who could not long survive its exactments.

They, Charlie said, knew nothing of the great riddle of the universe. It was for Charlie to explain things, and this he set out to do.

Last April, a year ago, Charlie procured four burros—no one could explain how he saved so much money—and two days later he had packed his worldly goods upon their backs, tied them together in the best desert fashion and set out for the East.

Charlie, as he told everyone, was fairly embarked on a lecture tour, and he felt that he could benefit both himself and the easterners once he got to their great cities.

Used to Hardships.

It was not for Charlie, who had learned fortitude and reticence in his sixty-nine years, to complain of the hardships which beset him on the long trek to New York city.

If the burros' hoofs split on the unaccustomed asphalt, it was Charlie's business, and if the populace along the wayside was slow about paying to hear Charlie's lecture, that also was Charlie's business.

Last month, about a year after his departure, Charlie drove his four burros into the city of his destination—New York. The traffic, as Charlie said, was heavy and few had time to wait for his pack train.

Later Charlie learned that few had time to hear him explain things in his lectures.

Recently Charlie and his four burros came through Washington on their way back to the desert.

"Since we've been over here," Charlie said, with a generous gesture which included all the burros, "reporters stop us every time we start through a city.

"Now, it's a long way back to California and I'm in a powerful hurry, so if you want to interview me, do it now, because I don't aim to be stopped when I leave here going West."

Truth of Bible Story Proven by Excavations

Jericho, Palestine. — Excavations around the walls of Jericho are said to confirm the Biblical story.

Some time ago doubt was raised as to whether the trumpets really did shatter the ancient ramparts. The passage from the Bible reads:

"And it came to pass when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that the wall fell down flat, so that the people went into the city, every man straight before him . . . and they burned the city with fire." Joshua 6:20-24.

A section cut through the mound under the city has revealed some of the old wall lying flat and unbroken. Pottery under the walls has been identified as belonging to B. C. 1400. The city is said to have been captured by Joshua about 1451 B. C.

Vaccination Puts Crimp in Telephone Service

St. Louis.—Service in a St. Louis telephone exchange was "awfully bad." "What's the matter with you operators?" an irate man caller asked, "Can't you raise your arms?"

"You're exactly right," the operator answered, "91 of the girls here have just received vaccinations and cannot raise their arms." It developed that because one of the operators contracted smallpox, the entire lot was vaccinated.

Nothing Doing

Secretary McCankle of the American Institute of Actuaries told a story at a banquet in Des Moines.

"A waiter in a night club," he said, "complained bitterly to the cloakroom girl.

"'The whole night through,' he moaned, 'I've had the hardest kind of hard luck. Haven't made a cent on the side, not a cent. I added in the date on every blasted bill, but not once did the trick work. Not once the whole night through.'

"'You poor fish,' said the cloakroom girl, 'no wonder your trick didn't work. Don't you know that all these people here are attending the actuaries' convention?'"

"Everybody ought to get married. Most people's excuses for not marrying are as nonsensical as Sir Thomas Lipton's.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. They lunch together and recall their school days. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly.

But she did not see him the next day, although she waited at their rendezvous for an hour past the time. Nor the next day. By the third day she was filled with deep dismay and fear. All sorts of questions whirled through her mind. Perhaps he had tired of her. It might be that the affair had run out for him, that he had never intended to make more than a sweetheart out of her.

But she had only to think of his bright honorable face to know that there was some other reason behind his attitude. She had only to think of his eager kisses to know that he cared. She called him on the telephone at his home, at ten o'clock. His mother answered and said, in a low voice, that he was sleeping.

"Would you waken him. It's important," she said, and stood shaking in the telephone booth, until she heard his voice, husky with sleep.

"This is Ernestine," she said, trembling.

At once there was an electric silence, and then he said, in a voice now thoroughly awake:

"Well?"

She could have cried. "What's the matter, Will? Aren't you going to see me again?"

"Where are you?"

"I'm at the drug store, at Wilson and Sheridan."

"I'll be there within an hour," he told her.

He had not had breakfast, he said, shaking hands with her formally when they met. They went into a little white tiled coffee shop, and he ordered his breakfast and sat opposite her in silent waiting. He looked terrible. His face, often white, was ravaged, and his eyes burned. But he was calm. He had reached some decision, and Ernestine knew that the initiative rested on her.

"What's the matter, Will?" she asked him, trembling again, and hating herself for it. It was awful to be such a slave.

"Your mother phoned me yesterday."

"Mamma!"

"Sure—she asked me to come there to tea this afternoon. I told her I had to work. Didn't you know she was going to ask me? I thought perhaps you told her to invite me," said Will.

A little light dawned in Ernestine's mind.

"Is that the trouble?" she asked. "Do you think I ought to have invited you to my home?"

"Well," he said slowly, "why shouldn't you—unless you were ashamed of me?"

How could she explain without wounding him?

"But you see, Will—it has nothing to do with being ashamed. My first thought was to tell the folks, but then, it seemed they might disapprove of our friendship, and I want to keep it. And then—"

"But don't you see, Ernestine, I can't meet you any more, like this—out on the street, and in the library, and in restaurants and tearooms? I can't do that to your parents. If they don't want you to go with me, I can't coax you to do it—clandestinely."

"Your mother's been telling you all this."

"Yes," he said. "I confided in her. She showed me how it looks."

"Well, then, that's all there is to it. You aren't willing to make the effort to be friends that I am. You don't understand how they'd be. They'd be so nice and so reasonable—and they'd separate us. Just as sure as fate. You don't know them as I do. It wouldn't be your character they'd object to, or your folks. It would be your position and your lack of money and such things. Anyhow, it seems to be a little late to—to—" she faltered into silence.

Will looked at her with agitation.

"What do you mean—it's late, Ernestine?" he demanded.

But she could only look at him. If he did not understand, she could not explain.

"You mean—you care?" he asked a little breathlessly, and she smiled tremulously.

"What did you think?" she asked him.

"I didn't think, I guess," he said. "I never meant to make you love me—it was so natural. I shouldn't have touched you."

"But you did, Will."

"Let's go," he said, and paid the bill.

They walked out, swept now into a unity which had been increased, not broken, by their talk. They walked a half mile or so and came to a deserted boathouse, where they sat down side by side upon an upturned rowboat.

"You see, Ernestine," he told her solemnly, "we just kind of jumped into it all. But it's real with me. It's love—and marriage, with me. I never thought much about such things—just took you at what you were willing to give. Everybody has dates out around town, and I didn't want to go to your house especially, nor think about that. And then, we got to caring—and as soon as I began to think about you as my wife, I began to think about all these other things: your money, your family position, and the darned Briceland pride that I know more about than you do. And then, I wondered why you never took me home. And finally I talked to my mother. And I made up my mind to quit."

"Without even giving me a chance?" she asked him.

She was in his arms now, and he said to her:

"Will you marry me, Ernestine?"

"Of course. Today, if you like."

"You'll have to tell your folks first," he insisted.

"Oh, Will," she cried. "Don't stand with them against me. They'll separate us. Why do you suppose they asked you to the house today, if not to find out about you and how intimate our friendship had become, and to begin the business of breaking it up? I know." She told him what papa said about Sadie Hall and the actor Delancey. His arms grew slack about her. He sat a little away, now, distraught, silent.

"They'll think I've persuaded you. They'll think I want the money, that I'm seeking for myself," he protested. "If I thought you could live on what I make—but you don't know anything about money. You don't know how hard it is for two people—living on twenty-five dollars a week. I don't know what to do, but I want to do what's right."

He looked most forlorn sitting there, thinking, pondering, trying to contemplate a future without her, trying to reconcile his own pride and self-esteem with the position her family put him into.

"I should never have kissed you," he exclaimed. "I should never have loved you."

"Will," said Ernestine tenderly, "you couldn't help that."

For now his sad confusion had caught her in the grip of her first passion. Now she lived in terrible fulfillment the promise her throbbing heart had made weeks ago, when she had talked to Lillian about marriage. Her heart leaped in her like a thing threatened with mortal danger. She flung herself upon him precipitously, her arms strained round his neck. He caught her and held her close. All his being flared up in answer to her own emotion, and his lips sprang to hers in a kiss that was as new to them as though they had never touched each other before. It was a promise.

"Take me today, Will," she cried, and tears streamed down her face. "Now, quickly, before anybody can say a word to us, before they can be reasonable and reassuring and competent about us. Take me and hold me, now, quickly and secretly. I promise you I'll live on what you earn. I promise I'll take my chance with you—completely. I'll never let them have reason to say that you wanted anything but me. Whatever you have is all I'll have, Will. I promise—"

She was crying wildly. He was shaking, as she was, but he laughed a little, and wiped her cheeks with his own clean handkerchief.

"The lady promises, Judge," he said, and kissed her and laughed at her and teased her. "The lady promises never to sue me for more than a million a year alimony. The lady promises—"

He picked her up and set her on her feet.

"Come on, then—let's do it now," he cried, and seized her wrist and ran, pulling her along.

* * * * * * *

It was almost evening when Will and Ernestine came to the Briceland house. In the downstairs drawing room the lamps glowed softly. She had telephoned mamma that she was in town for lunch and would come out with Will at five. Beyond Lillian, Ernestine could see Loring's square shoulders.

They ran up the steps, hand in hand, and at the door Will gave her a reassuring hug and kissed her cheek.

"Let me do the talking," he whispered, and they went on into the hall and ran into the drawing and living room. Ernestine was aware at once that the swift kiss Will had imprinted on her cheek had been seen, for papa was flustered and hostile, and mamma looked at her in pale reproach.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "do you remember Will Todd?"

Mamma gave Will her hand, and he moved awkwardly forward, looking shabby and ill at ease beside the magnificence and self-possession of papa and Loring.

"We've just been talking about you," mamma said to Will. "I didn't know until yesterday that you were such friends with my little girl. I'm sorry you haven't been here sooner."

Will murmured something, and Ernestine introduced him to her grandmother, who looked at him severely and gave a slight snort of recognition, and then Lillian came and offered him her hand and said she remembered him. The two men straddling the hearth acknowledged the introduction with silent handshakes. Mamma asked Will to sit down and rang for tea. Ernestine, full of guilt, sat down close beside him and turned to speak to mamma.

The conversation moved haltingly as they waited for tea. Papa, somewhat maliciously, asked Will about his father.

"He's well," Will answered in a calm natural voice. "But my mother has been almost an invalid for a year now. We feel very anxious about her."

"We are sorry to learn that," said mamma, and then went on quickly: "What have you two children been doing all day?"

There was a dramatic pause, but Ernestine took it up quickly.

"Mamma, you forget that I am twenty now."

They laughed politely. The tea-wagon came, mamma poured tea for them all, and they talked of things about which Will knew nothing. Ernestine could see how they were making him feel like an outsider. Sitting in the deep chair, his long legs drawn up before him, Will was not so disturbing. Her heart was full of tender loyalty.

"You have changed a great deal," mamma said to Will. "You used to be a shy little boy."

"I don't feel very shy today," he told her, and smiled at Ernestine.

His bright black eyes, like shiny bits of anthracite, under his white, domelike forehead, were beautiful, but Ernestine knew that the others could see nothing but his queer clothes.

"Tell them, Will," she said at last, putting down her cup and taking his from him.

They all stopped, and turned startled faces toward the two. Will squared himself and turned first to mamma.

"We've gone and done it," he said, smiling.

"Gone and done what?" asked mamma sharply, and her pallor startled them all.

"We've gone and got married—today."

"Married! Who?"

It was papa's voice, harsh, protesting.

"Ernestine and I," answered Will steadily, and Loring said, "Married!" in a hoarse, incredulous tone, and Ernestine, looking up, saw his face, as pale as mamma's, and as startled, with deep chagrin and consternation written on it. But none of the others noticed him.

"You see," said Ernestine gently, "we were engaged anyhow, and when mamma invited Will to tea, today, I thought we might just as well make it an announcement party."

"You thought!"

"Certainly, papa. It was my idea."

Claims Elephant Leads Beasts in Intelligence

The question of the relative intelligence of our so-called "dumb" beasts seems to be one to which there is no end. Wherever animal men gather the controversy wages hot and furious. "I think elephants are the most intelligent of all animals," says Hubbard Nye, writing in Liberty Magazine. "I realize this opens an argument, for every man who has worked in a circus or menagerie may think otherwise.

"My contention," continues Nye, "is that elephants show more intelligence in learning to work. In twenty minutes you can teach an elephant to plow a cornfield and not step on a single shoot. The big beast's intelligence shines brightest in vaudeville work. He is the only animal capable of going through his stunts without a trainer and without cues.

"The three-ton star will stand backstage waiting for his act for an hour and a half, placid, thinking his elephant thoughts, while property men shift scenery right under his trunk and chorus girls go scuttling around him. You can lead him between the most fragile sets of gauze, and he won't hurt a thing."

Odd Penalty Inflicted for Picking Tree Leaf

Every leaf you pluck costs you a piece of your shirt!

This stringent and fantastic penalty was exacted for violating the protection bestowed by an emperor on a tree. The tree was an ancient lime tree that stood in the town of Adelsheim in Baden, Germany, and the Emperor Ruprecht decreed its perpetual protection in 1401. So strong was the tradition of this medieval enactment that even at the beginning of the Nineteenth century offenders were still penalized for plucking twigs or leaves; although a modification of the original rule, almost as fantastic as the emperor's whimsical decree itself, let offenders off with whole shirts if they would buy ribbons and tie them to the tree.

By 1867, however, the tree had declined to such a ruinous state that it had to be cut down, and for 50 years or so its place stood empty. Now, however, a new lime tree grows where the "Emperor's Tree" once stood.—Kansas City Star Science Service.

OLD DOCTOR'S IDEA IS BIG HELP TO ELDERLY PEOPLE
In 1885, old Dr. Caldwell made a discovery for which elderly people the world over praise him today!
Years of practice convinced him that many people were endangering their health by a careless choice of laxatives. So he began a search for a harmless prescription which would be thoroughly effective, yet would neither gripe nor form any habit. At last he found it.
Over and over he wrote it, when he found people bilious, headachy, out of sorts, weak or feverish; with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy. It relieved the most obstinate cases, and yet was gentle with women, children and elderly people.
Today the same famous, effective prescription, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is the world's most popular laxative. It may be obtained from any drugstore.

Buffalo in the Arctics

As a result of the success attending the introduction of the reindeer into the American Arctics, the experiment has been tried with buffalo taken from points in the northern part of the United States and southern Canada. Nineteen American buffaloes were liberated more than a year ago at Jarvis creek in Alaska, and while they have been carefully watched they have been given no special care, except an occasional ration of food when nature had cut off the supply. The last reports indicate that the animals were thriving in the most satisfactory manner.

She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days
During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."
Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.
Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.
Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.
At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts is carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.
If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Course Marker Successful

Tests of the "dromograph," an apparatus invented by a French naval officer for automatically marking the true course of a ship on the vessel's chart, are reported to have been successful. The device indicates the ship's exact geographical position at any time and also its precise course in arriving at the location. A stylus marks not only main changes in the course, but also smaller variations resulting from the helmsman's operation of the rudder.

Her Need

Little Betsy had been ill, and with the privilege of an invalid, demanded so much of her mother's time and attention that her older brother, Fred, was a trifle annoyed. One day when Betsy had kept her devoted parent reading aloud to her until she was almost hoarse, Fred remarked succinctly: "Well, mom, I think what Betsy needs is a 'talking picture of you.'"

Keeping Out The Weeds.

THE careful farmer cultivates his crops regularly and keeps out the weeds which would rob the growing plants of their nourishment.

The prudent man of affairs saves his money regularly, depositing a certain sum in his savings account.

Why regularly? Because the habit makes it easier for him to keep his surplus beyond the reach of the daily temptation for easy and wastefull spending. Those little temptations, like weeds, tend to destroy success.

Are you cultivating your income, regularly.

Furniture Kept Pace With Man

Woodworking Genius Developed With Civilization's Strides.

Chicago.—Every time the lady of the house goes forth on a shopping tour and comes home with something new, a problem is created. What's to be done with the new acquisition when it isn't in use?

That question, which is mounting to serious proportions in this era of small homes and smaller apartments, is no new bugaboo produced by the Twentieth century to pester mankind, according to furniture manufacturers. In fact, the need that underlies it was responsible for many of the pieces of furniture as we know them today.

Take the buffet. A study of its history shows that this familiar feature of the modern dining room became necessary when man first discovered that it was in some cases more convenient and in all cases more dignified, to transfer food to his mouth by means of specially constructed utensils, instead of by hand. What was to be done with the crude forerunners of our plates and knives and forks and spoons between meal times?

Origin of the Buffet.

Today the buffet, after considerable buffeting through the centuries, is fulfilling this special need in millions of homes.

In the beginning, the research men found, the first buffet was, in all probability, a tree trunk—a handy place where primitive man, seated on a comfortable rock after a hard day of hunting, could park the stone or flint utensils that comprised his "tableware," while devouring his evening meal. Later the chest, man's first piece of furniture, probably served as a buffet just as it was used for practically every other purpose.

The buffet as we know it, however, did not evolve until after the dining room itself had come into being. Skipping through the centuries and pausing early in the Eighteenth, we find the division of the great hall into a number of smaller rooms just getting under way in England. The breakup of the feudal system and the prevalence of religious persecution at the time are cited by historians as important factors in bringing about this change.

At any rate, the master of the house, who had been taking his meals in the large hall, or "houseplace," with all his retainers and dependents, decided to become more exclusive. A smaller room was fitted up with a "dressoir," a bedstead, a chair, some benches and a board on trestles that served as a table. This room was called a "parler" or "privee parloir" and in it the family enjoyed a mode of living a bit closer to our modern ideas on the subject.

This change was not accomplished without a struggle, the clergy and the court party opposing it vigorously. In 1526 the new fashion was the subject of a court ordinance and a special pastoral from Bishop Grosbeste. The text of this document pointed out that "sundrie noblemen and gentlemen and others doe much delighte to dyne in corners and secret places" and this practice was greatly deplored.

The Custom Grew.

Nevertheless, the custom of using smaller rooms steadily became more common and soon they were divided, naturally enough, into living room, dining room, etc. Barret's "Alvearic," published in 1580, defines "parler" as "a place to sup in" and in 1755 Johnson's dictionary gives what is believed to be the first definition of dining room: "a room in houses on the first floor elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment."

Having provided man with a dining room, the way is cleared for the buffet. The word appeared during the Sixteenth century, used to describe continental pieces of furniture, but just what these pieces were is difficult to ascertain.

The sideboard, as the buffet was called, may be said to have been introduced in England during the reign of William III, 1650-1702. The term "stately sideboard" occurs in Milton's "Paradise Regained" (1676) and Dryden, in his translation of "Juvenal" (1693) used the following in comparing his own times with the classic era: "No sideboards then with gilted plate were dressed."

The lack of sideboards is explained by the fact that architects of the period had a fondness for symmetry. Since one door into a room was necessary as an entrance and exit, they balanced this with another door, behind which they placed a cupboard in which was stored "glass, crockery and reserve wine." Examples of this custom exist today at St. James' and Kensington palaces.

By the middle of the Eighteenth century, these extra doors and hidden cupboards had gone out of vogue and the need for a sideboard was thereby created. The nucleus was already present—the mahogany sidetables. This, however, offered no accommodations except upon its surface and more room was needed. So by degrees it became customary to place a pedestal, which was really a cellaret, on each side of the table.

Progress Is Seen.

This gave the table in the center a rather lanky appearance, so a "garde de vin," or wine-cooler, was added, usually in the form of an oval tub of mahogany with bands of brass, raised on low feet with casters for convenience.

Next a pair of urn-shaped mahogany vases were placed on top of the pedestals, one containing iced water for the guests, the other hot water with which the servants washed the tableware, since eating utensils were scarce and very valuable and it was necessary to make a few perform double duty.

Here we have all the ingredients of the modern buffet; it only remained for some one to put them together in one piece of furniture. Who it was that blazed the trail cannot be definitely settled, but Thomas Shearer is frequently given the credit. At any rate, Shearer's plate showing a sideboard, in 1788, is accepted as the first published document illustrating this article.

Hepplewhite and the Brothers Adam had some influence on the development of the sideboard and Sheraton, the master craftsman, brought it nearer to perfection. Reproductions of these designs are still in use. The pedestals, incorporated into the sideboard itself, became cupboards; the vases were transformed into knife boxes.

During the Empire period, sideboards became massive affairs, and backrails, fastened to the piece, made their appearance. These later developed into the elaborate mirrored decorations that flourished during the heyday of golden oak.

Novel Written by Shaw at Last to Be Published

London—George Bernard Shaw, a writer of considerable promise and for whom a great future is predicted, has finally managed to find a publisher for his novel after 50 years of waiting.

It was 50 years ago that Shaw wrote "Immaturity." He was 24 at the time. Every publisher in London rejected the work. One who read it and turned it down was George Meredith, who at that time was a reader for the publishing firm of Chapman & Hall.

From then until now the manuscript lay about Shaw's chambers. Dust collected on it. Mice nibbled at it. Since then Shaw has written a few other things, such as some score of successful and world-famous plays, dozens of essays, a number of novels which were not rejected. This year "Immaturity" will see the light of day. It will be published in a collected edition of his works.

Proving once more that the first 50 years are the hardest.

IF JOHN D. TURNS SPENDER HERE'S WHAT HE COULD DO

Writer Presents Some Dizzy Figures on the Power of Rockefeller Fortune.

New York.—A new book on John D. Rockefeller and his stupendous fortune has been published by the Institute of Public Service. It was written by William H. Allen, director of the institute.

This is what Mr. Allen says Mr. Rockefeller could do if he were to go on a spending orgy, his calculation being based on a billion-dollar fortune, whereas the Rockefeller family wealth is estimated at over two billion dollars:

"After giving away a dollar bill on 15 corners every half-minute for ten hours a day every day of the year he would have more money than he started with."

"Had $500 a day been credited to Adam in the Garden of Eden for every day of these 6,000 years his bank account today would be less than Rockefeller's."

"It would pay 20,000,000 admissions a day for a whole year to the country's motion pictures. It is $2 a minute from Christ's birth."

"If the fortune Rockefeller has given away was laid end to end in $10 bills they would reach round the world nearly three times without using a cent of interest. With part of the interest added the line of bills would reach to the moon."

This feat added fifty miles to the previous long distance photographic record established by Captain Stevens last year. The photograph was taken while Captain Stevens was in flight 20,000 feet above Crater lake in Oregon.

Husband Pays $150 for Thirteen-Year-Old Bride

Zurich.—A thirteen-year-old Senegalese girl was sold publicly to an eighteen-year-old boy, also a Senegalese. The parents of the couple, after haggling for two hours, agreed on a price of $150. The party then went to the registrar's office and the marriage was performed. The young couple are employed at the Zurich zoo.

Analyzing ...YOU...

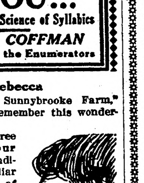
With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN

Dean of All the Enumerators

Rebecca

"Rebecca of Sunnybrooke Farm," who does not remember this wonderful picture?



Rebecca.

The first three letters of your name, REB, indicate a peculiar combination of friend and rebel, according to the ancient languages.

A friend to all who are in trouble, a rebel against the established customs of society, you present a curious picture to those who do not understand you.

You seem to grow by resistance.

Like Rebecca at the well, in the Bible, you do best in seeking your own mate among those who come from a far country.

With your classic features and almost Greek profile, you could exert all the charm necessary to hold him, when once you had attracted him.

The tragedy and the happiness of your life may be formed upon one and the same event, or at least upon one combination of events. For the RE in the fore part of your name means to do again and signifies the possibility of your marrying twice.

There is one thing certain, to attain your happiness, you must make your choices, whether one or many, by yourself. You are one of those for whom no one else can make a decision.

It was only in the understanding of this necessity of self-determination, this making of her own choices, that enabled one famous Rebecca to attain her success in writing.

And when you marry wealth, as you easily can do, you must immediately pick up the loose ends of your education. If there could be anything more essential to you than food for your body, it would be food for your mind, Rebecca. You can be happy only when you are thoroughly well informed.

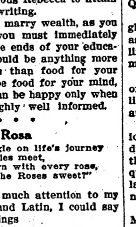
Rosa

"As we struggle on life's journey
And difficulties meet,
We get a thorn with every rose,
But aren't the Roses sweet?"

If I paid too much attention to my ancient Greek and Latin, I could say a lot of things here, Rosa, that wouldn't be so nice.

But who wants to say bad things about a rose?



The Nose of Rosa.

With your straight, finely chiseled nose,—and your face that used to be freckled, I see an evidence of intution that makes you able to go right to the heart of things.

So if musty old books and tomes of dead languages try to make me think that ROA means naughty and bad, I will just have to say to myself, that they didn't know about you.

Of course, you have the ability to be bad if you want to. But you won't because you are just naturally filled with helpfulness. And this helpfulness crops out in quite peculiar ways.

For example, you do have the cutest way of making little rhymes and jingles, of painting little cards and decorations. Why don't you take that up as a profession, that painting of the little colored cards and monograms?

There is quite a field for you there, Rosa, in special designing and you can soon find out where you fit best.

The thorn in your rose-nature seems to be just a sharp little edge of jealousy or envy. You can get over this all right, especially if you become a success on your own.

Rosa Ponselle made her way through petty jealousies innumerable, and envies unbelievable, to become one of the great singers of the Metropolitan grand opera in New York.

Rosa Bonheur, famous animal painter and sculptress, made her way up from a sick bed, after failing at the trade she started to learn. There is a lot of the same determination in you, Rosa, so go ahead.

Key's Furniture in Gallery

The National gallery at Washington has a valuable collection of Colonial furniture, once the property of Francis Scott Key, the author of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and his family. The property, which includes a number of portraits of historical interest, had been in the possession of his granddaughter, by whose will the property was left to the gallery.—Providence Journal.

Bandit Robs Couple; Takes Their Shoes

St. Louis, Mo.—John McCluskey, fifty-two, and Pearl Bounds, twenty-eight, were enjoying a spring night moon in a St. Louis park.

"Where's your money?" a bandit asked from behind their bench.

"In my shoes," Pearl replied.

The robber lifted her shoes and from each one took a dollar bill. The shoes were tossed into the nearby bushes.

"Where's your dough?" the bandit asked of McCluskey.

"Here it is," and he handed over $50.

Pearl was forced to remove McCluskey's shoes and toss them into the bushes.

The thief strode away as the couple searched the weeds for their shoes.

GIRL'S DAD WIELDS LASH ON OTHER MAN

Husband Forgives Her After Father Acts.

Los Angeles.—In place of "Home, Sweet Home," a snake whip is to be placed over the door of the domicile of C. E. Knox, twenty-two, and his wife, Loretta, seventeen, at 1319 North Gordon avenue.

While ten riot calls were being flashed to the police and a large crowd watched, the snake whip, plied by Mrs. Knox' irate father, P. T. Quaderkirk, sixty, flayed the cowering form of Ervin Radous, twenty-two, at Santa Monica boulevard and Gower avenue.

Quaderkirk's reason for publicly beating Radous, as explained at Hollywood station, was that Radous was paying ardent attention to Mrs. Knox. Quaderkirk continued:

"I want the whip, inclosed in a nice glass case, to be placed over the door as a constant reminder that a decent life is the most important thing in marriage."

Radous is married and is the father of an eighteen-month-old child. He lives with his family in the same apartment house as Mr. and Mrs. Knox.

Quaderkirk, who holds to old-fashioned views on fidelity, marital conduct and personal behavior, came to the conclusion Radous was too frequently in Mrs. Knox' company. The latter's husband was said to know nothing of the affair.

The elderly father of the young Mrs. Knox discussed the affair with his own wife and decided to employ summary measures. Mrs. Quaderkirk accompanied her husband when he bought a carefully selected whip.

Then, with Knox in the automobile, he drove to the building where his daughter is employed as a telephone operator, and when Radous joined her, followed. The whipping took place a short time later.

Man Sweats as Bandits Debate Over Killing Him

Girard, Calif.—Tillman H. Sanford of No. 18230 Chase street reported to San Fernando Valley police recently that he was held up in his automobile at the summit of Toponga Canyon road, south of here, and sat in a cold sweat while the two bandits debated whether they would kill him or not, because he had only a small amount of money on his person.

When the two bandits took $6.50 from Sanford they also grabbed his $15 watch. "We ought to kill you for a cheap guy," the bandits remarked. Sanford said the men were so tough looking he was afraid to argue, deciding to put up a fight as soon as the bandits started to carry out the threat. Finally the men changed their minds and told Sanford to drive on.

He told police he arrived at the summit about two hours after dark and had halted for about two minutes when the men accosted him. He described the pair as American youths, about twenty-two, of surly demeanor and dressed in dark clothes.

Air Passengers Kick at Rule Denying Nip

London.—Considerable criticism was expressed recently over the regulation which prevents travelers by airplane from obtaining alcoholic stimulants at the field if they happen to arrive there after the 3 a. m. closing hour.

Most of the planes from the continent arrive past that closing hour and after a cold journey the shivering passengers discover that they are too late for a little "pick-me-up." The critics point out that if it is quite legitimate for liquor to be sold all day at cricket matches the government would be forgiven if they permitted the commodity to be sold at Croydon for the benefit of shivering humanity.

Rabbit Drive Causes Capture of 55 Bunnies

Tulare, Cal.—A. J. Elliott, manager of the Tulare coursing park, is a man of resource and energy.

When some prankster freed 128 out of 130 rabbits intended as the inspiration for whippet races here, Elliott solved his problem in short order.

He organized an impromptu rabbit drive, went out into the country with his "posse" and within a short time captured 55 jackrabbits.

FAMILY DOCTOR MADE MILLIONS OF FRIENDS

Fifteen years after his graduation, Dr. Caldwell became famous for a single prescription which now, after forty years, is still making friends.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're constipated, headachy, bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

Fresh Egg Specialist

Astonished observers rubbed their eyes and pinched each other the other day when they saw O. J. Slocum sedately walking to market with one egg in a basket.

"How come?" they queried each to each. "Wherefore and likewise why?"

"You fellows wouldn't understand," explained O. J., "but the fact is just this. When I sell fresh eggs, they are strictly fresh and don't ever doubt it. I follow the hens around and as soon as an egg is deposited in a nest I carry it to the store. If a customer is particular, he can get eggs for his breakfast that are not over ten minutes old. This is an age of specializing and I am a fresh egg specialist."—Vineyard (Mass.) Gazette.

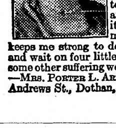
Queen of Siam Beautifies

Led by the queen, women of Siam are taking up the beautifying of the hair. The queen recently sent to Europe for new hair wavers, which had been invented in England, and if her efforts with them are satisfactory other women will adopt the new devices.

Pleasant manners often pay splendid dividends, but grouches also hold high and well-paid positions. The world simply must have ability.

"A WONDERFUL HELP TO ME"
Read What Mrs. Arnold Says About Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Dothan, Ala.—"What a wonderful help Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been to me. I was so nervous and rundown I couldn't be up half the time. When I had taken one bottle of Vegetable Compound I could tell I felt better, so I took seven bottles and I recommend it highly. It helped my nerves and keeps me strong to do my housework and wait on four little children. I hope some other suffering woman will try it."—Mrs. Porter L. Arnold, 1013 S. THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. They lunch together and recall their school days. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly. They make a runaway marriage.

"Not at all," said Will quickly. "But anyhow, we are married. I know this strikes you suddenly, sir, but we just decided in haste, and as we want nothing but your blessing—"

"Be still!" exclaimed papa passionately, and he turned to Ernestine. "Where were you married? By whom?"

Will took the conversation into his own hands with deliberation.

"We went to town about noon, went to the courthouse and got our license, then to a jeweler and bought the ring and waited while it was engraved." Ernestine held up her slim hand, and showed the astonishing gold band on her third finger. "Then we took a taxi out to my mother's house, got her and went to the church I was reared in, in Avondale, and were married."

"But why this mad haste?" spluttered papa, who was almost incoherent. "Ernestine," turning to his daughter, in renewed determination to have nothing to do with Will, "what's got into you? I am sure you have been under some dreadful influence. I can't understand how you could act this way. I can't believe it."

He was furious, he was undone, but he still had a note of command in his voice. Ernestine felt his strength with terror.

"Papa—" she began, but Will cut in resolutely, so that in spite of papa's determination to talk to Ernestine the situation narrowed itself constantly to papa and Will.

"Ernestine was afraid, sir, that you might try to separate us. My own instinct in the matter was that we should talk this over with you, but I see, now, that she was right. You must understand, sir, that we are married, and your objections are futile."

"Ernestine had reason to fear me," papa said in a voice none of them had ever heard from him before. Ernestine felt herself shrivel under it. Papa had no intention of considering himself futile.

"She had reason to fear me, and so had you. I suspect your fear was more important than her own. Even if she were a fool, you might have been decent about it. I have no intention whatever of letting her go away from here with you. You'll learn, sir, that there are such things as annulments, even as divorce. Just because she has made one foolish mistake, is no reason why I should let her ruin her whole life. You have behaved very badly, but your behavior ends here and now. Ernestine stays here. You may go, and I will deal with you outside the house."

Ernestine felt that everything was lost, but Will only laughed. If papa were new and strange, so was her young husband, for he seemed to glow, to fill out, to be bigger and stronger.

"Don't be silly," he said. "Ernestine is of age. She married me of her own free will, and if you tried any such stunts, she would say so. Our marriage is entirely legal. It stands before everything else. She is now my wife, and my home is her home, and you can't detain her."

"We'll see," said papa grimly, and then mamma broke in.

"You shouldn't have, Ernestine. Your shouldn't have run off and got married, without telling mamma. It's the biggest, the most important thing in your life—and to take such a step without your people knowing it! I can't bear to think you'd go off and be married—and not tell me."

"I'm sorry, mamma," said Ernestine in distress, and papa took things up again. He had made a decision.

"Go to your room, Ernestine," he said in a voice of stern command, "and stay there until I can talk to you. If you ladies will excuse us, we will settle this among ourselves. Do you hear me?" he said sharply, turning his furious eyes upon Ernestine. She faltered, half turned to go in automatic command, for papa had always ruled his home, without much effort, but Will put his hand on her arm.

"Stay here, Ernestine," he said in a low voice, and she paused, undecided, while mamma and Lillian seemed to be grouped together on the other side of the room.

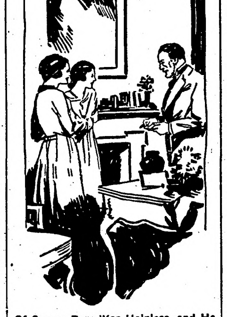
"I can understand your distress, sir," said Will. "I can see just how you feel about this, not knowing me at all and not understanding my motives. But you exceed your authority. If you should detain Ernestine here by force, I have only to go out and get the nearest policeman and come back for her. You can't do it."

There was a moment of incredulous silence, and papa half turned to Loring, in appeal, and Loring said in a low tone, "He's right."

Will followed this advantage swiftly. "After all, what have you against me except you think I may want [illegible] money? We have decided to do without that. I'm not a stranger to you. You've known my father for thirty years. You know my people, that they are honorable and decent. There's no reason at all why I shouldn't make any marriage I choose, even with Ernestine. I'm working. I can take care of her."

Papa raised his clenched fist above his head, as though he would strike Will, and Ernestine made a little moan and mamma screamed. But Loring put his hand on papa's arm, and drew him back. And in that moment Lillian went to Ernestine and put her arms around her and kissed her.

"Oh, Lil!" Ernestine cried, and burst into terrible tears. "Papa, papa," she cried, turning from Lillian to her father, and holding out her hands, "don't quarrel with us. I can't bear it. I love Will. I wanted to marry him. Let us go ahead with our own married life, now, but don't quarrel with us."



Of Course Papa Was Helpless, and He Said So With a Shrug.

"It's you who have broken faith," said papa. "Not your mother and I. You've put this stranger before us. You can't have both."

Ernestine was appalled.

"You mean that I can't come home?"

Papa attained a grim smile.

"That's what I mean," he said, but now mamma broke in hysterically.

"I won't be separated from Ernestine. I won't permit it," she cried, and went to her younger daughter and took her in her arms. "Darling, you can come home as long as mamma lives here. I will see you every day. It's dreadful. It's hard on all of us, and it will be terrible for you. But mamma will not let her little girl go away like this."

"Elaine!" said papa, but she turned to him, as full of anger as he.

"The child is married," she exclaimed. "She may have made a mistake, but if she has, it is only a reason for standing by her. This is my home, as well as yours. I won't be instructed to let my little girl go out friendless. You may do what you like with me, and send me away, too, if you can, but I am going to see Ernestine. I am going to have her here."

Of course papa was helpless, and he said so with a shrug.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "I am willing to take the responsibility for my marriage. After all, it's I who married Will."

"Not you alone," said mamma vigorously. "The whole family has married him, and we may as well realize it. For nobody marries just one of the Bricelands. We are all going to stand together, always. Papa, we will have to make the best of it. The marriage will have to stand."

Papa would not look at her, nor answer.

"We'll have to go," said Will.

"Goodby, darling," said mamma, and embraced her. "I'll see you soon."

"Goodby, papa," Ernestine faltered, but papa held his stubborn attitude.

"I'll have to go upstairs and get some things," murmured Ernestine, as they went into the hall.

Lillian went upstairs with Ernestine. Mamma came out and put her hand on Will's arm.

"Be good to her," she implored. "If you can't take care of her, if she's not happy, let her come back."

"I will, Mrs. Briceland," he said soberly. "I appreciate what you have done."

Mamma wept afresh.

"It is hard for her father. He worships her. You must understand him. It is a terrible blow to him. He will come around."

The girls came down the stairs, and after a moment Ernestine and Will were out in the dark street again, with her small dressing case in Will's hands. The family stood about in the living room in stricken silence.

The silence lasted for some moments, then Mrs. Briceland turned to her husband.

"You should never have let her go off like that," she said reproachfully. "What will she do?"

"I had no intention of letting her go, if you hadn't interfered," he exclaimed. "I was only threatening her with the loss of the family, in order to get her to stay here—to gain a little time."

"She wouldn't have done it," said Lillian. "She's too crazy about him. It probably was her idea that they get married first. She meant it. You couldn't have kept her."

"How much do you suppose he earns, on the Sun?" asked mamma, and Loring answered:

"Probably anywhere from twenty-five to forty dollars a week."

At that papa threw up his hands in a gesture of despair and turned to leave the room, but he looked back at his wife darkly.

"If you had stood by me," he said to her, "if we had all stood together, we could have held her here. You went back on me, both you and Lillian. It gave them courage. Now, you can think of her, God knows where, with that upstart." He went into the hall, and mamma followed him, her bright persistent voice coming down the stair:

"You shouldn't have let them go. We might have kept them both here, and taken care of them. Lewis, you'll have to make up your mind to give in, and get him a better job—"

The voices trailed off, and an upstairs door closed upon them. Grandmother went stiffly out of the room. Lillian began to move about the room, satisfying her need for order by pushing the chairs in place, straightening the pillows and moving the things on the table. Loring stood by the fire, staring into it, his face flushed, one hand opening and closing nervously. Lillian came and spoke to him in a voice which was already like mamma's.

"I'm sorry you got into this," she said. "It's terrible. How can Ernestine act that way? She's the most haphazard thing. But this is the worst yet. I feel as though she had ruined herself. But you aren't going to be angry with her, are you, Loring?"

"No," he said. "No, I won't be angry with her. Your mother's right. The family must stand by her."

Lillian shuddered a little.

"It seems dreadful to me," she said. "Ernestine out somewhere in Chicago, with that man. I don't see how she can be crazy about him in the first place, and how she could have married him in the second."

Loring reached out his hand and ran his fingers down the crepe sleeve of her dress, caught her fingers and held them in his own.

"Would you do that much," he asked wistfully, "if you cared for a man? Would you defy everything for him?"

"I don't know," said Lillian honestly. "I don't know. I want things nice. I want some plan and arrangement to my life."

"But if the man you cared for was not—eligible," he persisted, "would you marry him anyhow?"

"It's not a fair question," protested Lillian, and then added softly: "I don't know what I would do. Because I've cared for only one man, and he has been eligible in every way. So I can't imagine how I would act under other circumstances."

There was a little silence, and then he said, in a stifled voice:

"Is it I, Lillian?"

She looked up at him, and his face was full of suffering. Her own was compassionate.

"Did you care for Ernestine, Loring?" she asked him, but he shook himself quickly.

"No, no!" he exclaimed. "Not—that way. I'm fond of her. She's been like a little sister to me, always. But it's you I care for. It's you I want for my wife. Is it possible that you care for me, Lillian?"

"I always have," she answered simply, and he stared down at her, and again his voice was queer and strained.

"I'm like Ernestine," he said, "what I want is love."

She put up her fair sweet face, and he kissed her placid lips.

"I love you, Loring," she assured him, and he took her roughly into his arms.

"You hurt me," she complained in a moment, and he released her and stood holding her hand gently.

"I want love," he said again with poignancy, and Lillian assured him in her quick bright voice that she loved him.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Grecian Influence on Culture of Old Rome

Almost as far back as the history of Rome extends Greek influences are to be traced in the development of Roman culture. The Roman people were conservative and slow to cultivate the artistic sense. Rome had little creative genius. In her whole history she did not produce an artist such as Phidias and Praxiteles. The nature of the Roman was unusually practical and idealized power, law and profit. The Romans never created a distinctive style of architecture such as the Greeks. They borrowed their architecture from the Etruscans and the Greeks. The literary life of Rome has a profound effect upon mankind—Cicero with his orations, political and educational treatises; Caesar with his commentaries on the Gallic war; Sallust with his history of Rome; the poets Lucretius and Catullus. These poets, however, do not compare with the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer, the Greek philosophers Plato and Aristotle, Socrates, Xenophon and the orators Lysias and Isocrates.

Known Only by Tradition

Tradition has attached the name of Dismas to the thief who repented on the cross, when the Savior was crucified, and Gestas to the impenitent one. Both names are highly improbable.

Odd Situation Caused by Old Chinese Calendar

If winter comes can spring be far behind? The question has found an unusual answer by a Chinese student in a Shanghai newspaper, who states and proves his point that in 1929 spring actually came on the calendar before New Year's day.

The old Chinese calendar, which was the lunar calendar of 1929, announced the festival of Li-chun, or spring's commencement day, on the twenty-fifth day of the twelfth moon, which was equivalent to February 4 on the solar calendar; whereas Chinese New Year did not come until February 10.

Since New Year's day is generally considered the commencement of the cold weather, it can safely be said that in China in 1929 spring came before winter. It is not likely to happen again, though, for the Nanking government has decreed that in future the lunar calendar is to be abolished, the foreign style calendar taking its place.

All Anglo-Saxons are at least thirtieth cousins, says Prof. George A. Dorsey.

Minnesota,s need of state income tax will be told by A. J. Olson, of Renville, president of Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, at a national conference on taxation to be conducted in Chicago on June 25, under the auspices of the American Farm Bureau. Governors of the forty-eight states, federal officials and the outstanding farm tax specialists of the nation were invited to the meeting and it is thot that many will attend.

Mr. Olson. in delivering the message favoring a state income tax for Minnesota, will be reporting the sentiment expressed by the membership of the Minnesota Farm Bureau at the annual meeting Jan. 21 - 23, at a later meeting of state directors and more recently by county and township officers, who attended the series of district Farm Bureau conferences, May 19 to June 3.

The American Farm Bureau Federation called the conference to consider farm tax problems and to make an especial study of ways in which states may cooperate to " end the reign of cut-throat competition between states, which stands today as a barrier to taxation according to ability to pay in any state", says M. S. Winder, secretary of the American Farm Bureau.

County Fair To Open Monday

Offering its greatest diversity of attractions since its organization 24 years ago, the stage is all set for the 24th annual Marshall County Fair at the Fair Grounds in Warren next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, according to Wm. Forsberg, president of the fair association.

Already many entries have been made in the livestock divisions of the fair, while the grains and grasses divisin gives promise to break all records, officials have announced. The 4-H club exhibits will again be one of the most outstanding departments of the fair, with club members from all sections of the county competing for honors.

Fair directors have assembled its greatest array of grand stand free attractions for the 1930 fair, giving promise of being better than the splendid free acts of the fair a year ago. Among the features will be E. Hurl Falls and sisters, introducing a clever ground tumbling act; The Yoki Trio from the Orient in two outstanding acrobatic acts; The famous Wingand Troupe, a brilliant troupe of Aerial Gymnasts; The great Ardell in a swinging pole act on an 85 foot pole and also Ardell's Dogs with 10 beautiful bred dogs Rube Swanberg from Station K-F-N-F of Shenandoah, Iowa, will be at the fair in person—you know he's good. The Capital Amusement Company will furnish the amusement on the midway, while the Thearle-Duffield Co. will again give two nights of glorious fireworks.

An exceptionally attractive race program has been arranged for the 1930 fair, featuring both professional harness races and amateur pony and horse running races. The ameteur races will feature the fastest ponies and horses bred in the Northwest, while leading sportsmen from the middle west will take part in the harness races. More than 25 horses have been entered.

The Marshall County Fair Grounds at Warren are in splendid shape this year, a real good gravel driveway having been laid out this summer through the entire grounds. Buildings have been repaired and paited and the dirt track has been put in excellent condition. Residents of Holt are urged to attend the annual county get-together at Warren next week. It will be well worth your time to attend.

WANTED A COTTAGE WITH YARD AND FLOWERS

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

JOHN DALTON looked very sober as he waited in the artistically furnished sun room for his sweetheart who was putting the finishing touches to dinner. He lived at home and he knew something of the cost of such a dainty little apartment and it worried him, for his salary would not permit such a scale of living, and he hesitated before asking Lorene to marry him and move into a cheap little suburban home. As for starting married life by paying an exorbitant rent for the sake of keeping up with a horde of total strangers, all engaged in the squirrel-cage of keeping up appearances, he considered this foolish in the extreme.

"I hope there will be something that you will like for dinner," fluttered Lorene, who looked oddly tired for a girl who had nothing to do all day but sit in her sun parlor and amuse herself. John had spent a wearying day among his blue prints but he looked less tired than she.

"You should not go to so much trouble," protested John, looking uncomfortably at the elaborate table set with silver candlesticks with tiny rose-fluted shades and at the lace and damask circular cloth. "We live very simply at home. My mother does her own work and we prefer to have her use as few dishes as possible. Living is so costly these days that plain food is about all we can manage."

Lorene's mother glanced at him thoughtfully, but made no reply. John, accustomed to the free discussion of the housework, wondered how much his hostess hired done. There was no maid to serve the meal, but he fancied, from the amount of silver and cut glass used that there must be outside help, for both women were expensively gowned and at the conclusion of the abundant, almost extravagant, dinner they both left the room with no apparent thought for the putting away of the food or dishes.

John took Lorene to the theater as they had already planned and because she wore a delicate white lace frock, he felt obliged to call a taxi lest she soil her satin pumps. The seats had cost him $10 and with the taxi fare both ways he had spent his surplus for the week. The girl had never looked prettier; the shadows about her dreaming brown eyes lent her a fragile appearance that made the man long to ask her to marry him and let him take care of her, but the very frailness of her beauty made him hesitate. If she was so tired out from the heat of a day filled with idleness, how could she stand up under the strain of making both ends meet on his very moderate salary? He had good prospects, but at present his salary check was only average for his age. She had scarcely touched her dinner, plate after plate held delicate food that she had left barely tasted.

"I was sorry not to bring you flowers," he said as they sped up the brilliantly lighted avenue.

Lorene stirred, the lights caught the bronze tints in her beautifully coiffed hair and it looked almost golden. "I'm glad you didn't," she said softly. "I do not care for hothouse flowers. I like a garden where one works and watches for the unfolding of the buds. One appreciates what is worked for. I love the country—"

The taxi stopped before the apartment building and John helped her out.

"Will you come up?" asked the girl.

"I'd better not," he said reluctantly. "It is pretty late and I have to get up early." Under the door light he noticed the vivid flush that swiftly swept her face. Her lips parted as though she intended to interrupt but at his next words the blush receded, leaving her face a dead white. "I may not be around for some time. You see I'm a poor man and I have nothing to offer a girl like you. Why, the dinner you gave me tonight would have cost me nearly my week's salary if I had entertained you downtown instead of your entertaining me. I don't feel right about accepting what I cannot return." He looked deeply into her wide, brown eyes and turned away abruptly.

Lorene watched the tall figure swing down the street with eyes that were wet with sudden tears.

"Did you have a good time, dear?" asked her mother sleepily.

Lorene shook her hair about her face as she removed the pretty shell hairpins. She did not wish anyone to see her bitter disappointment. "Nothing extra," she murmured. "I think I made a mistake not telling him, but it's too late now. He—" she swallowed hard and then concluded bitterly, "he's not coming again very soon. He thinks he has nothing to offer a girl like me," and she vanished into her own room.

John Dalton was looking determined as he entered the telephone booth of a downtown firm. He had not been in this office for some months, as his employer usually attended to the business transacted with them, but he had been entrusted with the blue prints for the contemplated building. The head was out and while John waited he obeyed the longing that had clutched him all day. He must speak to Lorene and ask her to let him see her. He could not break off as he had tried to do. Twice, between appointments, he had called up the apartment, but both times there had been no response, and he wondered jealously where she had gone. He stalked out, frowning; again central had languidly informed him that his party did not answer. Stalking along the corridor, he heard a familiar voice. Just ahead of him walked a slim figure, clad in a severe blue serge frock, with dainty sheer ruffles at the neck. The mass of wavy bronze hair was plainly arranged, but there was no mistaking the curly tendrils that escaped the net and made a misty brightness about her small head.

"Lorene," he said, catching up with here, "what are you doing here without a hat? Surely you do not work downtown?"

"Of course I do. Mother and I both work. Otherwise we could not keep that good flat, but I sometimes wonder whether it's worth the effort. We have to do so much work at night that we're tired the next day."

"Last night you said you loved the country. Did you mean real country life or the imitation one finds at country clubs, filled with servants?" he demanded clutching her arm.

"I've never been in a country club. I'd like to have a cottage with a yard and lots of flowers—" Lorene broke off, confused under the delight that appeared on the grave face looking down at her.

"Will you help me find such a cottage?" he demanded.

Physicians Make Poor Showing in Longevity

Physicians, apparently, do not enjoy as favorable a mortality situation as other professional workers. In fact, they have an expectation of life at age thirty—when they are entering upon their chosen careers—of between two and three years less than a selected insured group; and they surpass the general population in longevity by barely a year.

In spite of the fact that as a group doctors are endowed with better than the average physique, mentality and social position, their irregular hours, the liability to emergency calls at any and every hour of the day and night, and exposure to all kinds of weather which inevitably accompany rural and small town practice more than counterbalance their assets.

Influenza and pneumonia are very common causes of death and explain in part the high mortality. These diseases may be considered occupational in character since doctors are constantly exposed to them in the course of their day's work. Organic heart disease and diabetes are also decidedly higher among American physicians.

The suicide situation in this group has often attracted attention. In this country available figures, although inconclusive, suggest that the suicide rate is slightly above the average. In England and Wales, however, mortality from suicide is very high, being twice the average.

The mortality of dentists is lower than the average for all occupied males; but like that of doctors, it is not as favorable as that which the professional and white-collar class as a whole enjoys.—Louis I. Dublin in Harper's Magazine.

Chemical to Combat Crime

Numbers on automobile parts, guns, watches and other metal articles, mutilated or partly obliterated by thieves in an effort to baffle identifications, may be restored with a chemical prepared by members of the stolen automobile detail of Chicago's police department, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The chemical, in liquid form, is applied to the part where the original number is believed to be. In five minutes or five hours, perhaps, depending upon the kind of metal and the degree to which the old characters have been worn away or obscured, the faint outlines of the original numbers usually can be seen. Special lights and magnifying glasses are sometimes necessary, but usually the numbers are visible to the unaided eye. The restoration is generally not permanent, but lasts long enough to permit an accurate tracing of the numbers. More than 100 automobiles, many guns, watches and other articles thus have been identified by the chemical squad.

Cross-Word Puzzles Old

Puzzles similar to the crossword puzzles were known to the ancients. What is believed by some authorities to be the oldest crossword puzzle was made by a Cretan about 2,000 years ago, a copy of which now lies in the archeological museum at Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore. This puzzle is called the "Phaestus disk," and was found on the island of Crete by an expedition many years ago. According to the New York Evening World, the first genuine crossword puzzle of the modern type was composed by Arthur Winn, and appeared in a supplement of the Sunday World on December 21, 1913. The outbreak of the World war arrested the crossword puzzle craze temporarily, but it was revived as a feature in the World in 1916.

Henry et al will do some turning in their graves when they hear of Antoine Maillet, the only man on record who ever defeated an army single handed. Some weeks ago, Maillet, a French war ace, undertook a little job for King Tafari Makonen of Ethiopia.

It seems that a certain Ras Gugsa Olie, a former husband of the former Empress Judith, craved to be king, and with that end in view drew up somewhat of an army which offered battle to the loyal troops not far from Addis Ababa, the capital. The king asked Maillet what he could do, and Maillet said he would see.

A few days later the intrepid flyer took out over the lonely mountains and treacherous ravines not to mention the impassable jungles and forests teeming with lions, elephants, crocodiles, boas, leopards, panthers and hyenas. When he sighted the enemy he dropped his majesty's regards. Those who were not killed ran.

The king, learning of the news, was overcome with remorse at the demise of Olie, but nevertheless a reception befitting a hero was prepared at Addis Ababa for Maillet, who returned unruffled to discover that he had earned a place in history alongside of Lafayette, Napoleon and some of the other better-known French fighters.

Maillet's life was not uneventful during the World war. He brought down a dozen German planes, was captured, escaped, won the Medaille Militaire and four other citations, was wounded but continued in active service to the last. The war over, he reenlisted with the French troops in northern Africa, where he served until 1928—a brilliant career covering 15 years.

It was only when even the African campaigns began to pall and there was no further reason for his remaining with the French army that he conceived the idea of becoming a soldier of fortune. It was in such a capacity, with the high-sounding title of director of aviation for the Abysinnian army (his being the only plane) that he won the battle of the lions and boa constrictors for good King Tafari Makonen.

Only American Bills, So He Threw Them Away

Paris.—Young Georges Bapret isn't nearly as bright a fellow as he had thought. Employed as a plumber's assistant, he arrived at work in the home of an American family resident here, and what did Mr. Bapret see but a pocketbook stuffed in a corner of the divan. He took the pocketbook, but did not dare investigate the contents till he got home. Then he discovered, to his disgust, that inside the pocketbook were not honest francs but strange pieces of paper colored green and black, with cabalistic signs all over them in script he did not understand. So young Mr. Bapret threw them in the wastebasket.

When the police came they retrieved $55 in American bills and led Mr. Bapret to the nearest police station, where his future instruction ought to include some details of financial exchange.

Scientist Finds There Are 57 Varieties of 'It'

Cleveland.—The following facts about "It"—more soberly known as "personality"—were revealed here in the annual report of Dr. Henry C. Schumacher, directing psychiatrist of the Child Guidance clinic:

There are 57 varieties of "It."

The lack of any one of them may make a psychological problem of a child.

Of the 1,112 abnormal children observed in the clinic last year all lacked one or more of the 57 varieties.

Famous personalities, "people you like to know," are that way because they have all the 57 varieties in the best proportions.

Robin Halts Work on Milwaukee Man's Home

Milwaukee.—W. F. Schellin has stopped repair work on his house. That is robin redbreast's fault.

Bricklayers had completed a veneer on the house as high as the second floor when Schellin called a halt. There was a robin's nest on a second-floor window sill with three eggs in it.

Mr. Schellin would like to get the repair work done. He does not, however, intend to permit a wall of brick to interfere with an event to which a certain mother robin has been looking forward for quite some time.

Motorcycle Dash to Pole Plan of Airman

Oslo, Norway.—Maj. Tryggve Gran, Norwegian airman and explorer, who was a member of the scientific staff of the Scott expedition in 1901, is planning a trip to the South pole by motorcycle.

He plans to disembark on the west side of Ross sea and proceed, preferably by airplane, to the plateau before beginning the trip by motorcycle.

HE FOUND RICHEST MINE; NOW PAUPER

Britisher Aided in Opening Rand Fields.

London.—"It's all in the game!"

In that laconic sentence was expressed the fatalistic philosophy of a man who once was rich beyond all the dreams of avarice and who now lives in complete and lonely poverty in a remote section of the Transvaal.

Nearly half a century ago the name of Samuel Honeyball was famous throughout the world as one of the four mining prospectors who discovered the richest gold deposit in the world, the Rand gold mines which have been valued at $1,000,000,000 and which have yielded five times that much to their lucky owners.

Found Wreck of Pauper.

Honeyball recently was found living in penury—shaggy, unkempt, aged, the wreck of a man who gained a world and lost it, the living hero of a stranger and more fantastic tale than novelists ever told. But he has no regrets, no resentments, no ill-feelings and but one explanation for the turn in his fortune.

It was nearly fifty years ago that Londoners were startled by the amazing news from Africa that a rich gold deposit, the richest yet, had been discovered by four men in the bleak ravines of the Transvaal.

Stories of untold wealth began to be heard and before many months men from all corners of the world began to sift into the Transvaal.

Great Discovery Made.

And Honeyball was one of the heroes of the rush, rich and famous. And deservedly, for with his three companions Honeyball prospected in the wild ravines and baboon-infested plains.

Then the great discovery in the Witwaterstrand district was made. Gold, conglomerate beds of it, were found.

And in spite of the amount of precious metal the Rand mines have given up since they were discovered nearly half a century ago, the amount still there, waiting to be dug out, is still measured in billions by mining experts. But Honeyball is living in a remote section of the country, depending for his livelihood upon a pension of $3.10 a week.

How he lost his untold wealth is not known and Honeyball will not tell. He prefers not to discuss the matter.

Great Lakes' Terrier Acquires "Sea Legs"

Toronto, Ontario.—Five years of sailing the inland seas of the great lakes have given Toby, fox terrior owned by Capt. William Tulloch of Kingston, a real mariner's sea legs.

Since he first set sail from Montreal, where Captain Tulloch purchased him, Toby has got over the annoying habit of falling overboard and sometimes into the ship's hold.

Toby's narrowest escape occurred a few years ago when his ship was passing through the Welland canal. The fox terrier tumbled over the side just as another ship was passing and went entirely under the other vessel, coming up to be fished out and continue his journeys.

Unlike many sailors, Toby was "shipped over" on the steamship Birchton, Captain Tulloch's craft, at the end of every voyage.

Death Attempt Fails; Couple Are Happy Now

Milwaukee.—Leonard Grimmer, seventeen, and his sixteen-year-old girl bride, Sophie, have found the bluebird in the form of a steady job.

The young husband is glad now that police interrupted his attempt to kill himself and his wife by gas at their home here. The couple have become reconciled and the clouds of despondency have lifted.

Ordinarily, a suicide attempt means prosecution in Milwaukee, but in young Grimmer's case authorities made an exception. He was released on probation.

Sophie was glad to forgive her husband.

Grimmer, married only last September, couldn't stand the hard sledding of unemployment. Despondent, he turned on the gas, but was discovered by his wife in time to save his life.

Fisherman Lands Pike and Hawk in Same Net

Stockholm.—To catch a pike and a hawk in the same net is something which does not happen to many fishermen, but Karl Sohlman, of Tosmte, in the province of Vermland, has just accomplished the feat.

A large and powerful pike was caught in his net and a hawk, watching the attempts of the fish to free itself, swooped down in the hope of a meal. But its claws became tangled in the meshes and Sohlman hauled in a double catch. The bird was an unusually large specimen, measuring more than 3.28 feet between the wing tips.

Magazine Solicitor Uses Strong Arm Tactics

Billings, Mont.—A brusque stranger shoved a receipt for a magazine into the hands of twelve-year-old Richard Moore and demanded $3. The youth stammered and turned pale. "All right, if you won't I will," he exclaimed. He walked into the house, grabbed the child's penny bank which contained about $3 and disappeared.

HONEYMOONERS HIT BY DAMAGE SUIT

Wedding Journey Is Full of Troubles.

Seattle. — Two young honeymoon couples who eloped from California arrived in Seattle in time to be served with summonses in a $10,000 damage action—just 11 days after their double wedding at Reno, Nev.

All the way from Wheeling, W. Va., Albert A. Heunisch motored to Oakland to claim his seventeen-year-old bride, Sylvia. With him he brought his college chum, William B. Dawson of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was to have been "best man."

It was "love at first sight" when Davison met Sylvia's girl chum and the four decided to make it a double elopement and wedding.

Driving to Seattle on their double honeymoon to visit Heunisch's uncle and aunt, Justice of the Peace and Mrs. John B. Wright, the honeymooners were arrested by highway patrolmen at North Bend on request of authorities at Easton.

"We couldn't imagine why we were detained," Davison said, "and then we found that a car we passed Sunday had plunged off the highway immediately afterwards. We were supposed to be responsible."

In the car, which dived down a 30-foot embankment, were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Wilson, their eight-year-old daughter, Katherine, and Mr. and Mrs. John J. Cusworth. Mrs. Cusworth, Mrs. Wilson and her daughter were severely injured.

When authorities decided not to file reckless driving charges against the honeymooners they continued their trip to Judge Wright's home. The Wilsons and Cusworths, however, retained Attorney John J. Sullivan to bring personal injury actions against Dawson, owner of the car.

Beautiful Subway Is Goal of Paris Chiefs

Paris.—The municipal council of the "most beautiful city in the world" is growing worried lest the city fall short of its reputation due to the metro stations. They feel that subways should be as handsome as any of the museums and monuments of Paris, and to that end they are talking of improving their underground stations by installing ornamental stairways, instead of the present cement and steel arrangement.

The local advertising agencies will doubtless rise in rage against this idea as the walls of the metro stations are coveted for displaying posters which extol the products of La Belle France. However, the council has a good chance of winning out in the end, as the Parisians are devoted to their city and extremely proud of its beauty, and probably will take this chance to enhance it.

Cat's Fur, Afire, Sets Entire Farm Ablaze

St. Omer, France.—The flaming torch of a scurrying tomcat, his fur aflame, caused the destruction of an entire farm near here recently.

Warming himself contentedly by the hearth fire in the farmer's house, the cat was awakened by a spark which instantly set his furry body brilliantly afire. Crazed with pain, the little animal dashed out of the house into the adjoining barn, where he darted into the midst of a hayrack, which immediately took fire.

The barn was soon a mass of roaring flames which were not long in leaping to the main dwelling. This building went up in smoke and flames in a short time and smaller adjacent structures went with it, completing the demolition of the farm.

Airmen to Photograph Capital's Traffic Jams

Washington.—Perplexed Washington officials have sought army air corps aid in solving the Capital's traffic and parking problems. Army airmen soon will soar over the congested Washington area photographing conditions as they exist in an effort to obtain data which will assist in rerouting traffic when new government buildings housing thousands of clerks are opened for business.

Henry's Lighter Works So Well It Burns Him

St. Louis, Mo.—Henry Hurminghouse, despite the thousands of jokes to the contrary, has a cigarette lighter that works. It works too well, in fact, for it set fire to Henry's coat sleeve and he suffered burns to his hand and arm, necessitating treatment at the hospital.

Not Worried

Morden, England. — Parrot disease brings no fear to the healthy centenarian parrot that has been a pet in the household of Mrs. Mary Martin for more than 50 years.

Lured by Bright Car; Wrecks It; Takes Life

Rochester, N. Y.—Pierre Decker admired a good-looking motor car. Leaping into an expensive roadster parked at his station, he drove it a short distance and crashed into an iron pole. Before spectators could reach him Decker shot and killed himself.

Keys Restored by Plane

Keys may be restored in very quick time by airplane—that is, if one has $250 to spend for it. So a traveler bound for Marseilles, France and the East learned recently. When his valet found the keys just after the man had left London, he hired an air taxi, which started two hours after the train. It reached Paris in time for the keys to be handed to the owner on his arrival at the station.

Plants May Safely Be Left in Sleeping Rooms

The belief that plants should be removed from sleeping rooms at night is entirely without foundation, according to Dr. A. F. Woods, director of scientific work in the United States Department of Agriculture. In many hospitals it is a regular practice to remove flowers and plants from the rooms at night because it is thought that they are in some way injurious to the patients.

Instead of plants being harmful, they are beneficial, says Doctor Woods. During the day they give off oxygen and moisture and take up carbon dioxide. At night these processes slow down and small amounts of carbon dioxide are given off, but a whole greenhouse full of plants would not give off enough carbon dioxide to injuriously affect the composition of the air.

The only occasion for removing plants and flowers from sleeping rooms is in the case of poisonous plants and in cases of people who suffer from hay fever. In these cases, explains Doctor Woods, plants and flowers to which the patient is sensitive should not be in the room at any time.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. They lunch together and recall their school days. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife.

CHAPTER III

Strange Country

It seemed a natural thing to Ernestine, however it seemed to the others, to waken on her marriage morning, in the little back bedroom of the tiny house where the Todds had lived all their married life. She was instantly wide awake and oriented. Perhaps it was the close tangle of Will's arms about her that made everything normal. Perhaps the delicious consciousness of new happiness had never entirely been lost in sleep. It did not matter at all about the family now.

Thinking of everything, Ernestine felt in her heart something new about Will. Added to her romantic love for him was something really more wonderful: a sound thing—respect. He had behaved admirably.

She was filled with a transport of tenderness, a strong conviction of having done well. Now, at last, life had begun for her. The chrysalis of girlhood was broken, and she was emerged into womanhood. She had become real. Always now, Will would be here beside her at the beginning of every day. Gravely she considered this, and sent up a wordless prayer that she might be a good wife.

Some one was moving about in the kitchen, and she heard the rattle of coals in the kitchen grate. How close and small the house was. Each sound came through the thin walls distinctly. Ernestine realized that she would have to close the window, and she essayed to rise. But at the first movement Will's arms tightened about her, though he did not waken. Ernestine extricated herself and got up with a swift strong movement.

"You have to work today, Will," she said in such a wifely tone that he laughed and looked up at her adoringly.

"I suppose now I've got somebody even worse than my mother about making me get up," he said, and then added, "Hey, wait, I'll get you some warm water," for Ernestine was washing her face in the basin that stood on a small washstand near the door.

But the water out of the pitcher, which had stood all night with the cold wind blowing through the open window upon it, was cold and invigorating.

Will shaved in the kitchen, and Ernestine could hear his voice, in an affectionate murmur, talking to some one. Before the small wavy mirror, she applied her make-up, looking at herself sharply. She arranged her sleek soft hair, proud of its thickness and texture. What was there in her face? Was she different this morning? She must not be different. She powdered again, and rubbed some of the scarlet off her lips, which were as red as cherries under the lip salve.

She made the bed neatly and set the room in order, packed up her belongings. The smell of coffee and the sound of the percolator made her feel faint. She had eaten nothing the evening before.

In the kitchen, Will's face turned on her, as bright as a triangular mirror with the sun on it. His mother was sitting by the kitchen table, with a warm shawl over her heavy dress. She could be up at times, and this morning she had made the effort. Ernestine went to Will's mother, and kissed her.

"I hope you didn't get up on our account, mother," she said gently, "but I'm glad you are better."

The woman looked up at Ernestine, her faded eyes, under the drooping brows, regarding this strange bird that had slipped so easily into her nest. How old she looked, thought Ernestine. She was a generation beyond mamma, for she was old with a gentle humility and meekness that Ernestine had never met before. There was not in her even the stubbornness that sometimes the meek can use so effectively.

Will's father Ernestine could understand. A carpenter, with a gift for woodcutting, he was a skilled and able workman and had a great pride in his trade. He was a tall, thin, stooped man, with a clean-shaved, heavily furrowed face and brightly saturnine, black eyes, which regarded Ernestine with a kind of grim humor. He made her realize without saying so, that he disapproved of their marriage as much as her people did, but that he was not the man to cry over spilled milk. They could count on his kindness.

At breakfast in the bright kitchen, Ernestine and Will made plans.

"You are welcome to stay here as long as you like," said Peter Todd, but the two shook their heads. They had already decided to be independent at once.

"We might just as well go today, and find a place to board until we can get an apartment," said Ernestine, looking very young and earnest. "I'll get my trunk from mamma's, as soon as we have found a residence. It's awfully good of you to want us here, but the house is small, and mother is really not well enough to have us."

Mrs. Todd said nothing, and Ernestine felt that she had never seen so dispirited a creature.

"If we get near town, mom," Will said, "we can save money on carfare. I know a place on Erie street one of the fellows told me about, where you can get a room and two meals, at a reasonable price, and it's in walking distance of the office. Anyhow, I think we ought to live alone."

"That's right," said Will's father. "It's the only way for young married people. If you need any money when you go to fixing up a flat I can lend you a little. I always have a few hundred dollars tucked away for emergencies," he explained to Ernestine. "I can let Will borrow, without interest, if he needs it. I own a house on Troy street that you could have if it wasn't leased. But the location is not good for you."

"We'll manage," said Will confidently, and Ernestine admired him.

They exchanged bright looks, and Mr. Todd said heartily:

"Well, come and visit us sometimes, anyhow."

It was soon time for them to go. Ernestine, in her squirrel coat and scarlet hat, bade her new relatives good-by. She felt that there were tears in the air, realized a little that these people were losing Will more definitely than she would ever be lost to her family. He was their only son, but they said good-by to him with quiet dignity. Ernestine admired their restraint, and was grateful for their good taste. They offered neither advice nor counsel, but allowed the young ones to go forth about their own affairs. The house on Erie street brought to Ernestine her first shock of reality. It was an ancient, smoke-blackened dwelling place, not far from the lake. Across the street from the house a five-story machine shop reverberated with activity. A secret-looking brown-stone house, with drawn blinds, stood on the corner. Ernestine felt that the apartment they spoke of so glibly was not so near. A sense of the irrevocable nature of the step she had taken swept over her. She was now Will's, and, as he had said to her father, his roof was her roof. His home was hers, and this was it. She had definitely abandoned her old way of life and set her feet in a strange country. The future was as remote from the past as though she were following him to a great distance.

"You Are Lovely," He Protested as Though She Had Denied It.

Hand in hand they ran up the stone stairs and met a small plump woman, called Mrs. Bennett, with whom Will discussed rooms and prices, while Ernestine stood to one side, burningly conscious of the gold band on her third finger.

* * * * * * *

Ernestine was too good a sport to bemoan their conspicuous lack of money. Fresh from the rigors of a fine school, it was not hard for her to accustom herself to simplicity. Will discovered that she had a most practical nature. The forces which had driven her into marriage had not all been romantic. In adjusting herself to living on Will's pay, she was able to exercise some of her native ingenuity and shrewdness, and in that capacity she found a certain pleasure. It was fun to put herself on a basis of having no money to spend and then discovering how much she had grown accustomed to spending in the months since she had left school. Her trunk was full of pretty clothes. It was an element she did not at first appreciate.

CHAPTER IV

A Party at Pastano's

Mr. Poole was having a party for Ernestine and Will, and, according to prearrangement, Ernestine slipped downstairs ahead of time to show herself to Mrs. Bennett. She could not help but be proud of the evening dress mamma had given her for Christmas, and which she had not worn before. The yellow chiffon lay about her slender limbs delicately, subtly. She appreciated the illusive cobwebby hose that had come with the dress and the gold cloth slippers. The string of small real pearls which had come to her from her Grandmother Langley's estate, the pearl ring which daddy had given her to match her necklace, were the last touches of a perfect toilet. Will had appreciated her, this evening, his fine eyes glowing with admiration.

"You are lovely," he protested, as though she had denied it, and she swung herself about in the narrow room and gave him a languishing, mocking look. But she went down the carpeted stairs in a glow, her squirrel coat over her arm.

Mrs. Bennett got up with an admiring exclamation when Ernestine closed the door behind her. The latter advanced to the center of the room and pirouetted on her toes. A little, round, weary body, with tired eyes beneath a fringe of gray hair, Mrs. Bennett had long outworn personal egotism and was generous with praise and sympathy.

"Youth is the time to live, darling," she said to Ernestine. "My life is an old story, but you are young and glowing, and things are happening to you. It is better for you to have your hard times now, and grow old rich and strong, than to have the hardships in old age, as I have had them. But tell me, aren't you excited to be having a birthday party given in your honor by a great cartoonist?"

Ernestine laughed.

"He only wants to be nice to Will. He thinks it will please Will, and of course it does."

Mrs. Bennett maintained a discreet silence, and Ernestine turned to the mirror over a chest of drawers and looked at her reflection, running her hands over her sleek soft hair. She was a little thinner than she had been when she was married, and her eyes were big and dark in the delicate whiteness of her face. She was lovely with a breath-taking quality, her face shining with an inner spiritual excitement. It seemed to her as she stared that she looked too happy, too thrilled for every-day use. She must learn to dissemble.

"Sometimes, darling," Mrs. Bennett chided Ernestine gently, "I think you fail to realize what an effect you have on the people here—on the men. You are so different from the other girls these boys know. You bloom. You wear the face of love. It's hard on them. I want you to be very wise with Mr. Poole. It would be an easy thing for you to disrupt his friendship with Will. Will admires him, and his patronage means so much, just now."

"Will won't be jealous of any attention I pay to Mr. Poole, or that he pays to me," Ernestine said indifferently, "if that's what you mean. It won't hurt Mr. Poole to admire me. He's a nice old man, and he loves to admire women, and men, too, as far as that goes. It's part of his big heart, Will says. Anyhow, Will wouldn't be jealous of me—now." Her small face was so shining that Mrs. Bennett threw her advising instinct away with a gesture and came and kissed her young friend.

"Have a lovely time, darling. Pastano's has the distinction of being the very toughest place in all Chicago. It is beautiful, and not so dangerous as Mr. Pastano likes people to think. He is really very careful about the police. And then, too, you will be with Mr. Poole, who is a close friend of Ruby."

"Crackers" First Baked by Massachusetts Man

As far as any authentic record shows, the first cracker bakery in the United States was that of Theodore Pearson at Newburyport, Mass. He began business in 1792 and his specialty was a large cracker which was known both as a "pilot" and as ship's bread. Joshua Brent was Pearson's first great business rival. He erected an oven for cracker baking at Milton, Mass., in 1801. He was succeeded by many other cracker manufacturers. The crackers were first made by hand. During the years between 1840 and 1865 the mechanical process employed in making crackers underwent a remarkable development. Prior to 1840 the use of machinery in the cracker-making process was practically unknown. Even then the dough was still worked up and put into the oven one piece at a time. Machinery was finally invented which took the dough after it had been prepared by hand and rolled it into a thin sheet which, as it passed over a sort of endless belt, was cut by a stamping machine which works automatically.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

France Rightly Claims Bonaparte as Her Son

Napoleon Bonaparte was French because he was born of Italian parents on French soil and reared there. Corsica, after its many vicissitudes, became French. The story of the island, told briefly, is that it was settled by the Iberians who came from Spain; the Ligurians who came from Gaul or Italy; the Romans who colonized Mariana near the mouth of the Golo, and the Sylla who settled Aleria near the mouth of the Tavignano. Rome Latinized the barbarians. Later, the Vandals, the Byzantines, the Goths, the Saracens, and last of all, the Italians came in the order specified. Of the Italians, the Pisans came first in 1077; the Genoese followed three centuries later in 1347. Owing to this diversity of peoples, Corsica was a constant state of turmoil, one race constantly fighting with another. Tired of these disturbances, the queen of the Ligurians sold the island to Louis XV in 1768, since which time, with the exception of during two futile risings, and an invasion by the English (1793-1796), it has remained a French posession.—Literary Digest.

Poor Father

Mrs. George Creel, the former popular actress, Blanche Bates, holds the modern mother responsible for the bad upbringing and extravagance of modern youth.

"I do not blame the fathers," said Mrs. Creel, "because they are hard workers and it is all they can do to provide the expensive material comforts a modern family exacts. Nowadays all the training a family gets must come from the mother, and she isn't doing her job conscientiously.

"I lose patience with the modern mother," continued Mrs. Creel, "but I feel sorry for the modern father. One of these poor souls, referring to himself, said to me bitterly the other day:

THE DECLARATION

The Nation has another birthday, the one hundred and fifty-fourth to be exact. The old form of celebration has passed. Even in the remnants of it, the shooting of firecrackers, the modernists have departed from that bedlam which greeted the midnight hour, the third of July, or ushered in the dawn. These years the shooting, where it is permitted and where it is forbidden, starts days ahead of the fourth, and is maintained without rhyme or reason and without patriotic purpose.

If the "safe and sane" idea has any unfortunate consequences it is that with the banning of dangerous fireworks seems also to have come a ban on the more sensible forms of patriotic remembrance of the nations birth.

In the old days the reading of the Declaration of Independence was a regular part of every Fourth of July celebration. The town's leading orator, warm but resplendent in frock coat and top hat, would mount the flag-draped rostrum, clear his throat magnificently and fling forth the words that once told the world of the defiance of the American colonies.

This event, sandwiched in between a selection by the band and a patriotic recitation by some harassed schoolboy, was always greeted with tumultuous applause; but it is to be doubted if the listeners ever really gave very much thought to the sense of the words they were hearing. And that is a pity. There are few things this nation could do with better profit.

There has been much loose talk lately about "sticking to the principles of the founders of the country." Fine; let's do it; by all means. But first let's see just what those principles were. We may be a bit surprised, but that will be good for us.

One of the best ways to go about it is to re-read the Declaration of Independence. It would be a good thing if every adult citizen could take the time to do that, pondering on the implications of the documents statements as he did so. The nation could not celebrate its one hundred and fifty-fourth birthday in a better way.

Milnor Makes Statement

The following statement was issued in Chicago last Thursday by George S. Milnor, President and General Manager of the Grain Stabilization Corporation:

"The Grain Stabilization Corporation discontinued the sale of wheat when the new crop began moving with the exception of a few small lots to millers who were unable to take care of their immediate needs from any other source.

"While the visible supply of wheat in this country is somewhat in excess of that of a year ago— a fact grain traders are emphasizin—the amount of 1929 wheat withdrawn from the marbet by The Grain Stablization Corporation is approximately 3 times the amount of that amount of that increase, leaving the amount of wheat on the market substantially below last year's figure.

"The grain trade need have no apprehension of competition from the wheat held by the Grain Stabilization Carporation during the coming months when farmers will be moving the 1930 crop to market unless in the meantime prices rise to the level at which purchases are make. In no event will this 1929 stabilization wheat be thrown on the market in a way to depress the prices."

Every One Has Need Of The Church

It matters but little what the critics of the church have to say about it, every human being in this country or any other country as to that matter, needs the church and cannot afford to live on the outside of the circle of its influence. Indeed, the privilege of retiring at night for our rest is due to the power and influence of the life of Christ in the world and the blessing that comes to mankind because certain ones are yet true to Him and His gospel. No man lives unto himself and but for the influence of the church in the world this country would be a howling wilderness. Therefore let us take a common sense view of the matter and place ourselves under the influence of the church of the living God.

H. E. Hanson and family, who have been engaged in farming about five miles southwest of Holt the past few years, left on Tuesday by car for Bellingham, Washington to make their home.

The Hanson family have a host of friends and relatives here who regret to see them leave our community and who wish them good luck on their trip and success in their venture.

Automobile Collission

Rosewood, Minn. July 1.—A Ford roadster driven by Thor Sevaldson of this place, collided with an Oakland occupied by Martin Bothun of Thief River Falls, at the intersection of the Marshall county road D and the Rosewood road north of this place on Sunday evening, and three of the Oakland passengers were hurt and bruised. The worst of being Mrs. Bothun who who broke several ribs, received a nasty leg gash and a bruise of the head. Mr. Bothun and another lady passenger were also bruised.

The Ford passengers consisting of Sevaldson, John Thompson and two girl friends escaped uninjured. Both cars were badly smashed. The Ford came from a side road and the driver was blinded by the evening sun and did not see the racing Oaklund coming from west.

County Fair Was Good

Several people from here attended the Marshall County fair at Warren the forepart of the week. The exhibits at the fair were good. Some very fine horses and cattle were shown in that division.

The free acts were of high quality, the actors doing some real snappy and funny stunts. A very good bunch of horses were entered in the races who showed plenty speed. The Fair in general was was clean and up-to-date.

Rev. L. M. Redal conducted conducted funeral servicess for Norman Torgerson at Silver rreek on Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Redal and children, Mr. and Mrs O. H. Nohre and Mrs. Iver Larson from here attended the funeral.

Norman Torgerson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Torgerson of Silver Creek community about nine miles east of Holt, was struck by lightning on Wednesday, and instantly killed. He was helping his father and Oscar Guttrud repair a tractor near the barn when the lightning struck the roof and followed the cables down to where they were working, killing him and knocking the others unconcious.

Lightning destroyed the big stock barn and chicken house on the Mrs. Matt Larson farm during the heavy rain storm last Wednesday afternoon. Leonard Larson who is renting the farm, lost several sets of harness and about a hundred chickens.

Everything was partially covered by insurance, according to Mr. Larson.

Mrs. Matt Larson intends to build a new modern barn later this summer.

The Dairy Cow--

I am the dairy cow. Men call me the foster mother of mankind. I wish to be comfortable. I like shade in my pastures on hot summer days. I need a warm barn in the winter where I can eat my fill and lie down in contentment to rest. I must have fresh air, pure water, and salt. They are so cheap and easy to supply. I like to be clean. I love to be cared for gently and regularly. I must have food and plenty of it. Give me all the bright alfalfa hay and good corn silage I can eat and all the grain my production shows I need, and I will make money for you. If you do not do these things for me, I cannot do what you expect of me. I am only a cow.

4th of July Safety Rules

Here are a few safety hints that are espially applicable over the Fourth of July to Sunday period; when all the highways will be crowded with people hurrying to go somewhere.

Keep sober—Gasoline and liquor make a dangerous mixture.

Keep on the right side of the highway, except when passing.

Do not pass other cars unless you have ample clear space ahead.

Do not pass other cars at curves and intersections where the view is obscured.

Do not pass other cars on the crest of a hill.

When parking, be sure your car is entirely off the traveled portion of the highway.

See that your lights are all O. K. Have lights visible front and rear when parking.

Do not be in too big a hurry. Slow down when going through cities and villages. Watch for pedestrians crossing the highway and watch for other cars at intersections.

Keep your car under control at all times so that you can stop in the clear space ahead.

The state highway department has sent out these rules for publication with the hopes that people will read them and also obey them. We do not like to make mentions in our next issue about some friend getting killed in a 4th of July smashup.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Johnson returned home on Sunday morning from Clan William, Manitoba, Canada, where they spent a week visiting with relatives.

Mr. Johnson reported plenty of rain for the crops in that part of the country.

Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Heinze returned home on Wednesday from Kalstad where they held a three weeks tent meeting campaign.

AMERICA

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died,
Land of the pilgrims pride,
From every mountain side
Let freedom ring.

My native country, thee
Land of the noble, free,
Thy name I love:
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills;
My heart with rapture thrills
Like that above.

Let music swell the breeze,
And ring from all the trees
Sweet freedom's song;
Let mortal tongues awake;
Let all that breathe partake;
Let rocks their silence break,
The sound prolong.

Our father's God! to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To thee we sing:
Long may our land be bright
With Freedom's holy light;
Protect us by Thy light,
Great God our King.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. They lunch together and recall their school days. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood.

Will was at the door, grinning at them, his mobile mouth twisted into a kind of sardonic look that he wore at times, and that made him like his father. He had a great deal of poise, Ernestine often thought, considering his youth and scanty advantages. Marriage had changed him very little. He was, perhaps, somewhat more inflammable, but he took Ernestine and the life with her most naturally and without self-consciousness.

They went on to Pastano's, entered an unmarked doorway and climbed broad wooden steps with double doors at the top which opened upon light, music, heat and the sound of happy voices.

The big room was airy, its excellent ventilation a surprise to Ernestine, and an important factor in every one's pleasure and good appetite. Mr. Poole came to meet them, and Ernestine gave him her hand and her nicest schoolgirl smile. She wished Mrs. Bennett had not said anything to her about this man. She did not have to heed any warnings except those her husband gave her!

Following Mr. Poole among the tables, Ernestine thought about the many things Will had told her of this man, until she felt that she knew him perfectly. His remarkable gifts, his value to his paper, his carelessness of himself, his small vanities and prejudices, his indolence and drunkenness and his great charm, she knew. He was as natural and straightforward with every one as a child with other children. Yet he possessed also the authority and autocratic manner of the man of established reputation. He drew Ernestine's hand within the curve of his arm, and led her to a table reserved for their party.

All the places were filled except theirs, and the men rose to greet Ernestine. There was only one other woman, Mrs. Wiston, the wife of the syndicate editor of the Sun, a small beautiful woman with the face of a siren who can never forget her role. She had been married twice before she had met Wiston, and Ernestine knew that back in New England were the wife and child Wiston had set aside for her. Ernestine was conscious of the indignation common to married women against such an impostor.

Wiston himself, a tall academic man with a ribbon to his glasses, Ernestine had met at the office, and John Tucker, called Tommy by every one, who was Will's rival for honors in the art room. The third man who was presented to her Ernestine did not know and she failed to catch his name. He was a small powerful looking individual, with a dark mustache, bright gray eyes and a vain and elaborate manner. The other two men, Underwood and Harrison, were from the Sun staff, and happy to be at any party, any time, any place.

They all sat down, Mr. Poole with one of the women on either side, and Tommy Tucker next to Ernestine, the pompous little man next to Mrs. Wiston, with the others grouped about the big table. Ernestine by now had forgotten her self-consciousness and became radiantly happy. She wished Will were beside her. She was only a half, and Will was the other half, and he ought always to be beside her, breathing as she breathed, turning as she turned. The idea delighted her, and she laughed at herself but felt still a deep joy in their unity.

Mr. Poole turned to Ernestine and told her softly that her youth and beauty were sweeter than sweet night itself. He took his glass in his hand.

"And more intoxicating," he said, "than this for which I have wasted half my life and most of my talents."

Ernestine, looking up in his kind face, knew instantly that in spite of his flowery words, and in spite of Mrs. Bennett's conventional fears, this great man had no predatory impulses toward her. He knew that she was deeply in love with Will. But to watch her, to speak to her, to listen to her voice, gave him pleasure. It was all he would ever want of her. Her instinct in this matter proved true, during the years of Will's association with Mr. Poole.

"And what have you two young pieces of impudence been doing since last I saw you?"

"We have dined in state at mamma's," said Ernestine, smiling mischievously. "Will missed the significance of it entirely. Papa has, under duress, forgiven him. He offered Will a job in his office."

"And what does Will say?"

"He didn't even pay any attention to it. He just said that he was satisfied with the job he had, thanks just the same, and went on talking to mamma."

Mr. Poole laughed with delight. "Doesn't he know what papa wants?"

"I don't know whether he does or not. But anyhow, papa knows that, now he has decided to forgive Will, Will doesn't intend to let it make any difference. Papa really would like to let us struggle along. He feels pretty disappointed in me. But mamma can't bear it. She is determined to take care of us, whether we will or no."

"But how can she, if Will does not change his employment?"

Ernestine's face grew firm. "She can't. I won't let her. I've made up my mind to have nothing but what Will can give me. I don't mind being poor."

"You must resist poverty," Mr. Poole said. "It is the deadly enemy of marriage."

Ernestine's small face was scornful. Poverty was not so black as it was painted, she observed. He looked at her.

"You do not believe me? Wait, then, and see."

"But we are poor now. It's fun to be poor."

"You—poor!" His amazement was so genuine that Ernestine looked at him in surprise. "My darling child," he reasoned with her, "you don't know what the word means. You two—still in the flush of first love, without children, without a house to burden you, without a responsibility! One bed will do for both of you, one room will hold two hearts together. You are well, you are eager, you are fed and clothed and housed. You have a trunk full of pretty clothes, an adoring mamma begging to do things for you. You do not know the cold and odious breath of poverty at all. I could show you its dark face: slums, little children with great heads and emaciated bodies, houses held together by strings—shambles! I'll show you pale girls, and prostitution, and bare shelves, and empty cupboards, and pride bent double. Lack is a cruel witch. Pray that you may never know her."

"Yet you just told me to wait!"

"Ah, but that was nonsense. Life will never be cruel to you."

They ate the excellent food put before them, and talked, the men arguing among themselves about a technicality in some one's work, Will and Underwood and Mr. Wiston deep in it, Mr. Poole and Tommy competing for Ernestine's attention. Presently Tommy was drawn into the men's talk, and Mr. Poole leaned close to Ernestine and became very confidential.

"Will tells me you are going to have a child. I think that is the last perfection. I always knew that he was gifted, but his marriage with you has established the certainty of his future. Such things are not accidents. He is the chosen of the gods, or one of their finest gifts would not be his. He has all the elements of success. And a wife and children will do the forging."

Ernestine's cheeks burned. She could not understand how Will could have told his still precious secret to Mr. Poole. But she exercised great self-command to be quiet and responsive to him. He went on praising Will, and assuring her of the brightness of his future, until, after a little, she forgot her confusion and told him her own feelings about Will.

The party grew very gay, and Ernestine joined in the general happiness. Without warning the tight little man with the powerful shoulders was on his feet. He bowed to Ernestine, and he bowed around the room, and everywhere hands began to clap and there were shouts of joyous approval at sight of him.

With a gesture indescribably complacent, he held up his hand for silence and got it instantly. Standing so, his chest pushed out like a pouter pigeon's, his body rocking back on his heels, his napkin in his hand, which he flourished from time to time, he began to sing.

It was Siegfried's cry of joy, when he passed through the flames and found the sleeping Brunhilde. Ernestine recognized it, as she recognized the man. He was Mostane, one of the world's greatest tenors. And she had criticized his manner! But now, all else was swept away, and she lived only through her ears, on which fell each perfect note. She knew in delightful anticipation what his golden voice would do next, and her heart soared with his voice.

He stopped abruptly, rocked a moment on his heels and then gently, softly, poignantly he sang without accompaniment:

Still wie die Nacht
Tief wie das Meer
Sol deine Liebe sein.

The tears rained down Ernestine's cheeks. He sat down in a storm of excited applause. Ernestine could not stop crying. She leaned on Will's shoulder, for he came and sat beside her and put his arm about her. When at last she could breathe steadily she rose and went around the table to Mostane and took his fat face in her two hands and kissed him.

There was a cheer from all the tables, and Will gleamed at her with approval for her spontaneity.

"Nothing else was adequate," declared Mr. Poole.

The hours passed in a trance. The patronage in the dining room changed, grew noisier, more turbulent. Girls came and went on the stage, and danced and sang, and twinkled pretty feet, and flicked bare knees. It was all an unreal blending of sight and sound and color, and Ernestine's heart was far away, in some lonely space with Will. Her being still trembled with that last swelling note. Dimly in her mind she felt an awakening of artistic comprehension, a spiritual understanding of the strength and power of perfect performance. Will had latent in him some such force, but it was far from impulses to such finished authority. Her thought was not that clear, but groping.

It was time to go home, and Ernestine wanted Will to take her away from the others. But she saw that Mr. Poole was not himself at all any longer. Will always took him home, from the office, from such affairs as this, to his flat. Ernestine felt that she could not bear to be parted from Will tonight.

She became conscious of a man standing behind her, a little to one side, regarding her gravely, quietly. She glanced up at him but did not know him. He was a huge man, with a great dark head and clear dark skin. He wore a sack suit, and his narrow tie glittered with a ruby of enormous size, set in a gold circle. On one of his big brown hands, which were covered with coarse black hair, was another such gem. Ernestine remembered with a feeling of faintness all the wild stories she had heard about Pastano's place being so disorderly. Will, at least, was sober, as he always was.

Mr. Poole now saw the stranger, greeted him and called him to the table.

"And this is Mrs. Todd, my young friend's wife. You know Will, of course, and the others. Ernestine, this is Ruby Pastano, jewel merchant, ward boss, and the owner of this dive. A bad man—a terrible man. Shake hands with him."

Mr. Poole was enjoying himself and looked up at Pastano with glee. Mr. Pastano did not smile. He still fixed on Ernestine that queer solemn look. He bowed above her.

"Sit down, Ruby, sit down!" commanded Mr. Poole thickly, and motioned for a waiter to bring a chair, which was produced instantly.

Mr. Pastano sat down between Mr. Poole and Ernestine, and she felt his gravity spreading about the table, so that all were a little quieted.

"This is my birthday," Ernestine explained graciously. "I am twenty-one years old today, and Mr. Poole was kind enough to have a party for me. Now that you have come, it is more charming."

"Your voice—" he said, his own tone soft and silky. "Where are you born?"

She told him, naively, the address of her mother's house.

Odd Beliefs Take Hold of Salt-Water Sailors

Sailors and superstition have always been closely allied writes Stanley Paul in Pearson's Weekly. Sailors attribute many virtues even to the saltiness of sea water. In Brittany the fisherfolk believe that the best treatment for a cold in the head is to drink a glass of sea water in the morning and evening. In various parts of the world sea water is much used as a lotion in cases of local inflammation, stiffness of the joints, and spine disease. Many old sailors still maintain that the sound of the waves foretells certain events. Thus, on the coast of Cork, when the waves are producing an extraordinary roaring noise it is taken as predicting the death of a great man. There are still apparently sailors who believe in modern Jonahs—that a tempest is due to the presence on board ship of some one who has something on his conscience. The story is told of a Russian captain who quite recently went to sea without paying his debts. A terrible gale arose, and the vessel got into such difficulties that the captain saw no other way out than that of throwing the box containing his cash into the sea. It nearly broke his heart as he dropped his every penny over the side, but the storm abated almost immediately.

Arizona's Famous Desert

The Painted desert lies along the Colorado river in Arizona. It is remarkable for the bright red, brown, blue, purple, yellow and white of the sandstones, shales and clays. It is the famous petrified forest of Mesozoic time.

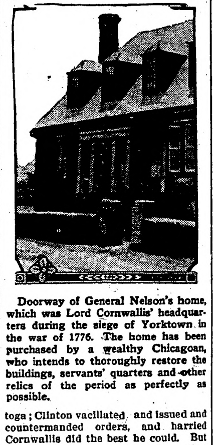
Where Revolution Came to Its Glorious Finish

If Germain had done that; if Burgoyne had done this, if Clinton had done something else, and Cornwallis had been left free to do what he deemed wise in the circumstances, there would, in truth, be no reason for the pilgrim to historic shrines to tarry in Yorktown, because the McClellan siege of April, 1865, was inconsequential.

But Germain ran true to form; Burgoyne followed instructions at Saratoga; Clinton vacillated, and issued and countermanded orders, and harried Cornwallis did the best he could. But it wasn't good enough, and so that quaint hamlet on the York river bulks large to those who tour the tidewater country of Virginia.



Doorway of General Nelson's home, which was Lord Cornwallis' headquarters during the siege of Yorktown in the war of 1776. The home has been purchased by a wealthy Chicagoan, who intends to thoroughly restore the buildings, servants' quarters and other relics of the period as perfectly as possible.

The community had its inception in 1691, when Benjamin Reade, who inherited the land from his grandfather, was ordered to sell 50 acres for a town site. In 1698, Yorktown became the county seat, and the oldest house there, according to local chronicles, was built one year later, and still is standing.

There also is the oldest customs house in the United States, built in 1715, the Moore house, where Cornwallis signed the surrender, October 18, 1781, and the Nelson house with Revolutionary cannon balls still sticking in its walls.

But outside the village and on the way to Hampton, just a bit off the main road and alongside of the National cemetery, is that which imparts a thrill to him who pays his first visit to the spot.

Here, in a field perhaps a mile from the inner fortifications of the British, and after a seven days' siege, Cornwallis, by the hand of General O'Hara, delivered his sword as a token of surrender to General Lincoln, whom Washington had designated to accept it. Perhaps it was a coincidence, perhaps not, but at the surrender of Charleston, Lincoln had handed his sword to this same British earl.

Where Paine, Great Lover of Liberty, Passed Away

An old frame building at 309 Bleecker street in New York city, which is reputed to have stood there for more than 125 years, once was the rooming house of Mme. Bonneville, where Thomas Paine spent his last days.

When clergymen visited Paine and sought to convince him of the error of his beliefs, Mme. Bonneville is reputed to have met them at the door and refused to admit them. Another story is to the effect that while Mme. Bonneville was liberal in her views, she still was influenced by pressure brought to bear upon her by the church for harboring Paine in her household, and she took another house. This version contends that Paine moved voluntarily to 59 Grove street, her new location, in order to spare his landlady from further annoyance on the part of well-meaning clergymen. At any rate, Paine died a month later in his new quarters at the age of seventy-two.

Cavalry Had Its Part in Revolutionary War

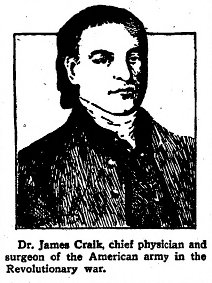
One of the latest discoveries concerning the War of the Revolution is that imposing cavalry forces were among the factors that won independence for the Colonies. The general belief was that ragged, uniformed infantry waged the struggle.

Robert W. Chambers, preparing historical data for a fiction serial in Woman's Home Companion, found that four regiments of cavalry were actively engaged. The light horsemen were gorgeously arrayed, with leather or steel helmets heavily ridged with fur or feathers or profusely plumed with red, white or black horsehair. At Cowpens and Eutaw there were pitched cavalry battles, wherein the troops operated with such success that many military observers believe that more use of the cavalry would have shortened the war by many months, if not years.

Among Chambers' other discoveries were the facts that the colors buff and blue, usually supposed to have been those of the Continentals, were seldom seen except in the uniforms of certain officers. The Colonial soldiers were uniformed according to the designs of their governments but it was seldom that they fought in homespun.

Nation Slow to Honor Memory of Doctor Craik

After more than 100 years a fitting tribute to the services to his country was paid Dr. James Craik of Port Tobacco, Md., by the erection of an imposing granite monument over the grave of this famous patriot of the Continental army, in the burying ground of the old Presbyterian Meeting house in Alexandria, Va.



Dr. James Craik, chief physician and surgeon of the American army in the Revolutionary war.

Doctor Craik was appointed chief physician and surgeon of the Continental army and is the man who attended George Washington on his deathbed. Doctor Craik's grave was forgotten and unmarked for many years in the weed-grown burying ground of the quaint old church in Alexandria. Finally a small brass tablet was provided by the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, but through an error it was placed in the wrong location. Now the grave has been suitably marked by a monument by a committee of his descendants, headed by Mrs. John D. Patten of Washington, D. C.

Keep Independence Day

Citizens of Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, of which Charlotte is the seat, celebrated Independence day May 20.

On May 20, 1775, so North Carolina historians affirm, farmers of Mecklenburg county signed a declaration of independence from British rule. Local historians contend this was the first such declaration to be made in America.

The Town Was Money Mad

By Adelaide D. Huff

WATERTOWN was one of those tiny mountain villages so common in the Smokies. A post office, a couple of general merchandise stores, two or three country boarding houses that took summer visitors, a handful of struggling mountain families, magnificent scenery.

The few summer people who came to the boarding houses were almost as poor in their way as the mountaineers were in theirs. Stenographers they were, and clerks with two weeks off and scarcely enough money to finance even so short vacation.

"If somebody would come along and put up a decent hotel here," they would say, "he could make a real thing of this place. There's fish in the river and good views, but as it is nobody can stand the place. This is my last trip here."

But, of course, it wasn't. The same old crowd came back each year because it was cheap. The country folk knew nothing but privation and skimping, skimping, skimping. They raised a little food on their rocky, hilly pieces of land and occasionally drove a cow or calf some forty miles to the nearest city to be sold for a few dollars. The older folk were inured to the conditions, the younger ones who could, left, the others became weary in the futile struggle for existence.

"It don't seem right," said Joe Wilson desperately to his fiance. "When a man's willin' to work he ought to have the chance. There ain't nothin' I can do to make some money so's we could get married. Seems like I can't stand it any more, honey. If I could only leave home like Bill and John, but there's Ma flat on her back and she can't stand not to be turned every few hours. She gets to hurtin' so."

Mary crept a little closer to her lover and her grip tightened over his big rough hand.

"It'll work out all right some way, don't you reckon? We'll just wait till somethin' turns up."

"But Mary, I can't. I'm plumb wore out with waitin'!" His voice broke on the words and suddenly he rose, caught her to him almost roughly, held her for a moment in a frenzy of despair then let her go.

"Honey, it's drivin' me crazy. I ain't comin' back till I can marry you," he said as he turned and walked swiftly away.

As she stood there, straining her eyes to see in the dim light a swift loneliness swept over her and a sense of irrevocable loss. If he could only have understood that she would rather be hungry all the time and watch over his old mother and turn her and feed her—anything rather than to be left without him. It was like dying yet still being alive.

As fall came and the long winter set in Mary grew restless and weary with waiting.

And all the time without a single glimpse of Joe.

Then at last came spring. Softly, swiftly it stole over the mountains, touched the bare trees with its magic wand. With spring came some strange men to Watertown. They surveyed and measured and dickered and bought. Joe's little place was in the tract they wanted so they bought it, too, and gave him more money for it than he had ever seen in his whole life before. The day he sold he rushed up the mountain side to Mary's little cabin and, breathless, he caught her in his arms in an ecstacy of joy. "Mary, it's comin', it's comin'! he exclaimed wildly.

Mary had no idea what was coming, but her fiance's joy was contagious and the mere sight of him was enough to make her happy after the months of hopeless waiting. In a moment he had told her all and had gone rushing back down the hill, leaving her standing in the doorway, bewildered, speechless, her sudden happiness almost suffocating her.

On the heels of the buyers came huge shovels that bit at the earth like giant monsters. All day long they roared and screamed for weeks. These at last gave way to the bricklayers and carpenters and by the end of summer an enormous building stood where last year had been only trees and a tiny house or two. And across the brick building was a sign which read: United Blanket Factory No. 4.

Joe worked from the first day, faithfully, happily; digging dirt, carrying brick, mixing concrete. A new purpose could be seen in his face and a new hope was in his heart. In early September, he and Mary were married. Later he got a permanent job in the boiler room while Mary carded in one of the big airy rooms upstairs with dozens of other girls from the hills. With part of the money they made, they hired an old woman to take care of Joe's mother. The two country stores put in a stock of silk underwear, cosmetics, and cheap silk dresses. Youth primped and laughed and loved.

Prosperity had come to the hills and with it new life and joy and happiness to the country folk. Joe and Mary sang as they went home from work together—home to one of the little mill houses that had electric lights and running water.

But people passing through on the trains grumbled and said:

"They ruined a beautiful summer resort when they made Watertown into a mill village."

BEST MEDICINE SHE KNOWS OF

Says "Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound"

Ft. Meyers, Fla.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine I ever heard of. Before my baby was born I was always weak and rundown. I had nervous spells until I couldn't do my housework. A lady told me about the Vegetable Compound and it strengthened me. Beside my own housework I am now working in a restaurant and I feel better than I have in three years. I hope my letter will be the means of leading some other woman to better health."—Mrs. Bertha Rivers, 2914 Polk St., Ft. Meyers, Florida.

ABED 40 YEARS AS RESULT OF VOW

Quarrel Over Will Sends Woman to Couch.

Council Bluffs, Iowa.—Mrs. Mary Wickham of Tipton, Iowa, whose will leaving all her property to the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Watch Tower and Tract society has just been filed for probate, spent forty years in bed as the result of a vow.

The property came to Mrs. Wickham on the death of her husband, and it was because Mr. Wickham had not willed to her all his property that she took to her bed and remained there.

Forty-five years ago Mrs. Wickham came from England to marry Mr. Wickham. She asked him to make a will leaving her all his property. He refused, and his will left her only the legal one-third of his estate.

The controversy grew warm. One day, at the close of a particularly violent quarrel, Mrs. Wickham said: "I'm going to bed, and I'm going to stay there until you give in."

"Well, you'll stay there the balance of your life," answered the husband.

Mrs. Wickham went to bed that same day. The controversy continued for twenty-five years. Then Wickham died. Mrs. Wickham did not attend the funeral. She stayed in bed.

Once Mrs. Wickham decided to get up and accept her dower share of the estate. But she discovered that during the years she had spent in bed her limbs had withered. She was unable to walk. She got back into bed and stayed there.

During the first twenty years Mrs. Wickham was cared for by neighbors, who used to come in every day. Then she turned against these friends and refused to have anything to do with them. After the death of Wickham she hired a companion.

There are no near relatives, and it is unlikely that the will giving her share of the estate to the Watch Tower and Tract society will be contested.

Coventry Irate; Other Towns to Filch Godiva

Coventry, England.—Some one is trying to filch Lady Godiva and the folks here are mighty angry.

Years ago, so the story goes, the fair damsel clad only in long tresses, rode a white horse through the streets of this country village to free the citizens from debt.

Coventry, it must be remembered, takes her heroes and heroines seriously as well as conservatively. So they celebrate her memory every 10 years or so.

All was well until last year Dudley, a neighboring town, held a Godiva procession, declaring the comely rider once owned property there.

The good people here gasped. Now it is announced Shrewsbury and Manchester also will have Godiva processions this summer.

Their reasons, if any, are not known.

"Imitation may be the sincerest form of flattery, but surely these towns have some historical episode which they could reproduce," said H. Keith Moulton, secretary of the Coventry hospital carnival committee, which arranged the last Godiva celebration here.

Frenchman Sues Rival Who Evaded Marriage

Paris.—A French banker who agreed to divorce his middle-aged wife in order that she could marry a handsome Russian of whom she had become enamored, and then became angry when the young lover failed to carry out his part of the contract, has filed a suit in the Paris courts against his rival, claiming $15,000 damages.

The woman had confessed to her husband that unless she could marry the boy her life would be ruined.

"I am heartbroken," replied the banker, but he added philosophically: "If this is the way you feel, I suppose there is nothing to do but divorce. God forbid that I should shatter your life."

The banker started divorce proceedings and joined hilariously in the betrothal party, but the young Russian went to Stresa, and when his fiancee begged him to return to the Riviera to talk over their approaching marriage his reply was "Nitchevo," which means "Nothing doing."

Find May Is Bad Month for Shippers of Hogs

East Lansing, Mich.—More hogs die en route to terminal markets during the month of May than in any other month of the year, records of the condition of live stock at the terminals show. A great deal of this loss can be eliminated if the proper precautions are taken when the hogs are loaded.

Back Seat Driving on Coaches Approved

London.—The chairman of a London long-distance motor coach firm believes that back-seat driving is conducive to safety. He has ordered the installation of electric buttons in the two back seats. The passengers are requested to ring the bell in case a vehicle is close behind.

'CAT EYE' ANNIE SAWS WAY OUT OF PRISON

Notorious Burglar Escapes From Auburn.

Auburn, N. Y.—Cat Eye Annie Lillian McDowell—forty-eight—notorious burglar and one of the most elusive characters of the underworld when outside prison walls, escaped from the Auburn women's prison, but prison authorities are doing their best to lock her up again. Just three weeks after declining to try for freedom with two other inmates who were captured, Annie sawed her way out of her cell and escaped.

Cat Eye, who got her nickname from a peculiar cast to one eye, sawed through the wood around the lock in her cell door and got over the walls in a manner which left prison officials puzzled several hours afterward.

Every Nook Searched.

Only a few days ago she told Warden Frank L. Heacox that Sally Joyce Richards, blond bandit of Buffalo, and Amelia Bascom, badger girl of Brooklyn, approached her to get her to join them in their contemplated escape of April 28. Mystified at the time by this revelation, and puzzled that Cat Eye had turned down the opportunity, prison officials now see her refusal to escape at that time based on a desire to play her old lone wolf part.

At first it was believed that she must still be within the walls, but an extended search of every nook and corner failed to reveal her. Immediately the hunt was started outside the walls by troopers and police throughout the vicinity. Cities throughout the state were asked to be on the lookout for her.

On a previous escape, after 26 hours of freedom, she was found rain-soaked and exhausted, hidden under a pile of straw a mile and a half east of Weedsport, eight miles north of Auburn.

Nearly Died of Pneumonia.

A clew to her whereabouts was provided on that occasion by word of residents in that vicinity who said they had seen a woman near there acting strangely. She had gone without food for 24 hours.

Due to exposure she contracted pneumonia and nearly died. After her recovery she was taken to Matteawan state hospital in the belief that she was becoming insane. Subsequently she was returned here.

The description to the police said she probably wore a blue striped skirt, a blue sweater, black shoes and stockings, and a light top coat and brown fedora. She was described as 5 feet 4 inches tall, weighing 120 pounds, with medium chestnut hair and light complexion.

Working in the dead of night on her previous escape here, with no tools but a short iron window prop and a spoon, Cat Eye Annie, virtually under the eyes of guards and prison matrons, dug a hole through the brick wall of the cell and, with the aid of a plank taken from the greenhouse, scaled a low wall and slid down an improvised blanket rope to freedom. Packages of mortar and bits of broken brick were found stuffed in a mattress upon which she had pretended to sleep at night.

Her escape was made in the early morning on that occasion.

Style for English Girls Set by Baby Princess

London.—Little Princess Elizabeth, four-year-old daughter of the duke and duchess of York, still rules the fashions of England's nurseries.

Her mother has chosen a particularly pretty wardrobe for the fourth lady in the land, this spring. Once again many of her frocks will be of a soft butter yellow color, which through its association with her has achieved the name, "Princess Betty Yellow." It is infinitely becoming to her bright golden hair and blue eyes.

There are also to be some printed crepe de chine dresses with flower posies. These are short and full, with tiny puffed sleeves, and they are expected to create a fashion for other very small young ladies.

For very special occasions, such as parties, the little princess is to be arrayed in a frock that consists entirely of frills—a style which is said to find great favor with her royal highness.

Sailor, in 20 Foot Boat, Will Try to Cross Ocean

Lisbon.—A Portuguese sailor named Macedo left Casa Blanca in a 20-foot cutter to cross the Atlantic to New York, where he expects to arrive in 40 days. He will follow a route which touches the Canary islands, the Bermudas and Cape Hatteras, North Carolina. The cutter is equipped with three sails, a radio outfit, and displaces five tons.

Cow Bites 40 Persons

Belgrade, Jugoslavia.—A cow bitten by a mad dog ran amuck near the village of Essogg, biting everyone within reach. Forty victims were taken to a hospital, some with hydrophobia.

Drowns in Rain Barrel

Hammonton, N. J.—Falling into a rain barrel while playing near his home here, two-year-old Joseph Delarato was drowned.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Properly Stung.

Not always does the owner of a desirable piece of real estate get the price he is holding out for. A few months ago a real estate firm bought a large parcel of ground near the East river for a de luxe apartment building. It tried to get an additional strip twenty-five feet wide, but the owner of the strip wanted a large price. The firm refused, and built its apartment on a smaller area. Then, on the other side of the profit-seeker, another firm bought another parcel of land for another apartment. It, too, sought the narrow strip. The price was too high, and so another towering building was erected on smaller area. That strip is now between two sixteen-story buildings, and of comparatively little value. It isn't big enough for another apartment building, and the little house now standing on it is unpleasantly overshadowed by its neighbors.

Working Girls.

Some 50 girl students of Hunter college, a city institution, have earned about $25,000 in less than five months, and one of the girls gets $7 a week for taking a dog for a daily walk. Another earns considerably more giving bridge lessons, and most of the students work in department stores.

The Wise Street.

Broadway, the street of the wise boys, has proved a happy hunting ground for a real old-fashioned medicine show for the last six months. What fooled our gentlemen in the belted polo coats is the circumstance that the show isn't given from the back of a wagon, but it installed in a store.

The medicine men rent their space for $2,800 a month. The "Grind" starts at 10 a. m. and continues to 2 p. m. Sometimes they hang out a sign, "For Men Only." Other times it is "Ladies Only." They sell a health book and an exercising device for $1, soap for 50 cents and "medicine" for anything up to $10. The attendance, in the phrase of the medicine man, is about 2,500 monkeys a day. Small street, Broadway.

Odd Contract.

A certain playwright of this town, who has been in all kinds of suits and occasionally under indictment for some commercial misadventure, has signed a strange contract with his new lawyer. The basis of the contract is that the playwright is not a bad workman. He isn't in the famous class, but he turns out at least one producible show a year, and that is worth something. So the contract reads that the lawyer guarantees to keep the playwright out of jail for the next five years, in return for 50 per cent of the royalties on anything the playwright turns out.

Nature Knows Best.

In the past artists have been paid fabulous salaries by manufacturers of textiles to design fabrics—and, I don't doubt, they are still being paid fabulous salaries. But something new must be had every day, and nature has had several thousands years head start on man's inventiveness. Hence, more and more, designers are falling back on microscopic photographs of snowflakes and insects for their inspiration. One man who has been photographing snowflakes for 35 years has never found two alike.

Alcohol Is Easy Winner in Unique Chess Match

Budapest.—Alcohol emerged as winner recently in one of the most unusual games of chess ever played in Hungary. Bottles of wine were used as the pieces, the cork being drawn and the contents of the "piece" consumed as it fell before the onslaught of its opponent. Although spectators were allowed to enjoy the spoils together with the two players, the game had to be called off even before either of the bishops—represented by bottles of famous Hungarian tokay wine—had been captured.

Nose May Know but Not at Ten-Foot Distance

Boston.—Your nose may know, but not at a distance of ten feet, according to a federal court ruling here.

Testifying against Mrs. Catherine Murphy, alleged bootlegger, Dry Agent Charles Donnell said that although six suspected bottles were ten feet away, he knew they contained liquor because he could smell it.

Court doubted the witness' ability to smell liquor at that distance and let the defendant off with a $1 fine.

Sodom and Gomorrah Ruins May Be Found

Jerusalem. — Archeological finds in the Jordan valley which are probably the ruins of Sodom and Gomorrah are reported by the director of excavations in the neighborhood of the Dead sea, conducted on behalf of the Rome Pontifical Biblical Institute. The discoveries include human skeletons, some of which probably go back to the time of the ruins, stone walls, subterranean granaries, brick ovens, jewels and ceramic finds.

Danish Death Rate Cut When Meat Was Barred

During the World war the Danish government forced the people to adopt a meatless diet to conserve food and was surprised to note an immediate reduction in the mortality rate, according to the national monthly Good Health. The Danish government left to Doctor Hindhede, its commissioner of health, the complete control of the nation's food supplies, says Good Health. He decided that the barley and potatoes usually fed to pigs were essential to the health of people and that both man and pigs could not live. The number of pigs was reduced to one-fifth. In addition he reduced the number of cows to two-thirds and incorporated the wheat bran of their food in the coarse rye bread of the country. The result of feeding a nation on a meatless dietary, and with the coarsest bread ever made, was remarkable. The mortality of the whole country in the first full rationing year fell 17 per cent, and was the lowest death rate ever recorded in any country. This national experience provided incontrovertible evidence that the old idea of the necessity of a meat diet is utterly wrong.

Good Camp Oven

An easily constructed oven for campers who tire of a constant fried diet is suggested by a writer in Modern Mechanics Magazine. Small holes are punched along the seams of a five-gallon, square oil can and the joints laced with wire to prevent the can's opening if the solder melts. Next, half of one end is cut away with a can opener, and the piece removed is wired to the edge of the can to form an oven door. Holes are punched in each side of the can and heavy wire passed through for a supporting grate. Cover the can bottom with a layer of dry sand, which helps to even out the heat.

ONE PRESCRIPTION MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS

Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

Honey Production

The average production of a colony of bees is about 50 pounds, but under favorable conditions 100 pounds might be produced.

THE DECLARATION

The Nation has another birthday, the one hundred and fifty-fourth to be exact. The old form of celebration has passed. Even in the remnants of it, the shooting of firecrackers, the modernists have departed from that bedlam which greeted the midnight hour, the third of July, or ushered in the dawn. These years the shooting, where it is permitted and where it is forbidden, starts days ahead of the fourth, and is maintained without rhyme or reason and without patriotic purpose.

If the "safe and sane" idea has any unfortunate consequences it is that with the banning of dangerous firewarks seems also to have come a ban on the more sensible forms of patriotic remembrance of the nations birth.

In the old days the reading of the Declaration of Independence was a regular part of every Fourth of July celebration. The town's leading orator, warm but resplendent in frock coat and top hat, would mount the flag-draped rostrum, clear his throat magnificently and fling forth the words that once told the world of the defiance of the American colonies.

This event, sandwiched in between a selection by the band and a patriotic recitation by some harassed schoolboy, was always greeted with tumultuous applause; but it is to be doubted if the listeners ever really gave very much thought to the sense of the words they were hearing. And that is a pity. There are few things this nation could do with better profit.

There has been much loose talk lately about "sticking to the principles of the founders of the country." Fine; let's do it; by all means. But first let's see just what those principles were. We may be a bit surprised, but that will be good for us.

One of the best ways to go about it is to re-read the Declaration of Independence. It would be a good thing if every adult citizen could take the time to do that, pondering on the implications of the documents statements as he did so. The nation could not celebrate its one hundred and fifty-fourth birthday in a better way.

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, July 11, 1930. Volume 20; Number 11.

The Unemployed

There were 147 unemployed in Marshall County and 2314 in the eleven northwestern counties of Minnesota who had no jobs of any kind on April 1, 1930 according to returns compiled by the U. S. Census Bureau at Crookston. Of this number 1,417 lived in the villages and cities and the other 897 were on the farms.

The unemployment figures by counties are as follows: Becker 284; Clay 452; Clearwater 93; Kittson 179; Mahnomen 24; Marshall 147; Norman 157; Pennington 179; Polk 642; Red Lake 81; and Roseau 94.

The three largest centers in the district accounted for almost one third of the entire number. Moorhead having 309, Crookston 275 and Thief River Falls 112.

The population of the eleven counties totals about 167,000 so that the number of unemployed equals a little less than one and one-half per cent of the total population.

Oscar Reierson is at the present time, in a hospital at Thief River Falls where he is receiving medical care for some bruises and broken bones he received at a fourth of July dance in the eastern part of the county

A Dollar Dinner for Four

DID you ever stop to think that the dollar you spend at the restaurant for dinner would provide a dinner for four at home? Well, here is the menu, dietetic and delicious, for only two-bits per person:

Hamburg Steak with Spanish sauce	45¢
Creamed Carrots and Potatoes	17¢
Bread and Butter	8¢
Grape and Lemon Jelly	24¢
Demi-tasse	3¢
Total	97¢

Hamburg Steak with Spanish Sauce: Season one pound of hamburg steak and shape lightly into patties. Fry in pan and remove to a hot platter. To the skillet, add one tablespoon fat, one sweet red pepper, chopped, and one onion. Cook for three minutes. Add one 10-ounce can tomatoes and one-half teaspoon marjoram and cook five minutes or until somewhat thickened. Serve over the steak.

Creamed Carrots and Potatoes: Boil one cup diced potatoes until tender, drain and add one 8-ounce can diced carrots. Make a white sauce of one and one-half tablespoons butter, one and one-half tablespoons flour and one cup milk. Season to taste and pour over the mixed vegetables.

Grape and Lemon Jelly: To an 8-ounce can of grapes, add enough water to the syrup to make one cup. Bring to boiling and add one-half package of lemon jello. Stir until all is dissolved and set away to cool. When about ready to set, add the grapes and pour into individual molds. Chill and when ready to serve, top with one-third cup of whipped cream.*

The Dairy Cow--

I am the dairy cow. Men call me the foster mother of mankind. I wish to be comfortable. I like shade in my pastures on hot summer days. I need a warm barn in the winter where I can eat my fill and lie down in contentment to rest. I must have fresh air, pure water, and salt. They are so cheap and easy to supply. I like to be clean. I love to be cared for gently and regularly. I must have food and plenty of it. Give me all the bright alfalfa hay and good corn silage I can eat and all the grain my production shows I need, and I will make money for you. If you do not do these things for me, I cannot do what you expect of me. I am only a cow.

Reason For It

Some complain that the fishing is not as good as it ought to be. There is a reason for it.

During the past few years we have fished and fished and fished

We have caught bass from their spawning beds and taken the pike away by the ton. during the time that we have been killing we have been comforting ourselves with the thought that there are plenty of fish.

Of course there were plenty of fish at the headwaters of the Missisipi a few years ago. It was a virgin fishing ground. For thousands of years nature has been making pike grow in the Winnibigoshish waters. When the roads were first extended into this section we had the fish which almost countless generations had produced.

And how we did catch them. Cars came by the hundreds. Fishermen came by the thousands. Pike were caught by the sack full. They were taken away without reference to need or sportsmanship.

It will not be long before they will be gone, not completly so, but practically so. The beautiful lakes on the upper Mississippi may at some future time be just as fishless as those further to the south where man has taken without reason. This will be soon the land, or rather the water, of the snake pickerel and the sucker

But there will be no need for such a condition. Eliminate short sighterness and selfishness and the game and fish will multiply.

Tuesday and Wednesday were the hottest days we have had here so far this year. The thermometer reggistered 96 on Tuesday and about 90 on Wednesday, with a little wind blowing to keep things from melting.

The State Fire Marshall was a business visitor in town on Tuesday. He spoke well of the condition most places were in but also found some shacks which he said should be removed and the lots cleaned up.

A. L. Carlson and family and Arvid Carlson and family of Middle River spent the week end at Wolf Lake, near Cass Lake. The families remained at the lake where they have rented cottages for some time.

The graveling crew working at Greenbush have now finished the job on that end of the new highway and are now at the pit near Strathcona finishing a few miles. The crew working here expects to finish by the end of this week.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort.

—8—

"But you have lived in the country?"

"Oh, yes, always, in the summer. My Grandmother Langley had a home in Indiana where my father's quarries are. Why do you ask?"

"Never mind me. Tell me of yourself. This house in the country, and your home on Sheridan road is a long way from here."

Ernestine understood his idea, but she refused to be drawn into such a complicated conversation.

"It is only a few miles," she replied, and he gave an impatient exclamation.

"It is a thousand miles and a hundred years at least," he said. "Tell me about your mother's house."

Ernestine thought about it.

"Do you know anything about American period furniture, Mr. Pastano? There is a Duncan Phyfe table, and pierced brass fire-fender, in the living room; four-poster beds upstairs, with hooked rugs and woven counterpanes—all of the things have come into the family honestly, through natural possession, and not from auction rooms. But, of course, you know."

She smiled at him. Her long hands lay together in the immaculate perfection of her yellow chiffon lap. Her voice was low, only for his ears, and though she thought him very strange, she gave him her gravest, youngest courtesy.

"I know nothing about America, at all, it seems."

"It's just the house—I'll take you to see it some day, if you like, although mamma doesn't like people to consider it a museum, as some experts do. Of course, I don't live there since my marriage. We live in a rooming house on Erie stret, and it just shows that furniture and things do not mean so much, for I am happier now than I was."

"You have left this house of your mother, with pierced brass from your own ancestors, to live in Erie street?"

She nodded and smiled again, and her eyes pleaded for his understanding.

He shook his head sadly. He heaved a vast sigh.

"No, I do not understand America. Continually I am full of new astonishment. Women are somewhat the same the world around—but American men are outside my comprehension."

"You have been successful here," she reminded him, but he brushed her comment aside, pursuing his own thought aloud.

"No, I do not understand. If my son is penniless; if he is an artist starving in a garret, and the great, the incredible good fortune come to him that he shall marry a girl of noble birth, who has a quiet voice, and gentle still hands, and a brow where breeding shows its lovely smile—If my son have the grace and the smile of fortune to marry such a girl, and he bring her to a place like this—" He looked about him with scorn. "If he bring his wife to this brothel—this sink—I take a knife in my own hand and stab him through the heart. You must go away from here instantly—now! There is activity in this room that pollutes the very air. You will strangle in it—"

Ernestine's heart stopped beating in her astonishment. She felt that she had been unbearably affronted, and she rose and stood pale with anger. Mr. Pastano rose and stood before her, and met with approval the blaze of her eyes. A waiter appeared instantly with her coat, and he took it and wrapped it about her with immense dignity.

"So, go, princess!" he exclaimed, and bowed a little, and looked at her again, his own eyes alight. "You have only my good wishes. It is unfortunate I must confess the title to a place unfit for you, but this place was not made for you. The unfit, the broken, the abnormal must have their haunts, and they are not for others. Some day, perhaps, it will be my fortune that we shall be friends."

Every one was staring at them. Will had risen and stood beside her, smiling uncertainly, not knowing at all what was going forward.

"I want to go home," Ernestine said to him icily.

"Tommy will take you," Will answered easily, "I have to take Mr. Poole to his flat."

Ernestine felt herself beginning to tremble with the indignities heaped upon her. She had been so in love, so exposed, that it all hurt her incredibly. She looked about her uncertainly, then laughed and answered Will with composure.

"I don't believe I'll have to depend on Tommy. Here are Lillian and Loring. They'll take me home."

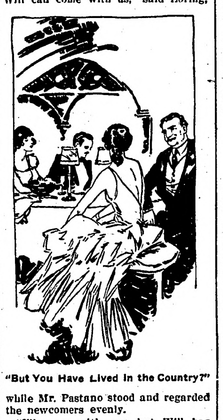
Will swung about in astonishment, and there, indeed, coming through the room uneasily, were Lillian and her lover. Ernestine stood, smiling malignantly, as they came forward.

"Ernestine," exclaimed Lillian, when she was near enough, "I wanted to see you. We went to Mrs. Bennett's, but the maid said you were here, so we followed you. Can you come with us?"

"I was just going," answered Ernestine. "But wait and meet our friends. This is my sister, Miss Briceland, Mrs. Wiston, and Mr. Poole, Lillian, and Monsieur Mostane, and Mr. Wiston of the Sun, and Mr. Underwood, and Mr. Heyward—and this is Mr. Pastano, who owns this charming place. And this is Mr. Hamilton, Mrs. Wiston—"

The men had risen and were fumbling over the acknowledgements of the introductions. Ernestine seemed the most composed person present, and no one could have guessed that her knees were trembling.

"We wanted to get on, if you and Will can come with us," said Loring,



"But You Have Lived in the Country?"

while Mr. Pastano stood and regarded the newcomers evenly.

"I'll come with you, but Will has an engagement before he returns home. Goodby, Mr. Poole. Thank you for the evening."

She gave her hand to her host, and he put his own hand on her shoulder to steady himself. Loring winced and scowled at this contact, but Ernestine was now in complete command of herself and smiled steadily. Mr. Poole's heavy face, his confusion, did not dismay her. She bade him an affectionate good night, then turned to the others.

"Good night, all of you. I'm sorry to run away, from my own party, but somebody must start. If you will excuse me— Good night, Will. I'll see you later."

She gave Will a luminous look. He did not answer but stared at her silently, and she turned, sweeping her wrap about her, carrying herself like a queen of the realm, and went off, Loring's black bulk between the sisters, his face dark with forebodings.

Down the wooden stairs they passed in complete silence. A new sedan stood at the curb, and Loring in majestic silence opened the car door for the girls who got in the back seat. He closed the door and got in the driver's seat and started the engine. Lillian and Ernestine sat close together in the warmth and comfort of the heated upholstered, glass-enclosed interior. Ernestine felt for the first time a poignant homesickness for comfort and convenience.

"Why didn't Will come with us?" asked Loring from the front seat.

Ernestine decided to be frank.

"You could see that Mr. Poole had been drinking too much, couldn't you? Well, Will felt that he ought to take him home and see that he got there safely. He often does that. They're good friends, you know. And you mustn't think badly of Mr. Poole. He's old, and, really, he is a wonderful man."

"But how about you? How would you have got home? Our coming along was an accident."

"Tommy Tucker would have taken me," said Ernestine calmly. "Or the Wistons, or Monsieur Mostane. I'd have gone home all right."

There was a silence of disapproval and adjustment. The car rolled smoothly along the quiet streets.

"Then everything's all right?" asked Lillian diffidently.

"Of course, darling."

"I'm so glad. Will you come and have lunch with mamma and me tomorrow and let me tell you all our plans?"

"I'll see," said Ernestine. "Now, I'll have to go home. I'm terribly tired."

"Of course you are. It's late. I'm tired, too. But, Ernestine, I'm so happy that I wonder if I can be any happier." Her voice was bright and clear—quick and competent. Ernestine remembered the tears and passion of her own engagement.

"You will be happy always. You will," she said with intensity.

They left her at the stone steps and watched until she opened the door with her latchkey and disappeared into the dark prison-like house. Then Loring turned the car about and, with Lillian at his side, started back north. Lillian cuddled against him.

"Oh, Lorrie," she said sorrowfully, "she isn't happy. You know she isn't. It wouldn't be so bad for her to be poor, if only he were good to her. But you can see that he neglects her. If he cannot provide for her decently he could at least be a gentleman to her. But after all she has done for him, he mistreats her."

"Don't be disturbed about it, darling," said Loring in a low voice. "There's nothing we can do now. Only be good to her and wait for her to waken."

In Mrs. Bennett's boarding house Ernestine climbed the stairs slowly, feeling herself weak with rage.

CHAPTER V

The First Quarrel

Ernestine's anger and resentment grew like a bonfire. The small front room was cold, but she was unaware of its temperature or of the frost gathering thick on the window. Everything was fuel to the flame which burned in her. The longer Will delayed the more her anger grew. His cavalier treatment of her. Tommy could take her home! Mr. Poole needed him. More than anything else, more, she told herself, than the humiliation of Mr. Pastano's scorn was this fact, that Mr. Poole mattered more than she did.

She gave herself up to anger as she had given herself to love—with abandon. Will had neglected her. He had humiliated her. She knew that she would not have cared for any of it so much if she had not been forced to see it through the horrified eyes of her sister and Loring. They were pitying her now. She could imagine Lillian's comments, Loring's sympathy. That was the crux of the whole matter. And Mr. Poole, the vile old drunkard! Was this the sort of friendship her marriage was to bring her? She had given up everything for Will—everything! Was he to sacrifice nothing for her? Could he not abandon this adoration of an obscene old man who happened to be a cartoonist? It was not necessary for these gifted people to foregather in such a place. She burned and trembled as she recalled Pastano's contempt. That strangers should need to instruct her as to her proper place—

So absorbing were her thoughts, so wrapped was she in the resounding cadences of her own inner tumult, that she did not hear the outer door nor Will's soft step on the stairs, when at last he came.

"Up yet?" he asked in a husky whisper. "You should have been in bed two hours ago. It's cold as the devil outside. But what's the matter, kitten? Aren't you well?"

"Don't speak to me!" said Ernestine, and the fact that, like himself, she had to lower her voice in consideration for people sleeping on either side only added to her rage.

"But Ernestine!"

"Don't speak to me!" she cried again, and this time her voice was clear. "I never want to go anywhere with you again."

"Be silent," he commanded in a voice low but stern, and his eyes leaped back at her with an anger equal to her own. "Have you lost your wits? Shouting in this place in the middle of the night?"

Ernestine stood, her mouth open a little in amazement at his tone. Hot words trembled upon her tongue.

Discoveries Put Roman Art on Higher Plane

But archeological discoveries in Italy and the Roman dominion within the last two or three decades, and the scientific comparison of Roman art with Greek and other art, and the consequent evaluation of its merits, have put Rome on a rather high plane of artistic production.

No longer is it to be believed that there was no Roman art before the time of the empire; from the fourth to the second centuries before Christ there was a large and meritorious amount of work done, both in painting and in sculpture. A fairly large piece of wall painting was found in a tomb on the Esquiline hill in Rome. It dates from the end of the fourth century B. C., and represents a group of Roman generals holding a conference. The draughtsmanship is spirited and the massing of the figures in the background is technically superb. It happens also to be the earliest—to date—example in Rome of a superposed frieze decoration. The idea may well have been derived from Ionian models, but the departures in technique are so important and so Roman that the style was believed to be native and it became the pattern which was developed into the Roman triumphal arch relief work.—Washington Star.

A MOCK MARRIAGE AND THE REAL THING

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

FOR four years Jack and Elaine had been in love. At least, that was the general opinion in the clique in which they entertained and were entertained. And that fact also gave rise to much friendly speculation, for they were the only couple in the seven which composed the "gang" who were not married.

The girls, who were all young enough to be referred to in the social columns as "nee," were inclined to lay the blame, if it might be called blame, at the feet of Jack. They conceded as one that he was mid-Victorian in many of his ideas; that he regarded the woman's place as in the home, and felt that he should accumulate his "stake" before burdening himself with the shackles of matrimony and the attendant responsibilities. They were sorry for Elaine, without committing themselves by making a statement of that fact.

The men were more frank in their criticism.

"If I had a girl like Elaine eating her heart out for me," declared Folwell to the group of four who sat languidly on the veranda of the country club, "you can bet it wouldn't take me more than ten minutes to give the license bureau the grand rush. It is a pity he doesn't see it."

"Oh, he sees it, all right," retorted Bill Grimes, "and then, again, there may be another side to the story. She has a great many responsibilities, you know. She has a great sense of responsibility toward her mother. I've known Elaine for seventeen years. We grew up together and I understand her pretty thoroughly. She is rather independent and I don't think she cares a rap for the idea of becoming a burden on any man. Yes, I think there's another side to the story."

"Well, I'd like to see it. There doesn't seem to be any justice in a wonderful couple like that going their individual ways when they could be so happily married."

"If you fellows want to see them married so badly," interrupted Lorimer, who had been smoking quietly as if in deep thought, "you might refer the matter to Bill Prescott. He's a sort of cure-all and life of the party for this gang. Although I didn't like the last practical joke he pulled on me, I think he's a pretty good organizer. Why don't you get him to open his little bag of tricks?"

"There's Prescott now, digging up the turf on the links. Call him over. He'd be glad for a legitimate excuse to get himself out of that sand trap."

Prescott came on the run in answer to their call.

"Have you seen Jack Day around any place?" he was asked.

"Yeah," he exclaimed, "left this morning for a business trip to New York. Elaine and her mother took the same train. He said he would be back a week from Thursday."

"That is the night of the doings at your place, isn't it, Grimes?" asked Lorimer. "Good! We wanted to talk to you, Prescott, about these two. They ought to be sensible and get married. You have an imagination. Speak up."

Prescott's face broke into a broad smile. "Let me think it over," he said, "perhaps I can cook up something."

True to his word, the wheels of intrigue began to move rapidly under Prescott's experienced hands.

He called Lorimer on the phone, almost incoherent with excitement.

"You and Nadine are to be best man and bridesmaid," he exclaimed; "I want you to be on hand at Grimes' place the night of the party in your tuxedo. I'm going to pull a mock wedding. I'll get the license with my wife. I haven't yet decided whether to make it the real article or to have a theatrical agency send up a fake minister to perform the ceremony. What do you think?"

"The idea sounds good to me," said Lorimer, "but I'd suggest you get a theatrical agency minister. Keep yourself out of deep water if you can. I'll put the rest of the gang wise and swear them all to secrecy. I'll also arrange to pick Jack and Elaine up at the station and bring them to the party."

The "gang," with the enthusiasm of zealots, entered into the spirit of the intrigue and each contributed something to make it more elaborate and successful. They felt, as one, that although the affair would be merely a joke, it would bring to a head the question they had debated among themselves. They entered into it as actors who are playing a drama within in a drama.

The stage was set. The arrangements were made and every detail had been attended to, as carefully planned and timed as a stage production. In excited knots of two and three, the actors of the comedy talked over their roles in subdued voices.

At nine o'clock Lorimer drove up in his car and deposited the intended victims on the front porch. He went into the house with them.

They entered to find the place a bower of flowers. Their wraps were taken from them, and, flanked by Lorimer and his wife, Jack and Elaine were led into another room, which was arranged, even in detail, to look like a small chapel. At the other end of the room stood a minister.

Jack and Elaine looked at each other with startled expressions. Then they smiled at each other and in their smiles was a note of acquiescence. They marched up to the minister and, without a tremor in the voice of either, pronounced the mock marriage ceremony after the mock minister.

This was the unexpected, and it showed plainly in the dumbfounded expressions of the audience. Prescott retrieved the situation by gesticulating wildly for silence and telling them by pantomime to follow his lead.

The mock ceremony was over and the bride and groom turned to receive the congratulations of their friends, but no one stirred. The joke had gone too far. There seemed no alternative but to disillusion the young couple and to confess the complicity of every one in the hoax. Prescott stepped forward to explain.

Before he could speak, Jack Day touched him on the shoulder. "Just a minute, Bill," he exclaimed, "I have something to say."

He turned to the crowd with an odd smile playing about the corners of his mouth.

"Elaine and I want to thank you for arranging this little surprise for us," he said; "we certainly appreciate it. We feel that it's the next best thing to being married at home, and it was thoughtful of you. But what we can't understand is this: How did you know about it so soon? We were married only yesterday in New York."

Letter Writing by Men Seems to Be Lost Art

Not one man in a million can write a satisfactory letter to his wife, according to William Feather, Cleveland philosopher and syndicated analyst of human nature. Probably he meant to declare that few men are able to write an interesting letter, that men, in fact, are poor letter writers. If that is his position we can join him.

In earlier days in this country letters were not numerous, but they were real letters. Some recent biographies have contained letters that were magnificent, written merely to convey information or carry on a discussion with a relative or friend. Today one may telegraph, or use the telephone, or dictate a note. Few men give up the time necessary to prepare a newsy letter, with a bit of sentiment, even to the wife who is away on vacation.

Women are good letter writers, according to Dr. Roy Davis of Boston university, who made a study of letters written by groups of professional men and women. In comparison he said the women were far out in the lead. Women are able to get the personal note and touch in a letter, something men do not even try to accomplish. And a letter from a near friend, relative or member of one's own family, that has no personal note in it, must be scored low; it leaves much to be desired. About the only kind of good letter writing done by men is by a few specialists who are in the mail order business and handle the follow up letters.—Ohio State Journal.

Justice by Ordeal

The Celts in Ireland, the Germans before their conversion to Christianity, and the early Slavs made use of various kinds of ordeals in administering justice. They allowed the defendant to prove his innocence by remaining unhurt while undergoing the ordeal.

There were two forms of the ordeal of iron in use. One was to allow the accused, blindfolded, to establish his innocence by his ability to avoid stepping on red hot plowshares, from six to twelve in number, spaced a certain distance apart. The other form compelled the accused to carry a red-hot iron, usually for a distance of nine feet. This ordeal was generally chosen by persons of rank.

Most Punctual Prisoner

The height of chivalry was exhibited at the penitentiary of Verolanouva near Brescia, when a prisoner made his escape and left behind a note pinned to his cot on which was written, "I'll be back tonight at seven sharp. Going home to see mother." The prisoner kept his word and at the appointed hour duly reported for work. A negligent guardian responsible for the escapade was arraigned before the tribunal and sentenced to 75 days in prison and three months' privation from public office.—Washington Star.

Knower, Doer, Sayer

For the universe has three children, born at one time, which reappear under different names in every system of thought, whether they be called cause, operation and effect; or, more poetically, Jove, Pluto, Neptune; or, theologically, the Father, the Spirit, and the Son; but which we will call the Knower, the Doer and the Sayer. These stand respectively for the love of truth, for the love of good, and for the love of beauty. These three are equal.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Mexico's War on Rats

Agents of the Mexican department of agriculture are waging determined warfare against a plague of rats which recently have invaded wide areas in the states of Jalisco and Michoacan. In response to appeals from the farmers of the affected districts, enormous traps have been constructed. The capture of 50,000 rats in a single night in a trap half a kilometer long was reported by one of the agents operating in Jalisco.

Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN

Dean of All the Enumerators

Virginia

The Prim and the Pert Virginia.

You suffer a good deal from an overdose of goodness, goodness knows why, unless it is because you have been surrounded with too many reformers in the early part of your life.

Left to your own devices, you can pretty well work out your own salvation, and no doubt will do so yet, if you gain your independence.

This is indicated by a free translation of the first three letters of your name, VIR, which mean to awake and arise vigorously.

You are quite capable of watching keenly for your own interests, although much inclined to conform to the conventions, and to consider what people will think.

Possibly you have already learned what a curious and different effect you can produce upon people by simply arranging your hair in different ways. With your hair straight, or nearly so, everybody is impressed with your primness and even your spirituality; but when you curl or permanent wave your hair, Virginia, you are devastating in some quarters.

The middle syllable of your name, GIN, may have something to do with this intoxication on the part of others, when you curl your hair. But the indications of such a syllable bring in a trace of soberness, that causes you to weigh and consider.

If this careful thought is applied too much to the discernment of others' opinions of you, it tends to make you sycophantical.

The IA on the end of your name is really a sort of aspiration, a look toward God. Now if I can inspire you to use VIR for virility, and virginity; to use the GIN for balance and judgment; and then cause you to look toward God, in the IA, I shall have done considerable.

You are so original and unique in some of the things you do, that you are a fitting namesake for the first white child born in America, Virginia Dare.

Your genius is best applied along the lines of humanitarian works, gatherings, organization, or people in some reformative cause. That is, this may be a good application for you until you marry, but your best and greatest vocation, Virginia, is to take your place in the world as the wonderful mother you are so well able to be.

* * *

Sue

The Mothering Hand of Sue.

A good many people find themselves somewhat opposed to the word Sue, attaching it to legal moves. But the people who are acquainted with you, SUE, know that the phonetic value of your name really begins the word soothing.

Sue not only rhymes with "you," but in both the ancient Greek and the Latin, has a direct meaning of "you" and "your."

Your soft but capable hand is peculiarly fitted to either carve out a career, or to mother a baby. This mothering ability applies, even if the baby happens to be a grown-up man.

Taking the separate letters of your name, S brings in the subtle side of your nature, as well as the smooth and soothing side. It indicates those currents within you, also, which in your physical body may change to stoutness. Watch the diet a little there.

Among the ancients the U meant "and," and was used as a conjunction, something as we use it to join the phrases in speech. To the mystic, the U signifies that which descends, hesitates, and returns upward from whence it came. It also signifies the large part of you.

The last letter of your name, E, was represented in the ancient Hebrew by their letter HE, which meant "the window," or source of the light. This would bring out your writing ability, in which, if you persist, you can become well-known.

So go right on, Sue, be encouraged, and know that you have background enough, both ancient and modern, to be indomitable, if you will just keep on keeping on.

Where He Drew the Line

A fine example of self-denial was that exhibited by a rotund Detroiter. Although he had had only a light snack, consisting of two English mutton chops, weighing about a pound each, seven broiled kidneys, eight or nine broiled mushrooms, five ears of corn on the cob, a sheaf of asparagus, six rolls, a bowl of soup, ten crackers, a quarter-pound of cheese, and four cups of coffee, he steadfastly refused potatoes. "Potatoes," he explained, "are fattening."

Little Danger Now to Hunters of "Big Game"

Wild beasts are not one-hundredth so dangerous as they are reputed, writes John W. Vandercook in the Forum. All capable judges not obsessed by their own importance and by a desire for indiscriminate killing agree to that. The two greatest of all wild animal photographers—Maj. Arthur Dugmore and Martin Johnson—ridicule the notion of the spontaneous ferocity of big game animals.

"In the course of an ordinary African journey, and I care not where one's route lies or how remotely one penetrates, I profoundly believe there is no more danger from animals than there is from being hit by a stray meteor," says one noted wild animal hunter.

Every big game hunter, and there are invariably several in a party, is equipped with a multiple shot, modern rifle, which aims true at upward of half a mile and delivers such a terrific impact that the bullet will upset most animals, no matter where it hits. And always near at hand is to be found an efficient native gun bearer, equipped with and capable of using a duplicate weapon. Much shooting, in fact, is now done from the idiotic security of an automobile's back seat. Some expensive Englishmen have even announced that there is "sport" to be had from an airplane.

MILLET KIN BARES BIG ART SWINDLE

Grandson of Famous Painter Confesses Fake.

Paris.—Charles Millet, grandson of the painter of "The Angelus," has confessed to selling for tens of thousands of dollars to London and New York art dealers pictures falsely attributed by him to his grandfather and other great artists.

The whole collection of Millets in the famous Barbizon museum, states Charles Millet, are also forgeries.

The paintings were made for him by a skillful copyist named Cazeau.

The investigations which brought this vast swindle to light began a few days ago. An art dealer in London applied through the Melun magistrates for the return of several genuine bronzes by Rodin which he had confided to Millet for sale and for which he had received no payment.

Police raided Millet's house in the Forest of Barbizon, where his famous grandfather had lived and worked. After a severe interrogation, Millet confessed that for years he had been exporting, principally to England and America, paintings guaranteed by him to be the works of Millet, Monet, Degas, Corot, Cezanne, Sisley and other impressionist masters of the last century.

The works sent to England and America were sold in some instances, it is understood, for sums exceeding $50,000.

A panic is growing in the Paris art market owing to the widespread nature of this scandal. Dubious paintings by the Nineteenth century masters are being obtained at astonishingly low prices. No fewer than 4,000 forged pictures have been sold to unsuspecting dealers and collectors, state the police.

Art experts are working tirelessly, visiting collections whose owners are anxious for reassurance regarding the true value of their treasures.

Sea Lions Take Over Lighthouse in Pacific

Neah Bay, Wash.—Sea lions are in command of the lighthouse on Bride's island, northwest corner of Washington, its keeper reports. In appeal for help to rid the rocky islet of some of the mammals he relates a tale of sagacity displayed by sea lions.

When he opens the door of his quarters a troop of sea lion pups march into the room begging for food scraps. The odor of coffee and bacon attracts the adult animals from the water each mealtime. During high tide sea lions congregate about the lighthouse as to literally cover the ground and rocks.

Some climb to window ledges, sprawl along steps and chew up rope left within reach. These sea lions do not migrate, but remain in the vicinity the year round. Operation of the fog horn starts pandemonium in the ranks of the old bulls, who try to drown out the noisy machine.

Million for Sanitarium for Folk of Same Name

Reno.—"To perpetuate the name of Kilborn," a million-dollar estate has been left by the late George D. Kilborn, Reno publisher, for the establishment and maintenance of a sanitarium near Watertown, N. Y., "where any Kilborn, no matter where he lives, may regain his health," it was announced here recently.

In the event that there are not enough persons by the name of Kilborn to fill the sanitarium, residents of Jefferson and Lewis counties, New York, who are in ill health, will be allowed entrance into the institution.

Kilborn's widow, Mrs. Katherine Kilborn, has been given use of the estate until her death, when it will revert to a fund for the endowment of the sanitarium. The will also provided a $2,500 trust fund, that a history of the Kilborn family may be written every half century.

Pilot Saves Air Mail Before Leap to Safety

Cleveland.—Pilot Samuel Samson, flying the night air mail from Cleveland to New York, "stepped out" of his plane near here when his engine went dead at an altitude of 8,000 feet, but not until he had turned his craft upside down to unload and save 545 pounds of mail. He was flying through a driving rain. The crippled plane was destroyed by fire. Samson remained at the stick until within 500 feet of the ground and missed death by inches when his parachute grazed a high-tension wire.

WATERSPOUT MOVIES TAKEN FROM PLANE

Phenomenon Pictured From Air for First Time.

Washington.—An airplane has flown rings around a waterspout, permitting the recording of the first still and motion pictures ever made from the air of this awe-inspiring phenomenon.

The photographs of the twisting column of water and vapor were made between Miami and Havana by the seaplane survey party of the National Geographic society which is making a comprehensive aerial study of the geographic features and weather conditions along the east coast flying routes between North and South America.

Frederick Simpich, in charge of the party, describes the unusual experience in a communication to the society's headquarters here.

"Roaring across the sea from Key West to Cuba," he writes, "the giant flying boat 'Argentina' was almost in sight of Havana when a heavy rain squall suddenly blew up to starboard. Pilot Hawkins, to avoid the angry black cloud, veered to port. Then, to our amazement, there quickly dropped from the north end of the storm cloud the thin, writhing black column of a waterspout. In a few seconds, as we watched, it grew to a black, whirling corkscrew at least 600 feet high and probably 50 feet or more in diameter.

Writhed Like Huge Snake.

"At first glimpse of the ominous natural phenomenon Jacob Gayer, staff photographer, and Capt. Albert W. Stevens, noted army parachute jumper and aerial picture man, seized cameras and made for open ports. Calling Pilot Hawkins through his speaking tube, Stvens asked him to circle the spout, approaching as closely as safety would permit.

"A sinister, frightful-looking monster the spout had now become, like a giant factory chimney linking the heavens with the sea. Then, as it grew in size and whirled and twisted, it took the shape and appearance of a great snake, spray and mist rising in clouds from where its tail lashed the sea. Yet its writhing edges were as clean-cut as a broad band of black ribbon.

"All day the sky had been overcast, the sea calm, the air supercharged with moisture. It was from a particularly black, low-lying cloud that the great spout had developed; and, as we flew round and round it, Gayer and Stevens made a series of pictures. First they shot the straight, dark descending line that marked the monster's formation; then its great twisting black bulk; and, finally, a long, grayish snakelike arm that swung off at 45 degrees—its lower end now whipped out into thinning waterstrands like the frayed tail of a colossal horse. By my watch, it was exactly seven minutes from the time the spout first formed until it faded into the black depths of the moving squall. Twenty years ago my tramp steamer in the China seas ran from a waterspout. Now, in a plane that could fly 127 miles an hour, we impudently played tag with one—and took its picture!

Plane Skirted Dismal Swamp.

"Whizzing over Morro castle we landed in Havana harbor in a tropical downpour, to find crowds of Cubans in sheltered places along the waterfront excitedly discussing the 'cyclone.' 'The only way to stop one,' said an excited customs inspector, 'is to shoot it!'

"But for this amazing prank of nature, our air cruise from Washington down to Havana was without adventure. Down the Potomac the ship had flown, past Arlington and Mount Vernon basking in a Sunday morning sun. Above the battle fleet at Hampton Roads, past Norfolk and out to sea—with the so-called Great Dismal Swamp stretching far to the west. A vast, dark blue and mysterious waste it is, seen from the air, with here and there what seems to be cleared and cultivated areas.

"Towns, lighthouses, islands, rivers and estuaries slipped before the watchful eyes of our cameras. Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Jacksonville, lay along the path of the ambitious aerial survey which began at Anacostia Naval base and will end in the Argentine."

Barber Still Is Using Razor 120 Years Old

Nocona, Texas.—After 120 years, during which time it has found its way from Pine Point, Ala., to this city, a razor purchased in 1810 is still in use in a barber shop here.

The razor is owned by Lloyd Burgin, local barber. It was said to have been purchased in Pine Point in 1810 by Mrs. Burgin's great-grandfather. He paid 75 cents for it. The great-grandfather gave it to a son, who in turn passed it on to a third generation.

Three years ago it reached the hands of the present owner, who uses it daily in his shop here.

Necktie Doesn't Fit, He Tries to Kill Self

Vienna.—When brought to a psychiatric clinic after a policeman had prevented him from committing suicide by jumping from a high window, Franz Mexyr, a twenty-one-year-old Viennese chauffeur, informed the hospital attendants that he had decided to kill himself because his inability to make his cravat fit correctly into his collar made him so unhappy that he found life not to be worth while.

WOMAN, 97, DOESN'T WANT "LONG LIFE"

"You Get Too Stupid," She Explains at Party.

Rochester.—She has a far better chance than most persons to run off with the honor, but Mrs. Sophie Reich of 225 Gregory street doesn't want to be one of the select few who live to be one hundred.

Mrs. Reich recently cut a birthday cake with ninety-seven candles on it at a dinner party given her by her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

While flowers and greetings poured in on her she told a reporter why it doesn't pay to live too long. "You get too stupid," she declared, adding:

"Once your faculties become imperfect you are a burden to your family, too, and I don't want to be that."

Mrs. Reich is small and dainty, the kind of old lady who looks well in a white bonnet, but she doesn't go in for that sort of thing. She was quick with a retort to every question. She doesn't need an ear trumpet and she walked about with as nimble a tread as if she were twenty.

She came to this country from Germany, a young woman of twenty-two. Mrs. Reich's husband, Christian Reich, died in 1881.

She was the guest of honor at an "old folks" service in St. Paul's Evangelical church, along with all members who are over sixty years of age. "Children of Life's Sunset Slope" was the subject of the sermon by the Rev. Elmer H. Hoefer.

Mother Calls Her Son to Dinner by Radio

St. Louis, Mo.—"Short wave radio station DUD broadcasting. Why don't you hurry home, Wells? Dinner has been ready 15 minutes and the potatoes are getting cold. I'll wait a few moments longer for you. DUD now signing off."

Such was the broadcast from mother to son here when he was late for dinner.

Wells Chapin, instructor in a night radio school, erected DUD for research purposes—but explains his mother did much of the research for him at dinner time.

Recently Chapin hitched an aerial to the top of his automobile, ear phones to his head, and set out to investigate reports of his mother that DUD was becoming weak and that she could not reach him for the usual call to dinner.

He cruised over St. Louis streets listening to his mother read from a book, recite poems, and tell how to make a low neck dress. DUD was functioning perfectly and it was not yet time for dinner so Chapin kept cruising and his mother speaking through the microphone.

The radio instructor never thought about dinner until his mother said:

"Haven't you done enough experimenting today—hurry home, dinner is getting cold. DUD signing off."

Chapin went home.

Wales Saves Digestion; Conspires With Waiters

Le Touquet, France.—The prince of Wales has confessed!

He does not eat all of the courses of the many formal dinners which he is called upon to attend. He says:

"It would be impossible for me to do so. I could not stand so rich a diet. Indeed, I very often do not eat any of the elaborate dishes served.

"I have a tacit understanding with several of the waiters in the establishments in which many of such dinners are given—they know my tastes—and instead of serving me with highly seasoned dishes, they give me instead a clear soup, a cheese souffle and some cutlets."

The prince said that through this ruse he was able to eat when the others ate and at the same time preserve his digestion.

He arrived here by plane to follow the French golf championships.

French Navy Salute Center of Controversy

Paris.—The traditional shout of "Vive la Republique" which has been in force in the French navy since the revolution, may be changed. It is voiced by the sailors when they man the decks to salute an arrival or greet a passing warship.

Certain officials of the ministry of marine sought to change the cry into a simple "hurrah," as in the British navy, but ardent Nationalists in the chamber of deputies are combating the change.

Tabriz, Persia.—A policeman arrested two women and lodged a complaint against them for standing too long in front of a shop window and looking at their legs in a mirror. The women were fined the equivalent of 25 cents each.

Super Hosepipe Used by Malay Tin "Miners"

One of the most extraordinary ways of extracting metals from the body of this world of ours is that to be seen in the tin mines of the Malay States. With the exception of precious metals, such as gold, silver, platinum, and radium, tin is now the most valuable in the world. Often the tin-bearing ground rises cliff-like from the plain. Mining is then carried out not by orthodox methods, but with the help of a super hosepipe. This hose throws a thin jet of water at a pressure of more than 200 pounds to the square inch. Until one has seen such a jet it is almost impossible to realize what it is like. The strongest man, for instance, could not cut through the jet near the nozzle of a hose with a heavy sword. If he tried, a broken blade, and probably a broken arm, would result. The jet is directed against the face of the cliff, which crumbles away almost as if it has been blown up by dynamite.

Saved Baby Squirrels

Soot had filled an unused chimney at Dover-Foxcroft, Maine, to within 17 feet of the top, and that situation together with a rope induced gray squirrels to set up housekeeping therein. When an automobile killed mother squirrel a kind-hearted man used a flashlight to investigate the old, unused chimney and discovered five babies. Rescued and fed with a medicine dropper, they are now a part of Dr. W. A. Purinton's family circle, and are expected to grow up and live happily ever after.—Indianapolis News.

"Passing the Buck"

Things got so noisy in the flat upstairs last night that I finally went up and knocked on the door.

"Boggs," I said, "here's something I want you to read." And I handed him a sarcastic article I had clipped out of a humorous paper about the family upstairs.

"Heh, heh, heh!" he said, when he had finished it. "That's pretty good. Lemme have it, willya? I wanta show it to the family upstairs."—Life.

Electric Dog

A French engineer has invented an electric dog that jumps, barks fiercely and even tries to bite when—theoretically—a burglar throws the light of a torch in its face. The invention works on the principle of electric cells which set up a current when a ray of light reaches them. This in turn starts the motor that makes the dog act like a real animal.

New Radio Lighthouse

A new kind of radio lighthouse, invented by a Glasgow engineer, is to be installed at Cumbrae on the Clyde. Hitherto wireless lighthouses have sent out signals by which ships provided with the necessary apparatus can tell their position and their distance from land, but the new invention is a kind of wireless telephone, and mariners listening will be able to tell instantly how far off from the lighthouse they are.

All is fair in love and war, and, it seems, in family quarrels.

TRACE BIG CREAM LOSS TO SEPARATOR

Practically any farmer can have his separator tested by merely saving the skimmilk, adding the bowl flushings to it, and having the can of skimmilk re-skimmed with a new, high-class separator of known dependability. In order to emphasize the universal necessity of "checking up" on every kind of separator, over 1,000 public demonstrations were made during the past three years by De Laval-trained dairymen. Before audiences totaling 100,000 farmers, the skimmilk from some cream separator in use in the community was re-skimmed with a new, dependable machine. The cream recovered in this manner was weighed and tested and a check obtained for the amount of butterfat recovered from the skimmilk. Last year, in 523 tests, an average of 9.2 gallons of skim milk was re-skimmed at each test. An average of 3.6 pounds of cream was recovered, worth 21.8 cents at prevailing prices. This means an average loss of over $79.00 per year for all the separators from which skim milk was obtained.

Autos Collide Here

What we believe to be the worst looking automobile collision that has ever happened around here, occured late Sunday afternoon about three miles north of town when, an Essex sedan occupied by Dr. and Mrs. Stone and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bergreen of Middle River, collided head on with a Chevrolet sedan, occupied by Mrs. Geo Larson and some friends from Thief River Falls.

Two children riding in the Chevorlet were badly cut and bruised and had to be rushed to the hospital at Thief River at once. The occupants of the Essex where not hurt very bad but surly got a severe shaking up Mr. Bergreen was thrown thru the top of the car.

The Chevorlet was ruined beyond repair, as every part of the car was smashed up leaving only a small part of one corner intact. The Essex was completely wrecked up to the drivers seat from the front and will require about $400 to fix it up.

Circus at Thief River

Ever on the alert for new sensations, the Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus has engaged "The Great Wilno" who is actually shot with violent velocity from the mouth of a monster cannon. Wilno's death-defying deed takes place twice daily, and will be a part of the regular performance.

In addition to the feat of "Wilno" there will be other innumerable thrillers when the Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus comes to Thief River Falls on July 24. Prominent among the displays will be Clyde Beatty with over thirty fighting African lions and Bengal and Siberian tigers. This is the largest group ever subjugated by an American and represents the pinnacle of wild animal training. Another savage and ferocious number will be presented by Aage Christiansen, a famous European trainer.

Demand of the juvenile patron have not been overlooked and dumb actors from ponyland and monkeyland, bearland and dogland will participate in many novelties. Such well known trainers as Roy Rush, Bob Norton, Austin King, Cheerful Gardner and Allen Hauser will present groups of horses, zebras, llamas, elephants, camels and other semi-domestic animals.

"The Golden Orient," a bewitching spectacle of old Japan, will open the lengthy performances. This spectacle is said to be one of the most beautiful and gorgeous ever produced, and requires an extensive cost of characters as well as a vocal chorus. Costumes and wardrobe, as well as properties, scenery and electrical effects cost thousands of dollars.

Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson moved back to Mud Lake last week from St. Paul where Mr. Anderson has been employed. They will make their home on the old Anderson farm.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Ernestine is hurt because Will insists he must take Poole, who is drunk, home and leave her in care of his friend, Tucker. It brings their first quarrel.

"Undress and get in bed," said Will. "What do you mean, sitting here, without more clothes on, in this icy room? Do you wish to harm yourself?"

She laughed. "You are concerned about my welfare, aren't you?" she taunted him, and for answer he seized her shoulders and gave her a quick little shake.

"Ernestine," he demanded, "will you do as I say?"

She stood trembling, fighting down the stupid well of tears, reaching out after her departing anger.

"Will,"—her voice was as low, as vital as his own—"I'm in such a rage that I have got to talk to you. You can't treat me this way. You can't leave me to the courtesy of strangers. You can't take me to such places—where there's drunkenness and immorality. You have got to be a better husband to me than that. I have given up everything for you—everything—"

"When you are in bed, I'll talk to you," he answered, as he threw off his coat and went to the wardrobe and brought her her warm dressing gown, nightgown and fur-lined moccasins. He undid the fastening of her dress and before she could arm herself against him, he lifted it off over her head. The satin slip, the silken underthings—her body was like cold marble. In a moment, it seemed, she was in nightgown and dressing gown, in bed, and he was drawing off her gossamer hose and chafing her feet in his own cold hands until the mottled skin showed red with blood. Then he tucked her under the covers and brought a chair and sat down beside her, not touching her. Ernestine laughed again.

"If you really cared," she said, her eyes dark with anger and pain, "whether I were warmly in bed you might have come with me to see."

He was silent. He was very pale. Small beads of perspiration stood upon his forehead in the cold room.

"I am not likely to be ill," she said scornfully. "Don't be afraid of that."

Still he did not speak, but looked at her as though he were trying to arrange some momentous decision in his mind. He took a cigarette from his pocket with hands trembling so that when he lighted it he burned himself, and flung the match away with an angry exclamation.

"Ernestine," he said, turning to her, "there is one thing that I will never take from you. You are hysterical now, but no matter how angry, how sick or upset you are, there is one thing that you must never say to me. Never again. I won't take it from you."

He drew the smoke into his lungs with an effort at self-control, while she stared up at the blur of him, her dark eyes swimming with tears.

"I didn't know that you gave up anything for me," he said. "I thought this marriage was on both sides the satisfying of a strong need. I never asked you to make a sacrifice for me. At least, that is not the way I thought of it, and I don't think you did either. But if you made one, I will never ask you to continue it. Any time you want what you left you have only to put on your hat and go back and get it. This must be understood between us. You are under no compulsion to stay with me. If you gave up other things, it was because this was something you wanted more. Either our marriage was a gain for both of us, or it was a mistake."

"Why don't you go ahead and remind me that I proposed to you?" she said, too helpless in her own emotions to be sensible.

"Did you?" he asked coldly. "I thought the matter was spontaneous. I thought it was inevitable. Don't cheapen yourself with such a thought. But however it happened, it was not a sacrifice. I will not be sacrificed for. I don't want anybody to give up anything for me. Understand?"

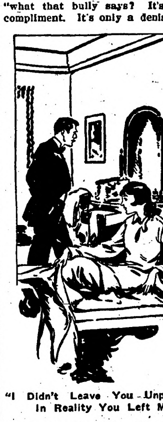
There was a moment of silence, and he went on swiftly:

"It may be that before we are through with this business of marriage it will be really hard for us. I don't know that I'll ever be what your family considers essential in a husband—a good provider. I may never make more than a small living for us. Sometimes, like now, I feel such power in me that I could go out and take life by the throat. I feel at times that there are big things in me, Ernestine. But perhaps all human beings feel that way. There are other moments when I'm not even sure that I can hold the job I have. What then? Maybe there is worse ahead of us, instead of better. What of that? Do we love each other, or don't we? Are we married, or are we simply having a lovely time and will go home when the party is over? You can do as you like. I will not interfere with your actions, but neither will I come home and account for my own. If Mr. Poole is drunk and it seems necessary to me to go home with him, you must allow me the exercise of my own judgment. I didn't leave you unprotected. In reality, you left me."

"It wasn't only that." She was actually defending herself. "It was everything. Lillian and Loring coming in on us, and Mr. Pastano—"

Half weeping, still partly in the hold of anger, she told him all that Mr. Pastano had said to her. He listened attentively, but made nothing of it.

"What do you care," he exclaimed, "what that bully says? It's only a compliment. It's only a denial of his whole code of morals. The fact that you could sit in his dirty place and still be so clean that even he could see it, gives the lie to all he says."



"I Didn't Leave You Unprotected. In Reality You Left Me."

"I don't understand anything," wailed Ernestine. "Only I was so hurt— I had to go off alone with them. You might have come with me. I was so happy, so thrilled, and then everything was spoiled without any warning. I can't adjust myself to things like you do—I don't understand. Of course I care what Mr. Pastano thinks. I don't want him to think you would take me out to associate with p-prostitutes!"

He sat on the edge of the bed now and held her hand and smoked another cigarette and thought about this. But they had come back into a calmer place. He began to reason with her in his steady voice, looking down at her with his kindled, intelligent eyes.

"You see, Ernestine, he's got the old line on things, and we, I believe, want the new. Pastano's morality and virtue are only for women. I've been there often, and he's made me very welcome. How unreal it is. Virtue a woman's prerogative, and a stone wall about her to insure it. A harem! You don't believe in walled gardens for wives, do you, Ernestine? After all, no man can protect his wife's virtue for her, if she is determined to throw it away."

"You think then that a husband has no responsibilities at all?"

"I didn't say that. Certainly he has responsibilities. He is to provide for her to the best of his ability. He is to share all his earnings and his honors with her. He is to shelter her and speak kindly to her and love her and not find fault. He is to be faithful in word and thought. He is to be natural in his relationship with her and avoid sentimentality. But also, she is to be a woman grown and unafraid, his equal, not a child for him to protect like a child."

"You are so hard," she wept, "so hard with me."

He bent and kissed her and pressed his face to hers. "It's life," he said. "We have to grow up. Life is hard."

Ernestine wakened next morning to find that the pain and confusion of the night before had vanished into a new and not unhappy perspective on her life.

For the first time she could see what a blow it had been to mamma and papa to have her living in Erie street, with no margin, no possessions, no possibility of restraint or economy. How difficult is was—perhaps for their sakes she ought to co-operate with mamma and papa to do something for them. Enough money for a decent flat—a small comfortable house—it would be so much easier for mamma.

But Ernestine felt again the cold wind on her cheeks, remembered vividly how she had wept, and how she had said, again and again, "I promise, Will—I promise." He had asked her for no such statement. She had done the bargaining. Whatever it cost—to her family or to herself—she would keep that promise to Will, and live on what he brought her until he himself told her to do otherwise.

Ernestine began to wonder if she would be as good a wife and mother as Elaine Briceland, when the time came that Will had made good.

She paused to consider this thought and smiled happily, for now she saw that for the first time she was entirely confident of Will's success. It had been as much longing as conviction before, but now she was sure. How hard he was! His hardness brought only admiration this morning, the practical respect of a practical person. "If you want to go back, you've only to put on your hat and do it!" She wondered how many men had the courage to take a stand like that.

She did not regret the quarrel at all. Her marriage had attained a new reality. She knew that she was not simply having a good time. She knew that she could not go home when the party was over. They had advanced from the honeymoon period into permanence.

In what way, here and now, could she make this new feeling practical, make it effective?

How would they meet the obligation of childbirth? Would she go home to mamma or to some hospital? They would have to plan without mamma if they were to be consistent. She understood that babies were frightfully expensive. She had read articles in magazines about them. Yet thousands of women with no more money than she possessed had babies. She would have to find out how they managed.

She would have to see a doctor, ask questions, answer them. She would have to find out the rates at different hospitals, under different conditions. And after she had investigated the matter and decided on her own plan, she would have to begin to save a definite amount every week, out of Will's pay, so that they might meet the emergency. That would be fun—to have money in her hand, when her time came!

She decided to say nothing to Will about this, until she knew. Like her mother, she must exercise her virtue privately and let results speak for her. She had a few dollars with which to open a savings account. There was a bank nearby, a branch of a downtown bank. She would get a metal coin chest for herself and Will.

Her mental activity now became physical, and she rose and dressed, kissed Will lightly on the cheek, and left a note on the dresser for him, lest he think she had taken his advice and gone home. Downstairs she found a box full of roses for her, and a card in it with a few words written in an erect elaborate script:

"To beg forgiveness for my rudeness, and to express the hope that we may be real friends some day.—L. S. Pastano."

Ernestine gave the roses to Mrs. Bennett without comment and went out.

Last April she had been a schoolgirl. Now she was filled with the solemn importance of wifehood and motherhood. The sweet air filled her with happiness. Her husband's face fled before her mind's eye, down the long curve of boulevard, an indignant countenance, fiery, strong. Her heart contracted within her at the thought of him and his love.

The visit to the doctor's was prolonged, but she reached mamma's house in time for lunch, and found the two women so full of Lillian's plans that she kept her own secret.

Determined to make the day complete she left early and set out for the long tiresome street car ride to the Northwest side. She was ashamed to realize how few were the visits she and Will had made to the little house where his mother and father lived. She was at her mother's home two or three times a week, but they had not been to see Will's mother half a dozen times in the months of their marriage. It was not intentional neglect, but it always seemed to work out that way, and Will had been as lax as she about spending his one day a week on that long journey.

Copper Mines of Chile Worked by the Incas?

What is now the world's largest known copper ore deposit was worked by the prehistoric Incas, judging by remains that have been found at and near the copper mines of Chuquicamata, Chile. Within the mine, primitive tools have been found from time to time, such as stone hammers and wooden shovels, as well as mummified remains of early Indian miners, one of which is now at the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

The ruins of Pucaro, an ancient fortified city destroyed by the Spaniards during their first invasion of Chile, are 25 miles from Chuquicamata. Ancient graves belonging to this prehistoric city have yielded bowls and other utensils of copper as well as bead necklaces made from brochantite and atacamite, minerals characteristic of the Chuquicamata deposits.

The Incas, reputed as pre-Columbian, America's best miners and metal workers, conquered this part of Chile about 1443, it is reliably estimated, and the old mines may, therefore, have been worked at least ninety years before the discovery of America.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Girl Hangs Self as Revenge on Jilter

Bekescsaba, Hungary.—As revenge on a man who jilted her, Anna ioerino, a Bekescsaba girl, hanged herself from the balcony of the church in which the unfaithful lover was being married to another girl.

Her body and a note explaining her reasons for killing herself were discovered by the wedding guests as they left the church.

BOY SLAYER GETS LIFE IN PRISON

State Spares Youth and Two Chums From Chair.

Elizabeth, N. J.—George Danlecki, fifteen years old, whose life the state sought to take for murder, was spared from death in the electric chair by a jury, but must pass the remainder of his life in prison. With two other youths, neither of whom has reached his majority, Danlecki was convicted of first-degree murder, with a recommendation of mercy.

The life sentence was mandatory on Judge Alfred A. Stein, notwithstanding that never in the history of the state had one so young been sent to prison for life. The other boys were William Gallagher, twenty, and William Garry, eighteen. All three lived in Elizabeth.

For three hours and twenty minutes the jury deliberated, but the question was not of their guilt. The state had convinced the twelve that the youths beat John Hayden to death with a piece of iron to rob him of $4.65. What they deliberated on was the question of taking the three lives in return.

The first vote, it was said, showed six for a straight verdict of guilty of first degree murder, and six for a recommendation of mercy.

The defendants stood motionless as the verdict was read. Garry then turned to his mother and shook his head. Gallagher's eyes filled as he regarded his eighteen-year-old wife, convulsed with sobs.

"I didn't do it," George Danlecki cried to his parents as he was led away.

Hard labor for the remainder of his life faces him. For almost half of the short span he has passed so far, life has meant little but hard labor. He started working when he was eight years old. He rebelled once and ran away. For a year and a half he was in a state reformatory to repent.

On February 17 Danlecki was riding in a motor car with the other boys. They picked up John Hayden, a mechanic, fifty-eight years old. When he resisted their attempt to rob him they beat him with a tire iron and fled to Virginia, taking Georges' sweetheart, Anna Ossowick along. It was her testimony which largely served to convict the three youths.

Says Husband Hid Her Behind Frosted Glass

New York.—Everett Van Houten, a Garden City (L. I.) real estate operator, was so jealous of his wife, Anna, that he had frosted glass put in the ground floor windows of their home and nailed down the windows, Mrs. Van Houten charged in affidavits asking Justice Mitchell May in Supreme court, Brooklyn, to give her $100 a week alimony pending trial of her separation suit.

Van Houten, in a cross affidavit, admitted having done so, but asserted it was to prevent his wife from flirting. Mrs. Van Houten denied she had flirted.

"My husband," said Mrs. Van Houten, "is a boss and a bully, who referred to my father, an estimable business man, as a stupid Dutchman and a buzzard.

"My husband is not a believer in the Supreme Being and shares Schopenhauer's views on women. He never permits me or our children to attend church."

Gets Two Years in Jail for Shooting at Mate

Los Angeles.—Because she fired five shots at a wealthy husband who had thrice tried to divorce her and whom she declares denied her necessary sustenance, Mrs. Helen Lois Andrade, sixty-six, has been sentenced to two years in the county jail by Superior Judge Emmet Wilson.

Mrs. Andrade, according to evidence presented at her trial, appeared in the driveway of her husband's palatial home in Beverly Hills last September and after meeting him and seeing his second "wife," Mrs. Judith Lavender Andrade standing in a doorway, drew a gun and opened fire. All of her shots missed.

Sentenced to Church; Fails; Goes to Jail

Columbus Junction, Iowa.—Harley Diller decided that there was a lot of difference between serving a jail sentence and a church sentence.

The youth, with several others, was sentenced to go to church every Sunday for a year because he aided his companions in trimming the van dyke of which Mayor Jerry Van Dyke of Fredonia, Iowa, so proudly boasted.

When Diller failed to carry out the church sentence, the judge gave him thirty days in jail.

BETTY WOULD MARRY REID

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

BETTY FULLER looked wistfully at the mountain. It seemed to be very near this morning. Betty had come from a little eastern town tucked in among the hills, and this calm, blue giant was the friendliest thing she had yet found out here. Teaching was homesick business. Yesterday a letter from home had made her cry for an hour. Dick Morrow was going to marry Peg Elmore. As she read the words Betty wished she had accepted Dick when he asked her, then she wouldn't have had to leave Pineville at all.

She stood now on the porch of the small ranch house gazing at the mountain. It seemed to beckon, to call. A curious thing, this solitary peak rising out of the vast southwestern plains. Old Bright Top, Mrs. Lowden called it. She knew no more about it than its name. The Lowdens hadn't been there very long; they were a young couple who were trying out ranch life. Betty's companionship, aside from her board money, had been warmly welcomed by Jenny Lowden.

Without a word to her hostess, who was busy in the kitchen, Betty went down the steps and out upon the trail which seemed to lead straight toward old Bright Top. It had been a little chilly inside, but out here the sun was warm and pleasant. Neither did the silence seem so oppressive as within the ranch house, where the jingle of pot or pan startled one horribly.

Betty walked on and on. The mountain drew her as a magnet. She thought longingly of the old elm at home which must just now be shedding its leaves. Oh, to rake leaves and burn them!

Somebody came riding toward her. She recognized the man. He was always hanging round the Lowdens when he wasn't away at work somewhere. Evenings he came riding up to the porch on his queer calico pony. Mrs. Lowden laughed and exchanged knowing glances with her husband whenever Reid Kilmer appeared. That made Betty angry. She would have nothing to say to the fellow. He wasn't the kind she was used to, not like Dick Morrow, with his sleek hair and graceful manner. Reid was coarse, rough, awkward, a bit ugly. He had narrow, far-seeing eyes, a grim mouth, skin burnt to the color of a ripe chinquapin. And he rode a branded horse.

She shrank aside now as Reid came near. She nodded so coldly that all he could do was to touch his wide-brimmed hat and ride on. But her cheeks burned at the look he had given her. No man had ever looked at her like that.

Betty didn't know that in the twenty-eight years of his clean-thinking, hard-working, vigorous life Reid had never seen a girl like herself. She was no novelty to men like Dick Morrow; any one of a dozen girls Dick knew were prettier and smarter than she. But to Reid, with his ideal of womankind all unmarred, Betty with her hair the color of a turned elm leaf, her brown eyes, red lips and dainty air of sophistication, which was augmented by the cherry-colored dress she wore—Betty was desirable and irresistible. The first glimpse of her had changed his whole life. He worshipped her with single-hearted passion.

She felt she was well rid of him when she heard the thump-thump of Watcheye's hoofs on the hard soil. Again he was close beside her. This time he held out to her his wide-brimmed hat.

"Better take it, ma'am. Sun's hotter than you reckon. You might get a touch of sun sickness."

"Thank you! I'm used to going bareheaded." Betty said coldly. She shrugged one cherry-colored shoulder as she walked on. The idea of his thinking she'd put that great, clumsy thing on her head! It didn't look very clean inside, either.

Reid looked after her wistfully. With a sigh he wheeled his pony and rode on. But again and again he looked back at the darling, bright little figure of the girl he loved. It troubled him when he thought of the sun rays pouring down on her sunny uncovered head.

The meeting with Reid had disconcerted Betty. It set her to thinking a lot of silly stuff. She saw that Reid was in love with her. Any man who loves any woman is not uninteresting to that woman. But in the present condition of her heart she wanted to hurt Reid all she could by snubbing him.

Suddenly she stopped in the trail, realizing that she had been marching forward for a long while. The mountain was no nearer. Above the ripe grass shimmered quivering heatwaves. Nothing was distinct. Looking back, she couldn't even see the ranch house. She felt strangely swimmy. She felt of the top of her head and found it hot. Sun sickness! Her heart sank.

"[illegible] I'd better run along home," [illegible] of herself.

The trail had petered out, crawled into the high, dry grass and lost itself. Close at hand she heard a strange, menacing rattle.

Nausea seized Betty. A step in any direction and she might put her foot in its strapped shoe and silk stocking down upon that horrible rattling danger. Death lurked. Just the other day Mrs. Lowden had told her about a man—she swayed as she stood. Covering her face with her hands she sobbed in terror.

Thump-thump! An arm went round her, courteously, kindly. She wilted on a hard yet wonderfully comfortable shoulder. A big hand scented with horse leather patted her arm.

"There, there! You're all right! I'm here!" murmured a deep voice.

"Do you hear it—that thing?" gasped Betty. She made a gesture.

"That's nothing. I'm here."

He put his hat on her aching head. He lifted her upon his pony. He took her home. For the rest of the day Jenny Lowden doctored and scolded her.

"Next time you want to take a walk you better ride," snapped Mrs. Lowden. "I thought you knew better than that! Bareheaded, too! Gosh, you tenderfeet make me tired."

A week passed. No sight or sound of Reid. He had ceased to hang round the Lowden ranch.

"Shouldn't wonder a mite if he was getting married," Jenny said. "Bess Slocum is a fine girl. She can ride anything on four feet. Took the prize at the Posy county rodeo."

Betty was silent. She'd thought a lot about Reid ever since that awful Saturday morning when he came to her rescue. Kindness, tenderness, a delicate reserve new to her in her contact with the boys of her own set—why, he was a thousand times more the gentleman than Dick Morrow!

She hoped he'd be happy with his Bess.

She had dismissed the school one afternoon and was getting ready to go home when she heard a knock at the door. Reid stood there, grim-mouthed, grave. Betty's brown eyes flashed welcome.

"Thought maybe you'd let me walk along home with you," Reid said.

"Of course! I'm just ready."

They walked along, the calico pony following.

"Are you married, Reid?" Betty asked.

"Married! Who to?"

"To Bess Slocum."

"Bess is my cousin. Cousins don't marry in our family. Bess and I don't hitch good anyway. What gave you that idea?"

"You've been away so long—"

"Sure. Getting me some decent clothes. I—I couldn't ask you to marry a buckaroo, could I, honey?"

"Clothes don't matter much to me," Betty said softly.

"Don't they, honey? I was afraid they might. You've been used to different ways of living—I've had a good bit of schooling, honey. I've got a fine ranch. I've got money saved up—" His voice faltered, he looked at her anxiously.

"Stop! Stop!" cried Betty. "I told you clothes don't matter. Neither does anything else where you're concerned. I'd marry you, Reid, even though you weren't anything but—but a buckaroo!"

American Fathers Held Neglectful of Duties

American children, particularly boys, develop unevenly these modern days because they do not get enough attention from their fathers. The modern boy lacks a fair opportunity because the average father, preoccupied with business, denies him the adult masculine companionship he needs.

Once a little boy on a farm trotted about at his daddy's heels as he plowed; today elaborate farm machinery does the work and there is no place for the boy. Once the town child followed his daddy about on evenings as he mowed the lawn, worked the garden or looked after his horse; but today the father hurries off to the golf links and the child must find other amusement. Once the family had three meals together, but now the father generally breakfasts alone and lunches at a club or restaurant, so that the opportunity for table intimacy is reduced two-thirds. Once for the evenings, there was a family reading table and games, but today daddy is off to his club, or to a meeting, or to improve his form, or his technique, or his mind. The frivolous find frivolity and the serious-minded find extension courses until there is no time for the deeper joys of leisurely family companionship.

Do American fathers realize that the tie between father and son is the most unbreakable tie possible to mortals? That unless this tie is forged of work and play together, of many little experiences in common, the father's life may in the end be blessed with only the dry husks of his fatherhood—its worry and responsibility?—Anna Shannon Monroe in Good Housekeeping.

Big Buddha

Most travelers are familiar with pictures of the mammoth figure of Buddha in Japan. It may be seen at Kamakura, a pleasant summer resort near Yokohama, which is also famous for its beaches and beautiful mountain top views. The Daibutsu, or Big Buddha is the largest bronze casting in existence, and sits in state upon a lotus flower, with a calm and peaceful expression. His eyes of pure gold seem to be absorbed in meditation. On his head are 830 curls each nine inches high, representing the snails which, according to legend, crawled on his head to shelter its bald surface from the sun's rays.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

COULD HARDLY DO HER WORK

Strengthened by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mission, Tex.—"I have used a good deal of your medicine and always find it gives wonderful help. I was feeling so weak and miserable that I had to lie down very often and I could hardly do my housework. I read in the paper how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped other women who were in the same condition so I said I will try it for myself. I am very much better now and I recommend this medicine, and will answer letters from women asking about it."—MRS. J. W. ALBERTSON, 1015 Miller Avenue, Mission, Texas.

BOTH HANDS GONE, HE'S POSTMASTER

World War Veteran Waited Long for Job.

Bell, Calif.—If the same determination displayed by Charles C. M. McGonegal, thirty-four, veteran of the World war, in refusing to allow the loss of both of his hands to be an insurmountable handicap, is shown in his administration of the post office, that office is due for an enviable career.

McGonegal has officially assumed his duties as postmaster here following nine months of waiting for governmental red tape to untangle the questions which arose regarding the eligibility of a man without hands to serve in that capacity. The appointment was confirmed recently by the senate.

A member of the First division, McGonegal was among the first to reach France and served there eight months before he received the injuries which deprived him of his hands. He was in a raiding party, he said, out to destroy a nest of machine guns. As he went forward, a grenade in each hand, he was stunned by the high explosives of a heavy barrage and both of the grenades went off in his hands.

After his discharge from a war hospital in this country, McGonegal said he realized he could not allow the loss of his hands and forearms, just below the elbow, to wreck his life, and he lost no time learning to manipulate the hooks which must serve him in their stead. Sometimes he would stay up until two or three o'clock in the morning practicing and he still learns new tricks with the hooks every day.

He drives a machine without any extra appliances or devices, about 17,000 miles a year. He pilots a plane and, although the Department of Commerce thus far has refused him a pilot's license, he says he will put up a fight before he gives up the determination to have a pilot's license just for his own personal pleasure in flying. He fishes, hunts, swims and rides horseback.

As he talks he nonchalantly reaches into a vest pocket for a cigarette, dexterously lights the match, picks a piece of lint from his coat sleeve, stops for a moment to reach for the telephone, mops his brow with a handkerchief (the first day as postmaster was a bit hectic), handles paper and letters as easily as a person with two hands, writes and in every way proves that he has not allowed his affliction to cramp his style.

Beer 150 Years Old Is Found Behind Old Wall

Worcester, England.—Four dozen bottles of good old English beer, about 150 years old, have been discovered at Sudeley castle, near here. These bottles of old time luxury were found during restoration operations, bricked up behind one of the solid stone walls of the castle where Queen Katherine Parr, the only one of Henry VIII's six wives to survive him, is buried. The beer was tasted and found to be in perfect condition.

Farmer Has One-Legged Chick

Lindsay, Calif.—L. A. Gannon announces that a one-legged white leghorn chick was hatched on his ranch in an incubator with a lot of normal baby chicks. It seems comparatively easy to hatch chicks with extra legs, while double chicks and other freaks sometimes hatch from double yolk eggs, but so far as is known a one-legged chick is something of a rarity.

RETINA OF EYE IS SENSITIVE DETECTOR

Vision Requires Small Fraction of Energy.

Boston.—If man paid for optical energy at the rate charged for electricity for domestic use, his vision would cost him less than one trillionth of a trillionth of a cent per second. This energy used every second for seeing is the millionth part of the millionth of an erg. It takes about 1,000 ergs to lift a thirtieth of an ounce half an inch.

Dr. Charles Sheard, director of physics and biophysical research of the Mayo foundation at Rochester, Minn., made these revelations of minute quantities before the American Optometrist association in convention here.

Like a Radio Receiver.

"The retina of the eye," he said, "is one of the most sensitive energy receivers and detectors known. It may be thought of as a radio receiver, although it does not respond to stimulation by ordinary waves, for it is a very selective set and is tuned to radiant energy of wave lengths within a single octave, lying between four and eight ten-millionths of a meter or yard. These waves, like radio waves, travel at a speed of 186,000 miles a second and are the shorter sisters of the much taller ones we have christened radio.

"The sensitivity of the eye is extraordinary. Employing the Einstein equation of the energy required to cause the expansion of a single electron with a ray of green light, we may conclude that a single energy quantum for green light is sufficient to excite vision.

"This is saying that the liberation of a single electron in the retina by a green or blue light can excite the sensation of vision in the brain. A millionth of a millionth of an erg per second is the energy or power necessary for vision.

Millionth of a Millionth.

"Since it requires the millionth part of the millionth of an erg to cause the emission of one electron at the retina and thus to set up the sensation of vision, then we know that if these thousand ergs to which we have referred could be used up at the rate of a millionth part of the millionth of an erg and if there were no dissipation or loss of energy an eye would have something of the order of a million years of vision. Indeed, it seems almost incredible and inconceivable.

"But the millionth of a millionth of an erg is a mighty small amount of energy. No more startling, however, than the statement made by an American Nobel prize winner in physics, when he says that the number of electrons contained in the quantity of electricity which courses through an ordinary incandescent lamp and for which one should pay, if such were possible, one hundred thousandth of a cent is so large that if all of the several million inhabitants of Chicago were to begin to count out these electrons and were to keep counting them at the rate of two a second, and if none of them were ever to stop, sleep, or die, it would take them just 20,000 years to finish the task."

Old-Fashioned Thrift Staging Big Comeback

Chicago.—Plain, old-fashioned thriftiness is staging a big comeback in the American home.

The present year will see all previous records for efficient spending by housewives eclipsed hands down, according to Dr. H. E. Barnard of Washington, famous authority on food and pioneer worker in the drafting of America's pure food and drug laws.

"Reasons for the present trend toward careful consideration of the pennies are sound and have little relation to paper losses in Wall Street," declared Doctor Barnard, in an address here. "The modern woman has learned business methods and she is merely putting her knowledge to use. Wasting dollars isn't good form. And so millions of mothers in well-organized and efficiently operated homes are buying with careful thought of the real values in food, furniture, clothing, and other necessity that contributes to the family health and happiness."

Arkansas to Have World's Largest Fish Hatchery

Lonoke, Ark.—A fish hatchery, which upon completion in 1931, will be the largest in the world, is under construction here.

Conceived by the Arkansas Fish and Game commission, the hatchery costing approximately $200,000 is being financed by revenue derived from the sale of state hunting and fishing licenses.

Construction work and stocking of the plant is under the direction of Dell Brown, superintendent of the United States Bureau of Fisheries.

Monkeys Have Feast on Cigar, Then Get Sick

Minot, N. D.—Tobacco and monkeys don't mix, Mattie and Lindy, two monkeys in the Minot zoo, found out.

Mattie snatched a lighted cigar from a spectator, extinguished the lighted end and, aided by Lindy, proceeded to consume the stogie.

Several minutes later the two little animals were rolling and moaning in agony, but their keeper soon had administered the necessary antidotes.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Greater New York is divided into five boroughs. According to the latest census reports, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond and the Bronx have gained in population, while Manhattan has lost. The loss is reported as 18 per cent.

There is an old and wealthy gentleman in this city, for whose opinions most of us have a deep regard. He predicted to me that the day would come when nobody would live on the island of Manhattan. He said that within a comparatively few years Manhattan would be entirely given over to business, and that workers all would be brought in from outside by tunnels, bridges and viaducts. He thought this would especially be true when they developed airplanes to the point where they could land on small spaces.

* * *

Others do not agree with this diagnosis. They think that the workers of New York will some day live in sort of model tenements and apartments erected on the top of tall office buildings. They vision huge buildings, each a village in itself, with stores, movie theaters and all kinds of things under one roof. They think these buildings will be over 100 stories high, with perhaps 50 stories devoted solely to business.

* * *

Airplane enthusiasts talk of the time when rich New Yorkers will live 200 miles away from the city, coming to business each morning in express cruisers of the air, which will land them on the roofs of their office buildings, drive home and return for them after business hours.

* * *

All of these speculations make us rather envy the youngest generation, now traveling in perambulators. How will they travel, and what things will they see, fifty years from now?

* * *

Among the best known imports from Canada to the United States have been artists and illustrators. Russell Patterson came from Ottawa. Cory Kilvert was a Canadian. H. J. Mowat was born in Canada. Arthur William Brown was a Hamilton boy. There are countless others.

* * *

When Arthur William Brown was young, the Hamilton Spectator, the first newspaper of the Southam chain, also was young and small. It didn't have halftone or electrotyping processes, or any facilities for reproducing original drawings, but thought it should have a political cartoon. If this cartoon could not be put in the paper, it could be put in the window, and that is what happened. An elderly artist was engaged, on a piece-work basis; he drew the cartoons on brown paper in crayon and colored chalk. The cartoons were hung in the window and subscribers walked by and looked at them, just as they now look at the electric and window bulletins displayed by New York papers.

* * *

This window display stirred the artistic soul of the sixteen-year-old A. W. Brown. He went home, drew some pictures, and took them down to the paper. One was accepted and hung in the window, beside the regular cartoon. That was a big day for a famous illustrator of the future. More of his work was accepted and finally, when the St. Louis chalk-plate process came in, enabling small papers to make and publish illustrations of their own, Brown was hired as an artist. His salary was $4 per week.

* * *

Brown was getting along well until the sinking of the Maine. He was handicapped in the making of that illustration by the fact that he didn't know how to draw water. As a consequence, he almost lost his job. After that, he saved all the New York papers and, when he was stuck, copied something from these files. Then came the Boer war and he drew, from photographs, practically every general engaged in it; also pictures of the men who went to war from the home town.

* * *

By the time Brown had worked for the Spectator four years, he was not only doing political cartoons, portraits of prominent persons, pictures of local interest, and illustrations for news dispatches, but covering police court news when the regular reporter was on his vacation. In the four years he had worked up to $9 per week and had saved $200. With this he came to New York. He is now one of the highest paid illustrators in the world.

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Happy Woman Tells How She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Wilson Merely Amused by "Cheeky" Youngster

President Hoover is said to be fully as reserved as the man he succeeded. Although people in private conversation often referred to Mr. Coolidge as "Cal," no one ever personally addressed him that way and it is said that none of Mr. Hoover's closest friends call him "Bert" or "Herb."

This was much the case with the late President Wilson, but in his case, a few old friends continued, in correspondence, to address him as "Tommy" long after he had dropped his baptismal name of Thomas.

Once, while Wilson was making a western tour, a little chap yelled "Hello, Woody."

Young America's effrontery amused Mr. Wilson. In his speech that evening he referred to it and remarked that he had no objection to being thus addressed provided it was not meant to be descriptive.

SECTIONS WHERE SAVINGS DECREASED

A regional analysis of the drop in the nation's savings deposits in banks, as recently reported by the American Bankers Association's Savings Bank Division in its annual compilation for 1929 showing the first recession in national savings in the twenty years during which it has published this data, reveals that all sections except the New England and the Pacific States groups recorded losses.

The published figures showed that on June 29, 1929, the total savings deposits in banks and trust companies of continental United States stood at $28,217,656,000, which was $195,305,000 below the similar total for 1928, when there was an increase of $2,300,000,000.

The regional analysis by state groups discloses, however, that the six New England states as a group gained more than $88,300,000 in savings and 152,984 in savings depositors, while the seven Pacific states as a group gained over $79,000,000 in deposits and nearly 278,000 in number of depositors. The gains in these two sections, however, were smaller than the gains recorded there for 1928. The sections which showed losses are the Middle Atlantic States, Southern States, East Central States and the West Central States.

One Killed In Auto Accident

Five boys from the Gatzke country took a bad spill in a new Ford coach late Saturday night at the end of the graveled highway going east from Middle River. The car was driven by Gust Monson son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Monson of Randeen and four other neighbor boys were riding with him. They had been to a dance about five miles northWest of Gatzke and were going into th t village when the accident happenned.

They drove a little too fast and when they came to the to the turn at the end of the graveled road they saw they could not make it so they drove straight ahead but missed the culvert by about four feet and plunged into a deep wide ditch, almost burying the front end of the car.

The car which stopped dead in a flash of a second throwed the occupants out through the windows and top. Monson had his jaw broken in two places and is in the Grygla hospital under doctor's care. One of the other boys had his nose broken and one had a hip hurt, while one of them came out of the accident unhurt. But the saddest part of all was that the fifth occupant, Vernon Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Pete Nelson of Gatzke, was killed in the crash. His head was crushed in the corner of the top of the car as it came to such a sudden stop.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Higgin and family of Bronson, Mr. and Mrs. H. Heinze and daughter Alice, F. Heinze and Mr. and Mrs B. C. Heinze and family called at the Wm. Fluke home Sunday.

Pennington County Fair July 30-31 Aug. 1-2

The cities may have their talkies and their marathon dances, but the country has its fairs.

Without passing judgement as to which may be the better form of attraction, we believe there is no denying that the fairs, county, or state, offer both the city man and the farmer a medium for recreation, pleasure and education that performs a real service.

For the fair is not all red lemonade, hot dogs and "hoss races".

Where is the farm woman who does not feel a justifiable thrill of pride when the ribbon is placed upon her needlework, or her culinary products? Where is the farmer who does not experience a glow of satisfaction when his livestock entry is judged a winner? And rightly so!

This year, as in the past, not the least valuable feature of the fair will be the display of equipment for the field and the farmstead, of interest both to the man who is seeking to save time and labor in his operations, and to the woman who sees what home conveniences have meant to her neighbors.

Fair-time is the time for renewing old friendships and for making new ones, for talking politics, crops and business. But really it is a time when the whole family can go and leave the work for a day or two and have a big time.

The Pennington County Fair will be in full swing next week, July 30-31 and August 1-3.

Will Restore Lake Bottom

Condemnation proceedings to acquire lands in the Thief Lake bottoms and for a number of miles along ditches emptying into the old lake bottoms for the purpose of restoring the lake as a game refuge and public shooting grounds, were started last week, publication of the proceedings being made in the Warren Sheaf. The hearing for the proceedings will take place at the court rooms in the City of Warren on Aug. 26 at 11 a. m. W. E. Rowe, attorney from Crookston, is serving as special assistant attorney general for the state of Minnesota in the proceedings and has been in charge of all legal matters pertaining to the restoration of the lake.

A new Physical Education building is rapidly taking form on the campus of the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston. This building will be a two story structure covering an area of 123 by 78 feet, and will be of fireproof construction throughout. It will be devoted entirely to physical education purposes, with offices and equipment rooms on the ground floor. The second floor can be reached by two main stairways on either end of the building and also by two smaller stairs coming up from the locker rooms below. These stairways lead directly into a large room 75 by 92. The basketball court will measure 45 x 80 feet with ample space for some 700 seats for spectators.

The rapid increase in enrollment during recent years has made it necessary to include extensive alternations to Kiehle building as a part of the building program for the summer. The library is to be enlarged and many other much needed improvements completed before the opening of the fall term the later part of September.

Hail Storm Does Damage To Crops In This County

A hail storm that nearly reached cyclonic force, tore lose in the northwest corner of Marshall County late last Friday afternoon and passed on thru the central southern part cutting a swat several miles wide in some places. The storm hit a few miles southwest of here and cleared the fields in its way of farm crops. Some farmers went out and raked up their oats for hay and they did not have to use a mower as the straw was cut off about three inches from the ground. In the territory around Stephen and Argyle thousands of acres of fields of fine stands of grain were left black as tho they were plowed.

The storm kept going southeast, hitting the city of Thief River Falls a hard blow in the west side. It wrecked the race horse barns, and the old and new Grand stands at the County Fair grounds and done a lot of damage to trees, buildings, and gardens.

Oscar Hagglund, who is employed in the paper mill at International Falls spent the week with home folks.

For Removing Road Oil

In response to several requests we are reprinting a recipe for removing road oil from cars, which was published several weeks ago in a Highway bulletin. The recipe is brief and simple:

Mix one pint auto engine oil and two quarts of gasoline. Apply to the parts of car spattered with road oil. After five minutes wash off with soap and water. This should be done as soon as possible after you get home, before the road oil or tar sets.

With present methods of applying bituminous road material, and mixing with new gravel, the damage to cars is not as great as a few years ago, when the rule was to "slop it on thick," without any gravel covering. The spattering of oil or tar on the cars can be further minimized if drivers will slow down to moderate speeds when going over newly treated roads or streets. But when a car does get spattered, the ower likes to clean it quickly and save the finish.

Opening the "Door of Unity" in Plymouth, England

Albert Halstead, American consul general at Plymouth, England, opening the "door of unity" leading to the Prysten house of St. Andrew's church. The service is unique in the history of the church because of its international character. Coincident with the opening of the door, the unveiling of the memorial to two American naval officers who were buried on the spot in 1813 took place.

Jidda is Front Door of Mecca

Scene of Recent Disaster in Which Moslem Pilgrims Lost Lives.

Washington.—Jidda, venerable Red sea port in the harbor of which more than one hundred Moslems recently lost their lives aboard a burning pilgrim ship, is "the front door of Mecca," famous heart of the Moslem world, according to a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"Jidda's wall, inclosing about 30,000 Moslems, and a mere handful of 'infidels' (non-Moslems), rises above the sun-baked eastern shore of the Red sea about midway between Aden and Suez," says the bulletin. "Coral reefs stretch menacing arms into the broad natural Jidda harbor; and large vessels, bearing thousands of pilgrims annually from Africa, Asia, and even the East Indies, anchor beyond these obstacles.

Visited by Few "Infidels."

"A thrilling ride on a choppy sea in a small craft; a short stay at an island quarantine station if one is healthy and clean; and other short boat ride, and the traveler sets foot on the Jidda quay, a feat that only a few 'infidels' have accomplished, for Jidda does not extend a Gothamlike welcome to non-Moslems, nor does the hot sun and dust of the city's streets attract many curious travelers. The 'infidel' population, most of which is engaged in business for foreign establishments and foreign governments, numbers about 50.

"A bright Arabian sun beating upon the white wall and the long two-story white customs house which introduces Jidda, causes the traveler to squint and, unless he possesses sun glasses, the wrinkles about his eyes become set before he has lived long in the city.

"In the tortuous streets beyond the customs building, bordering houses, nearly all of them balconied, offer some shade; but these choice spots are often occupied by loitering natives, some enjoying their gurgling water pipes, some discussing the latest caravan that left for the Holy City, and some squatting at the feet of their donkeys which are for hire. Now and then one comes upon one of these stubborn quadrupeds with nose, neck, and the area around the eyes painted in such a manner that they would make splendid partners for western circus clowns.

"Here and there Jidda streets open into small squares. The traveler, who has been blindly working his way through clouds of dust raised by shuffling camels' hoofs, heaves a sigh of relief on entering such a broad breathing space. Shortly, however, he finds that the square affords merely a larger area than the streets for caravans to assemble in, a broader area of dust to be stirred with every movement of an animal or a human being, and a greater opportunity for the sun's rays to have an unhampered thrust at already parched pedestrians.

Camels Are Local Taxis.

"To see Jidda travelers must walk or mount a camel, for automobiles have not yet invaded the taxi field of this city. One may hire a place in a shugduf, a wooden frame fitted over a camel's hump with a tray on each side forming seats for passengers. The shugduf is kept in place mainly by balance. The natives often are amused when an uninitiated visitor in one side of a shugduf thoughtlessly leaves his seat and his companion in the other seat is precipitated to the ground.

"Perhaps the most comfortable spots in Jidda are in the bazaars where extending roofs shade the street, allowing only thin pencils of sunlight to touch the human mass below. In one bazaar street the traveler rubs elbows with black Moslems from Africa, deeply tanned Arabians, and yellow, brown, and reddish brown Asiatics. Many are permanent residents; others are here to fulfill one of the greatest aspirations in the life of a Moslem—a visit to Mecca."

Let Baby Cry, Don't Pet Him, Says Doctor

Toronto, Ont.—The baby who cries for petting and gets it is a potential burden on the juvenile courts, in the opinion of Dr. Alan Brown, professor of pediatrics at the University of Toronto.

Addressing the Ontario Medical association recently Doctor Brown said that two-week old infants who stop crying when their parents take them in their arms have learned to "put it over their parents like a tent."

Parents should be guided by the physician's advice concerning the details of early training in habits of obedience and habit formation, he said.

WIDOW WINS FORTUNE IN OIL FROM LAND IDLE 47 YEARS

Fifteen Producing Wells on Once Worthless Property Bring Big Income.

Austin, Texas.—When the late George B. Zimpleman, formerly postmaster of Austin, purchased in 1878 a section of semidesert land in Pecos county for approximately $100, he had no reason to believe he was making an investment that would bring a fortune to his sole heir, Mrs. Jennie Z. Torberg, of Austin, widow of one of Zimpleman's grandsons.

The 640 acres formed too small a tract of land to be of any use for ranching purposes and it had no agricultural value. Mr. Zimpleman died a few years ago, but during his life he had paid the taxes on the land and it was passed on to his heir without any debt standing against it. Mrs. Torberg came into possession upon the death of her husband, and not long afterward she leased the section for oil and gas exploitation.

She was to receive a bonus of $1 an acre and one-eighth royalty on all oil and gas produced. This transaction took place in 1925. For 47 years the land had been idle. It was not even fenced. Then came the discovery of oil on the ranch of Ira W. Yates, which adjoined the Torberg section.

Wells were drilled in Mrs. Torberg's 640 acres and today the Cardinal Oil company has nine producing wells and the Dixie Oil company has six producing wells upon the tract of land. An enormous income is being received by Mrs. Torberg from her royalties.

"Act of God" Verdict Given in Damage Suit

Providence, R. I.—When a two-room house on Gooseberry island in Salt Pond, South Kingston, was being moved to a new location recently, the structure toppled over and was wrecked.

William A. Phelan of Burrillville, owner of the dwelling, brought suit for $3,000 damages from James E. Wright of South Kingston, contractor.

The court returned a verdict for the defendant, upholding his contention that destruction of the house was "an act of God," since a 72-mile wind arose and blew it over.

INDIA AND ITS PEOPLES

By Capt. L. R. Claud Robinson

A BRIEF SURVEY OF INDIAN HISTORY

IF WE try to form a mental picture of Indian history, we see a confused procession of kingdoms taking shape and dissolving again. Here and there great figures stand out—the founders of mighty dynasties or the makers of kingdoms. At one moment we are dazzled by the magnificence of some unusually brilliant reign; in the next, we are left contemplating the ruins of all this greatness subsiding amidst anarchy and confusion.

In the Fourth century, B. C., Chandragupta holds our attention as he wrests an empire from the generals of Alexander. A century later we find Asoka is equally compelling for his patronage of Buddhism, which resulted in its becoming one of the greatest religions in the world. In the Second, Fourth and Seventh centuries, we catch passing glimpses of great sovereigns in Kanishka, Samudragupta and Harsha; and in the Eighth century we witness the rise of the celebrated warrior clans of the Rajputs. During the Rajput dominion Buddhism was attacked and vanquished by Hinduism.

Hardly have we realized the meaning and greatness of the Rajput sway than we see new forces pouring through the defiles of the northwest frontier, conquering, slaying and proselytising, and assailing Hinduism with a militant fanaticism inspired by a creed which recognized only one God. With this Mohammedan conquest of India, we inevitably associate the fierce figure of Mahmud of Gazni in the Eleventh century, and the resplendent epoch of the Mogul dynasty. Towards the close of the Mogul period, we see the close of the Marathas of the Deccan, and once more we witness that familiar sight in Indian history of a great empire crumbling and finally disappearing from the land.

While there is romance in plenty to color these fleeting pictures of the mind, our impressions, based on hard fact, will show us that it is war that casts its sinister shadow over the whole; the result of fierce ambition and a clash of rival creeds. Nor does the early period of European ascendancy in the East differ in this respect from the eras which preceded it. Spain, Portugal, France, Holland and Great Britain, fought fiercely for dominion until at length a single power emerged triumphant.

* * *

ONE CANNOT GENERALIZE ABOUT INDIA

NINE people out of ten still talk of the people of India, when they mean the peoples of that continent. When over a period of time one has been brought into contact with the business-like parsi of Bombay, the indolent and easy-going Burman, the cultured Brahman of southern India, the primitive Kohl or Bhil of the jungles of Central India, the emotional inhabitant of the towns of Bengal, the cheerful hill men of the eastern Himalayas, the great landowners of the United Provinces and the Punjab, the proud aristocracy of Rajputana, the wild Afridi of the Northwest frontier and the picturesque people of Baluchistan, one realizes it is impossible to generalize about India.

One does not generalize about Europe, and in some respects Europe is far more homogeneous than India. Nevertheless there are certain rough generalizations which may be made. Thus it may be said that India is essentially an agricultural country, 72 per cent of her people, or approximately 210,000,000 being dependent in one form or another upon agriculture for their livelihood. The population as a whole lives in small towns and villages. There are on the whole of this huge continent less than 750 towns with a population of 10,000, and only 30 towns with a population of 100,000 and upwards.

Again, take the case of climate. In a general way India is a hot country; and the fact that there are parts of India where cold weather is experienced during certain seasons, and other parts where winter of almost arctic severity prevails, does not disprove the general contention. If India were not a hot country, it is unlikely that her people would consume about 2,000,000 miles of cotton cloth every year, as in point of fact they do.

It may also be asserted that as a general rule the outstanding characteristics of Mohammedan architecture are its simple grandeur of outline, its purity and its stateliness, while Hindu architecture is characterized by an amazing detail of ornamentation and elaborate intricacy of design.

Lastly, it is undoubtedly the case, excepting in those regions which are dominated by Mohammedanism, that the Hindu doctrine of transmigration exercises an almost universal sway.

These are generalizations which are unquestionably true. But having made them as a protest against a too rigid interpretation of the statement that one cannot generalize about India, let me add that I subscribe to it on the whole.

Wife of Doctor Sues for Love

Long Beach, Calif. — Mrs. Fay K. Bowles, millionaire Long Beach society woman, has been made defendant in a sensational $600,000 alienation suit filed by Mrs. Portia L. Terry, wife of a prominent physician.

The complaint charges that Mrs. Bowles deliberately stole the love of Dr. Roy A. Terry, well knowing that he was happily married to the plaintiff.

The wife especially sets forth that Mrs. Bowles, who is reputed to be worth $1,000,000 in her own right, on various occasions went away from Long Beach with Doctor Terry. On such trips Mrs. Bowles, posed as Mrs. Terry, the plaintiff declares.

DAD SPANKS HER; SHE TURNS BANDIT

Loots Toronto Bank With Sister's Husband.

Toronto.—Because she considered herself too old to be spanked, Kathleen Boyle, seventeen, of Buffalo, faces a two-year term in an Ontario reformatory.

Angered when her father chastised her for returning late from a dance, Kathleen left her home in Buffalo, and came to visit her sister, Mrs. Cecil Irving, here. She found her sister near destitution, with one small child, and another expected soon; and, in a desperate attempt to raise funds for the family, Kathleen agreed, with her brother-in-law, Cecil Irving, to turn bandit.

The couple looted a Toronto bank of $2,800, but were captured within four hours, and sentenced within four days—Kathleen to the reformatory and Irving to Kingston penitentiary for fifteen years. Irving will also receive thirty lashes and will be deported to the United States at the completion of his term.

Irving and Kathleen, after a careful survey of several banks, entered the Dundas street and Gladstone avenue branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, a few moments before closing time. Kathleen, armed with a revolver—a dummy—kept guard at the door, while Irving, with a rifle, from which he fired two shots by way of warning, drove the staff into the vault, and looted the teller's cage. The man was recognized by the proprietor of a restaurant, behind which he abandoned his rifle; and this clew led to the arrests, and to the recovery of the stolen money.

French Woman Has Bullet in Tongue for 12 Years

Paris.—For twelve years a Parisian woman lived and talked freely with a revolver bullet in her tongue. Recently she visited a doctor's office and complained of a tickling sensation in her tongue. An examination revealed a nob on the tip of the oral organ, and a slight incision disclosed the presence of a metallic substance. Baffled for an explanation, the doctor ordered an X-ray taken. The plates showed that a lead bullet was lodged in her tongue.

Upon removal, the lead was found to weigh two and one-half grams and to fit a fairly large caliber revolver. After questioning, the patient admitted that she had been shot through the cheek twelve years ago but had thought the bullet had passed through her cheeks.

Boy Scouts Set Broken Leg of Brother Scout

Butte, Mont.—Value of Boy Scout training was dramatically demonstrated the other day when a group of thirteen and fourteen-year-old scouts set the broken leg of a companion scout, placed the injured member in an improvised cast and did such a good all around job that a physician later said it could not be improved.

As he was climbing up a mountain, Ben Wright, thirteen, slipped and broke his leg just above the ankle.

Instantly scout discipline and training came to the fore. One boy hurried to notify the scout leader who was far behind, another skilfully joined the broken ends of the bone while others gathered and split saplings. They fashioned splints, placed them around the injured leg and bound them tightly with their multi-colored neckerchiefs.

Cow Saves Calf From Death in Swift Current

Stevensville, Mont.—Jack Campbell, farmer, was driving a cow and calf along the Missoula river bank when the calf suddenly ran ahead and jumped into the river. In a trice it was swept under by swift currents.

Without hesitation the mother plunged into the swift stream, waited until its loved one emerged and then, apparently, instructed the calf to rest its head on the mother's neck. Thus anchored the calf was guided slowly but surely to shore and safety.

Consider the poor fish!

A TRUE sportsman is as careful about his pipe tobacco as he is about his lures. Why distress the poor fish and taint the pure air with a strong pipe when Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking tobacco costs so little, and is so mild and fragrant? The success of the Sir Walter Raleigh blend is due to the use of very choice Burleys, which, although mild, lack neither body nor flavor. THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Will and Ernestine have their first quarrel. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account.

CHAPTER VI

—10—

Ernestine Asks a Favor

When Ernestine reached her mother-in-law's house, she was astonished to find a crowd of people standing about the door, and to see a taxi just driving away, and another car at the curb. When she came into the group, every one fell silent, and Ernestine looked at the faces with curiosity and a sense of fear.

"What's the matter?" she said nervously to a big housewife who opened the door for her.

"Will's been trying to find you—they just brought his pa home. He's dead—dropped dead at his work today, and his ma's real bad. I got Will on the telephone, at the paper, and he came right out here, but he didn't know where you was."

Ernestine stood staring at her, and her hand went up to her heart in a frightened gesture.

"Where's Will?" she asked wildly.

"He's in with his ma. Go still—the doctor's working with her. She's been awful bad the last few days. I've been with her all the time."

"But she didn't tell us."

"She thought she'd be better—she's been sick so long—"

Will looked up as she came in and called her name softly. She went straight to him and put her arms around him. His face was wet with tears—he was not the positive, fiery creature with whom she had quarreled so bitterly the night before, but a little boy, lost and confused. She kissed him quickly, several times, and he said to her:

"I'm glad you got here—Mrs. Bennett didn't know where you were. Oh, Ernestine—mom's so sick—the doctor doesn't know whether she'll ever be better—and dad gone like that—just like a breath. I haven't seen him for three weeks."

"Darling—he'd want to go—quickly," said Ernestine, feeling the futility of words—the emptiness of comfort. It wasn't her father, her conscience told her. She and Will had been neglectful.

The doctor came out of the bedroom and asked Ernestine crisply to get him some hot water. Ernestine took off her fur coat and her little red hat and went into the kitchen. There was a fire in the small range, and awkwardly she put some coal upon it and set the teakettle on to heat. The doctor asked her for towels. She waited on him as well as she could and accepted in silence his sharp reprimand when she was clumsy.

The neighbors had dissolved. Mrs. Schluss, who lived next door, came in and made a little supper. She put it on the kitchen table and said to Ernestine:

"See if you can get Will to eat—he's in there crying."

"I will," said Ernestine, and Mrs. Schluss went on:

"You'll have to stay here, now, I guess. Will's ma shouldn't have been left alone, and now, his pa's dead, there's nobody to look out for her but you and Will."

"Of course I'll come," said Ernestine. "I'd have come before, if I had known that I was needed. We didn't want to be a burden—"

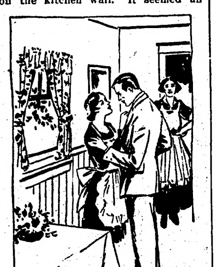
She found this phrase in her mind as she coaxed Will to eat a little supper. Had their motives been entirely unselfish, in going to Erie street? Hadn't they wanted to be alone—away from his people? Should she have stayed with Will's mother, and nursed her, and done the work? There was no question but that Mrs. Schluss, and probably other neighbors as well, thought that she should. Her heart ached with remorse.

Will stayed in the kitchen with her, and Ernestine washed the dishes and put them all away, going to him at times and patting or caressing him. The undertaker came, the doctor left and returned about nine o'clock. He called Will into the other room, but after a time Will came back into the kitchen, where Ernestine sat, not knowing what to do.

"Ernestine—" Will looked at her uncertainly; his eyes appeared small and red with weeping, his nose seemed unusually big in his pale face, and his mouth was like a child's. "The doctor thinks we ought not have the funeral here—because of mother being so ill. The noise, and people coming in and out—he thinks she is ill enough that it might go against her. Do you—do you think your mother—I don't want him buried in a chapel—and he didn't belong to any church. He was an officer in an ethical society—they'll have the services—I don't known what to plan—"

The back door opened and Mrs. Schluss came in while he was talking, and with her another neighbor—Ernestine remembered having met him once before. His name was John Pryor, and he was a printer. Ernestine understood the entreaty in Will's eyes—but her heart sank: Mamma did not like funerals, and least of all would she like this one.

"I'll ask," she said uncertainly, and went to the telephone which was hung on the kitchen wall. It seemed an eternity before Ernestine heard her mother's voice. Falteringly, she told her what had happened—wondering why she had not called her sooner.



He Patted Her Arm and Tried to Control His Feelings.

"But, darling," cried mamma, "to think of you in all that trouble—I'll send the car right after you. You must come home to mamma until this is all over—you've never been to a funeral in your life, Ernestine. It will be so hard for you."

"Mamma," said Ernestine with vexation, "you know I can't come—I'm needed here. It's something else I called you for. Mamma, they can't have the funeral here at the house, because Will's mother is so ill it would be dangerous for her, and, of course, Will doesn't want his father buried from the funeral parlors, and he doesn't belong to any church—we don't know just what to do, mamma—" She couldn't say it. She simply could not.

"It's too bad you and Will aren't keeping house," said mamma. "If you had let papa help you you could do this for Will, now."

"You don't want to, mamma? I thought perhaps—your house is so big—that you would do this for Will. I'm asking you to have Will's father's funeral at our—at your house, mamma—" All their eyes were on her—her face was scarlet, her eyes were suffused with tears of humiliation.

"Why, Ernestine," said mamma, in a troubled voice, "I don't know. I'll have to talk to daddy—grandmother's not well. Wait a minute—hold the wire."

Ernestine stood in silence, saying to Will with her lips, "She's asking papa," waiting in the endless interval, certain of refusal—already hurt and resentful.

"Ernestine," mamma's voice was terribly sympathetic, "we're all just as sorry as we can be, but papa doesn't think Mr. Todd would want it. It doesn't seem practical, dear—the funeral home right there in his own neighborhood—lots of people are buried from such chapels every day, darling. Don't ask mamma to do such a hard thing—"

Ernestine hung up the receiver without a word and turned strained great eyes upon Will. John Pryor regarded her with a sarcastic smile. He was a socialist, or an anarchist, or something, Ernestine recalled.

"Will," he said with instant kindness, "let me have this funeral for you? It's right here, in the neighborhood, and it won't be a bit of trouble—your father and I belong to the same society—it would be all right with him, I know."

"All right," said Will dully, and turned to the undertaker: "Fix it that way—will you tend to the notices?"

"Will," Ernestine implored him, "it's not my fault—they don't understand—"

He patted her arm and tried to control his feelings.

"That's all right, kitten. I know you can't help it—it's just their way." His face worked, and suddenly he clenched his big hand. "My father—he was good enough to work for yours, for half his lifetime—good enough for that—but not good enough for his dead body—"

"Will—Will—don't—don't, darling—oh, you must not say such a thing—sweetheart."

"Let him cry," said Mrs. Schluss wisely, and Will cried upon Ernestine's shoulder—his tears wet her blouse, and she held him, feeling the great sobs rack him, wondering dimly if she would mourn for her father that way.

This would be her home, she resolved, kissing his tear-wet face, holding him to her heart. She would stay with Will and his mother. Her people had denied her husband the kindness that was due among kinsfolk. They had denied her. She felt that she didn't care whether she ever saw them again. If they had done this for Will, everything else would have followed, but now, in common loyalty to her husband, she had to recognize this hurt.

She was almost fainting with weariness. It seemed to her the night would never end.

Papa came in his big car and took Ernestine and Will and Mrs. Schluss to the burying ground. Will accepted this courtesy with dignity. He was not the person to quibble at a time like this.

The services of the Ethical society were brief and dignified. It was Ernestine's first acquaintance with death, and she felt the power of human dignity, felt as she had never felt before the common inheritance, the integrity of Will's father's life.

When they came back, Ernestine sat in the car and talked to her father a few minutes. She told him that she and Will were to stay at the little house, that she was going to try her hand at housework and nursing. She should have done it sooner—she didn't realize, she said, that she was needed.

She ought not reproach herself, her father answered—she had done quite well to avoid being a responsibility to Will's father and mother.

"That wasn't enough," said Ernestine. "I've a new set of values to learn."

"You think the ones you learned at home inadequate?"

"I didn't mean that."

"You've been very quiet with me all day. Do you resent our attitude?"

Ernestine was near to tears. "It hurt Will," she said, her voice shaking. "It forces me to take a stand—I have to be loyal to Will. Papa, I love you all so, but I love Will most. He's my husband. If he's hurt, so am I."

Her father's face had grown very white. He sat studying his gloved hand upon the polished steering wheel.

"That's right," he said after a little. "After all, that's part of what you learned at home—I hope. I thought—your mother wants me to tell you—we'll establish a trust fund for you and one for Lillian when she is married. I've got my money tied up in this stone merger, but I can settle some on you now, and more later, or I can give you an allowance." He stopped, controlled his emotion, and went on steadily, "I still think your marriage will prove disastrous, but you're my little girl—I want you to be happy. Of course, you can always come home, but as long as you stay with Will, I'd like to do what I can for you, Ernestine."

It was a long speech for him. He was always quick, half a phrase, half a sentence, sufficed him. Ernestine's hands squeezed his arm, she pulled him down and kissed him, and he put his big arm, awkward in his overcoat, about her, and drew her close.

"Before Will and I were married—he—he thought you might think he wanted my money—wanted some advantage, and I promised him I'd live his life, live on his income. I made a bargain and I must stand by it, papa. But I'm glad you told me—if I should need money, I'll let you know. Thank you."

Food "on the Hoof" Not What They Looked For

Three unemployed miners having emigrated to South Africa, and not being successful in obtaining employment, decided to journey up country, where, far away from civilization, they came across an explorers' depot, fairly well stocked with food.

After a few days, when the stores had become exhausted, and all three fed up, yet very hungry, one of their number decided to go in search of food, with the avowed determination to bring back something to eat even if it were a lion. He had not searched far when he encountered a lion, which was also in search of food.

The lion at once bounded toward the man, who turned and sped as rapidly as humanly possible toward the hut. On nearing the hut door, which was open, he stumbled and fell, too precipitately for the lion to recover, which bounded into the hut. When the man picked himself up, he quickly pulled the hut door to, and shouted to his mates inside: "Here you are! Skin that whilst I fetch another."—London Answers.

Food Value of Cauliflower

Cauliflower, while low in fuel value, is rich in vitamines A, B and C. It contains, also, considerable calcium and phosphorus, which are needed for healthy bones and teeth. Its water content is 92 per cent.

Tractor Cotton Picker Clears Field Quickly

The 1930 season may prove as epochal in the cotton industry as did the invention of the cotton gin by Eli Whitney, according to Wheeler McMillen, agricultural expert, writing in Country Home.

The new development, says McMillen, is the tractor cotton picker, which threatens to do away with negro labor in the fields, which has not been improved upon since the earliest days of cotton in America. In a test in Kentucky the fastest colored cotton picker known started down a long row and in 2 hours 21 minutes he had picked 45 pounds of cotton, a record in itself. Then the machine started and in two minutes it pulled out of the row to unload 54 pounds of cotton. The machine had gathered more cotton, 70 times as fast as hand labor.

Fifteen such machines will be used in experiments with this year's crop, and if equal to the test, the whole cotton market may be revolutionized.

Wild Creatures His Pets

According to reports from Abyssinia, Ras Taffari, the regent who made himself emperor, lives somewhat after the fashion of the feudal lords of the Middle ages in Europe. Ras likes all kinds of wild animals and he has quite a menagerie on the grounds around the royal palace at Addis Ababa, the capital of the kingdom of Ethiopa, as it is officially called. The monarch is especially fond of lions and has several fine specimens. He makes pets of the cubs. They can often be seen sleeping or romping around the throne itself.

Ras, who claims to be a descendant of the queen of Sheba and King Solomon, likes to imagine that nature endowed him with many of the qualities of the king of beasts.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Dangerous Vacations

A vacation should be something that you prepare for easily, enjoy thoroughly and regret not at all. Too often it turns out to be a more or less damaging experience for you and your pocketbook. — Woman's Home Companion.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Paris is discussing whether to commemorate next October, the one hundred and eightieth anniversary of the introduction of the umbrella into the western world. In October, 1750, Jonas Hanway gave the city a shock by carrying a rain protector brought from China.

Shinplasters, or fractional currency, were issued during the Civil war because of the disappearance of coin from circulation and the shortage of small coin. PREPAREDNESS IN BUSINESS

By R. S. HECHT,
American Bankers Association.

My observations for many years, both as an employee and as an executive, have convinced me that the reason some men and women go ahead and others do not is that some keep themselves constantly prepared to accept and fulfill larger duties and responsibilities as they offer, and some do not.

Grant, as we must, that there is a certain element of luck in the conditions under which opportunity for promotion comes to different men and women, we nevertheless must also see that it is each individual's own state of preparedness which determines his ability to seize opportunity if and when it comes, and having seized it, to succeed in meeting the greater demands which it inevitably places upon him.

Real advancement never means going ahead to easier tasks, but always to harder ones. Opportunity for advancement is worthless unless in accepting it you are able to carry with you the abilities and qualifications that prepare you to meet the heavier exactions that are an inherent part of opportunity.

It is far better to go into action in the field of enlarged responsibility prepared and qualified, rather than that you and the institution you work for shall be exposed to the hazard of your having to build up to new responsibilities after having assumed them.

The new spirit of all business seeks to prepare its people in advance through education for the higher duties it holds in store for them.

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, August 1, 1930. Volume 20; Number 14.

SURVEYORS START WORK TO RESTORE MUD LAKE

A second drained lake in Marshall county that has proven unsuccessful for farming operations may be restored within the immediate future, a crew of several surveyors from the U. S. Bureau of Biological surveys arriving here last week to make preliminary surveys of Mud Lake.

When the drainage of Eastern Marshall county lands was at its height a number of years ago, Mud Lake situated east of Holt was also drained to permit farming operations on the former lake bed. However, generally speaking, the land produced could not yield the payments of the ditching and now plans are being made to restore the lake to permit a U. S. Game refuge.

Chas. S. Clark from the state of Maryland, who is a representative of the U. S. Biological department, arrived in Warren last week and has been going over records in the Marshall county court house preliminary to the surveys which started this week.

If the proposed plans go thru, the United States government will take charge of the lands, converting them into a National Game Refuge for migratory birds. The Mud Lake project will be the first project of its kind, qualifying under a new bill recently passed by Congress providing for game reserves in the Upper Mississippi Valley.

The Game and Fish department of the State of Minnesota is working on a similar project on Thief Lake, condemnation proceedings for acquiring lands and easements being under way at the present time. The public hearing will be conducted at the court house in Warren on Aug.26 for the Thief Lake proposition.—Sheaf.

Big Warren Elevator Goes to Thief River

A 400,000 bushel capacity terminal elevator will be built in Thief River Falls by the Osborne McMillan Elevator Company of Minneapolis. Construction will be started at once and by rushing the work and the use of both day and night shifts it is hoped that the huge structure will be completed early in September. The elevator proper will be of concrete and will be joined with six steel tanks. It will be built on the east side of the Soo tracks north of Eighth Street, the stock yards being moved north a short distance to provide the necessary room. The general contract for the building has been let to the J. H. Brown Construction Co. of Minneapolis.

The Osborne McMillan Elevator Company is one of the large grain companies of the Northwest and operates a line of elevators in North Dakota and Montana. They had acquired the old Spalding terminal elevator at Warren which was destroyed by fire last year. The four steel tanks which remain at Warren will be moved here and used in the new structure which will have four times the capacity of the old Warren plant.—Times.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson and family, Mrs. Chas. Hagglund, Oscar and Bennie Hagglund motored to International Falls on Saturday. Oscar remained there and the rest of the party returned home on Sunday evening by the way of Bemidji.

Several cars of blueberry pickers have passed thru here the past week. People up along the border report a heavy crop in the Lake of the Woods district.

According to a report reaching our office, Gust Monson who was badly hurt in a car accident at Gatzke, is getting along pretty good in the hospital at Grygla.

A few of the boys around here went on a tear on Sunday and did not quit their fooling before some of them landed in the jail. On Tuesday they were all called into Warren where they were given a hearing before William Forsberg, Justice of the peace who gave them each a small fine for the trouble they caused.

Mud Lake Rambles

The cars have been smoothing the roads out through the Mud Lake territory the last week. Everyone seems to be interested in the blueberries in Mud Lake swamps.

Mrs. Sannes and son Arnold, Mrs. C.L. Simmons and children, and Mr. Alfred Thompson spent the first part of last week visiting relatives at Ulen. Bertha Moberg kept house at the Maakstad farm while Mrs. Simmons was away.

Inspectors Investigate the Handling of Eggs

A. A. Sibbald, Ass't State Dairy and Food Commissioner, spent the week in the northwest section of this state with inspectors investigating conditions as they relate to the enforcement of the egg law in the handling of eggs.

The quality of the eggs through present weather conditions is seriously affected. In order to maintain the high standard set for Minnesota eggs, it is necessary that each and every merchant or dealer engaged in the handling of eggs, be required to maintain the proper candling practices and insert in each case of eggs a candling certificate.

The eggs should be kept in cool places pending shipment and forwarded to the terminal markets with the shortest possible delay.

The inspectors are instructed to insist on a strict compliance with the law and any convincing evidence of non-compliance will necessitate immediate attention.

Without us the Dairy Cow would be lost entirely, and even with us She might be a losing proposition, because through us the grades of cream or milk can be made to pay or not to pay.

If we are kept clean and well sterilized we will help a lot to keep your milk and cream sweet, but if we are allowed to get rusty and dirty, with old milk left in the seams, then no cream will stay sweet in us long. Off flavors will be sure to develop and the grades will always be poor.

But if we are kept clean and well aired, we will do a lot towards keeping your cows on a paying basis.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Will and Ernestine have their first quarrel. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account. Will's father dies suddenly.

He kissed her again, and they said goodby. The conversation had washed away a little of her resentment and made her feel better. She had a strong desire to cling to her own family, opposed by the resolution she had taken to harden her heart against them all. She thought of mamma and Lillian and Loring, come in Loring's coupe, standing quiet and in a little tight knot at the funeral. She had taken her own stand by Will and Mrs. Schluss, and Mr. and Mrs. Pryor.

The day after the funeral when Ernestine, with one of Mrs. Todd's aprons pinned over an old silk dress, was experimenting with a broom, Mr. Pastano came, and with him a huge old lady with slow black eyes and a face so round and kind that Ernestine's heart went out to her.

Mr. Pastano had brought some potted plants, which seemed fresh and beautiful after the scent of decay that had come with the funeral sets.

"These are for Willie's mamma," Madame Pastano said haltingly. "We come to make consolation call—to bring you friendship. As the plants grow, so grows the new soul, in Heaven."

Ernestine yielded to impulse, was enfolded on the soft and luxurious bosom of Madame Pastano and kissed her smooth cheek. How strange that all of her haughty resentment was gone, that she actually liked Ruby Pastano, with his slow thick voice and his mottled dark eyes.

"When Willie's mamma is better, you will come to visit us?" the old lady asked, and Ernestine called her husband Willie for days afterward. She promised to come.

Will was worried about money, and Ernestine tried to spend as little as possible. Mr. Todd's lodge insurance had paid for his funeral and left a small balance, which was soon eaten up by the heavy expenses of the mother's illness. Will asked for a raise and got five dollars. At length he was forced to borrow from Mr. Poole, although Ernestine told him she could get money from her father.

"Money!" he burst out passionately. "I don't want any Briceland money! We wanted something real from them. Money's all they have."

"You'll have to increase your earnings, Will."

"It takes time. And I intend to do it on my own job, not in your father's office. Your folks must understand that."

"Lillian says beggars can't choose," she said.

"This beggar chooses," he warned her.

* * * * * * *

Will's mother began to mend a little, the third or fourth week, although she was desperately ill. One day she asked Ernestine how they were managing, and Ernestine confessed that they had had to borrow.

"The Troy street house is in my name," said Mrs. Todd. "Tell Will the deed and all are in his father's box—tell him to have some real estate office sell it. I'll sign the deed—it will be more than enough for my illness."

"But, mother, when you are better, you will need your money."

"I'll not be better. And I'd like to have the nurse all the time now."

So the house was sold, and the few thousand dollars they got for it certainly made a remarkable difference. The doctor brought them a resident nurse. Ernestine and Will agreed that they should spend Mrs. Todd's money only for the expense of her illness.

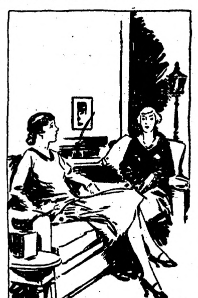
On the day that Lillian was married Mrs. Todd was able to sit up, and Will consented to go to the wedding. The church was filled with flowers—the bridesmaids made a rainbow—Ernestine had pleaded the excuse of mourning for taking no part in the ceremony. The [illegible] were filled with old familiar faces—the ushers were young men Ernestine and Lillian had known always. Everything was very beautiful and formal, and Ernestine realized that mamma would have liked such a wedding for her.

She was glad afterward, that she had gone, for the weeks and months just passed had been so hard for her that the beauty of her own romance had become a little dimmed. But when she heard the marriage ceremony again, when she stood by Will and watched her sister marry Loring Hamilton, she remembered every word and every kiss of her own marriage day—its storms and turmoil, and she looked at Will, at his clear strong face, at his lean bony body in the shabby suit, at the big square hands resting on his knees, and the richness of her love for him welled up in her like a great tide that would and must carry everything before it.

CHAPTER VII

The Baby for Passenger

Lillian was in Europe. Mamma and papa and grandmother had gone to Langley lake for the month of August. Ernestine entered into a period of waiting, of passing through days of unreality and nights of patient endurance. Sometimes, waking after she had slept, she looked about the walls of the little room with a feeling of enormous surprise. Was this really she, Ernestine Briceland, in this dim room, with the curtains pinned back to admit any vagrant breeze, listening with her heart suddenly quick in the still night for her husband's footsteps?



She Was Satisfied With Her Lot and Herself.

Mr. Poole came often to visit them. Ernestine began to look for him for late Sunday breakfast. And the Pastanos were kindness itself. Their shining car, with the swart grinning chauffeur, was often at the door.

One day as Ernestine sat reading aloud, Will's mother laid a swollen, creased hand out over the book, and Ernestine, looking up at her, smiled quickly and kissed her.

"What is it, mother?"

They talked a little about the coming baby, and the plans Ernestine and Will had made.

"It is hard for your mother," said Mrs. Todd, with a smile. "I think perhaps it is as great a mistake to be stiffnecked about favors as it is be greedy."

"Perhaps," admitted Ernestine. "It is hard to be exactly balanced. One must choose a direction in which to lean."

They fell into a friendly silence. After a little, Will's mother pressed Ernestine's hand.

"About Will—" she said and hesitated, and Ernestine's heart beat a little faster.

"Be patient with him. He hasn't found himself yet. But he will. You are more mature than Will. Children will increase the distance between your wisdom and his childishness. Just love him. He'll come home."

Ernestine knew no answer, but the words fell into her heart as though there were more significance to them than their stereotyped importance. For an hour or more they sat in silence, Ernestine dreaming of, Mrs. Todd remembering, Will!

Mrs. Todd lived just long enough to see her grandson and to kiss his poppy silk cheek. Will laid him in the hollow of her arms, but after a moment, with a word of entreaty, she asked him to take the baby away. He did so and, calling the nurse to his mother who seemed to be swooning, he took the little one back to Ernestine.

And so the parlor of the little house was a bower for death. The gray coffin, the room filled with flowers the worn-out shell of the woman Ernestine had understood so little.

Will acepted his mother's death with more philosophy than Ernestine had expected of him. The long waiting, the clinging, had been harder for him than the final separation. Besides, the new little life cuddled against Ernestine's heart was so much more than any loss—it was such an appropriate compensation.

The baby had finally established Ernestine among her new neighbors. Slowly but surely they had come to respect her, and now, with Peter in her arms, with her house clean and by her own efforts, she found Mrs Schluss and Mrs. Pryor and others showing her real affection, which she appreciated and respected in full. Ernestine felt that all sacrifice was justified, and they entered into a new phase of life, in their own small home, Will at the oars, Ernestine at the helm, and the baby for passenger.

* * * * * * * *

It was harder to maintain the high level of contentment after Lillian returned from Europe and established herself in her new home on the road, out near Loyola. Will went across with Ernestine one noon shortly after their return. Mamma was there. Lillian was charming to Will, kissing him when she greeted Ernestine and the baby and flattering him skilfully.

After Will had left for the Sun the three women followed one another about the house, passed the baby back and forth between them, and talked, talked, talked, all at the same time, all listening and talking, all intent on catching up the old intimacy. It was charming. Ernestine could not remember when she had spent such a happy afternoon. There was no one like mamma—no one!

"I've got to go, because papa is bringing a new stone-merger, man home with him for dinner. I am going to put rock powder in the coffee!" Mamma kissed them all goodby, with tears in her eyes.

Ernestine looked at Lillian and realized with a shock how changed she was in the six months since her marriage. She was satisfied with her lot and herself. There was almost danger—a challenge to fate in her complacency. She was gentle and kind to Ernestine, but subtly patronizing. It was especially noticeable since mamma had gone, for mamma kept Lillian in check.

But if Lillian was changed, Loring was startlingly so. He seemed to Ernestine bigger, handsomer. His blond strength was now set in a robust vitality which was very different from Will's volatile excitability. He kissed Ernestine affectionately, told her she looked well and admired the baby.

Mamma had trained a maid for Lillian, and she served in silent competence an excellent dinner, but the bright vivacity of the afternoon was gone. The interwoven volubility of the three women, their constant interruption of one another, their exclamations and cries of astonishment or sympathy, now disappeared, and Loring talked and the two girls listened.

He assumed Ernestine knew all about their European journey. Over there, he said, he had got a new slant on things. It was a good thing for a man to get away from his desk for a while. Now he had decided to forego the idea of the bench and go in for crime.

They laughed and he twinkled at them, but all the same, he insisted, he meant it.

"The judiciary qualities are excellent, but not remunerative—unless one becomes a corrupt judge, from which fate Heaven deliver me! The criminal lawyer is the important lawyer of today. He is the man with power in the courts. It will be a new kind of litigation for our office, but if I can get the business I can handle it. I went to see that Greek chap—Pastano—this afternoon, and recalled to him our acquaintanceship and our mutual friends. He remembered me perfectly and asked about you. He seems much interested in you and Will. He's the man to see, Tom Kelly told me, at the City hall. He has the say about all that Clark street colony. There's no end of money there and I'm going to dig some of it out for us."

Ernestine's face was flushed. She could not deny her anger.

"But it seems inconsistent to me," she said quickly, "for you to take advantage of his friendship for Will when you disapprove so of our knowing him I don't understand."

Abundant Proof That Animals Change Color

Though many an animal in the Arctic regions will change its coat to white for the winter months, there are few animals who turn gray, as human beings do, from old age. Animals are, however, susceptible to fright and shock, and this may cause their hair or fur to change to white, just as in the case of human beings. Domestic pets are naturally more susceptible to this than animals who are used to fending for themselves in the wild. The black coat of a dog will sometimes turn practically white if the dog has a fit or falls victim to a very bad bout of distemper. Cats are not immune from shock. Horses' coats often seem to change quite appreciably in color, but this may be only a matter of clipping. A horse that has been turned out for some time and then brought in to be clipped will become a light fawn color after the operation, when before it he seemed a dark chestnut. You wouldn't know he was the same horse!

Licorice Water Has Value

For generations nonalcoholic drinks made from water infusions of licorice root or paste have been popular throughout southern Europe. This sounds much like the anemic concoction of our childhood days, "lickerish water," which was carried around in a bottle and shaken at frequent intervals to make it froth. This mixture of licorice root, water and sugar, so beloved of children, really has medicinal value, for the virtue of licorice as a tonic and blood purifier has been long recognized. In many factories of France, especially in the iron and steel mills, it is given to workers for drinking purposes instead of plain water

By Capt. L. R. Claud Robinson

INDIA'S WEALTH—REAL AND POTENTIAL

According to Western standards, India is a poor country because her wealth is still largely undeveloped. The most recent figures available give the income per head of India at approximately seventy-five dollars. Taxation has increased appreciably, yet at the close of the World war, it amounted to only a fraction more than seventy-five cents per head, or, if land revenue be included, to about one dollar. The much discussed salt tax amounts to the equivalent of but seven cents per annum per head of the population.

The meaning of these figures has a greater significance when compared with those of a highly industrialized country like Great Britain, whose people are credited with an average income of about two hundred dollars, and who cheerfully pay taxes at the rate of one hundred and five dollars per head, as shown in the 1922-1923 returns.

Gigantic schemes of irrigation, now in course of completion, bid fair to make India second only to the United States in the production of cotton. Much painstaking research on the part of experts of the agricultural department has also greatly improved the variety and production per acre of India's jute and rice crops. The jute industry received tremendous impetus during the late war, the product being used in the manufacture of sandbags, the demand for which on the various fronts was very large.

Another great potential source of wealth is the Indian forests which cover 250,000 square miles of territory. It is only in recent years that the manufacture of paper from such things as bamboo has been undertaken.

Any rural scene in India is dominated by the bullock or the cow. There is scarcely an operation in Indian agricultural life in which the cow does not play an important part. It treads out the grain on the thrashing floors; with patient resignation it drags the archaic plow; it raises water from innumerable wells.

The Indian industrial commission estimated that there were in India nearly two hundred million head of cattle and about ninety million sheep and goats. One of the most important exports is that of hides and skins.

The mineral wealth of the continent is still more a matter for future development. The coal output has increased considerably during recent years. In 1919 three hundred million gallons of petroleum were produced, mainly in Burma, and varying quantities of gold, saltpeter, mica and manganese. Recent surveys have disclosed immense quantities of iron in the hills of Orissa.

* * *

THE INDIAN STATES

The people who inhabit British India are British subjects, while those who inhabit Indian India are not. By Indian India I mean the Indian states, ruled over for the most part by Hindu and Mohammedan princes. These states were gradually established as independent units during the century and a half of turmoil following the downfall of the Mogul dynasty. They are not governed by the government of India, which is merely the agent for managing the relationship, based upon solemn treaties and obligations between them and the British crown.

Yet in any settlement of India's problems, these states for a variety of reasons cannot be left out of the picture. Their territories, which comprise two-fifths of the entire area of India and one-fourth of the population, lies across all the main lines of communication up and down India. Their people constitute the backbone of India's martial spirit. They are stable political units. No government of India is possible without their help and co-operation, if only because of their rights and internal autonomy secured to them by pledges from which they and they only can release Great Britain.

The rulers of these states are firm believers in the British connection and have already, by formal declaration in the chamber of princes, set their face against the idea of complete independence. At the same time they are patriotic Indians and are vitally concerned in seeing India brought to the level of the self-governing dominions of the British commonwealth.

Each state maintains its own independent army, divided into state troops and what is known as an imperial service corps. The latter is modeled on the same lines as the regular Indian army of British India and is equally well equipped. The various rajas and maharajas of these states have always been lavish in their offers of troops and money whenever there has been a war or threat of war. In the World war their troops fought side by side with the Allies in France, Mesopotamia and Palestine—and in addition, the princes themselves contributed many millions of dollars from their own treasuries to the allied cause.

Only a Pillow Fight, But It Ended in Riot

Kelso, Wash.—It was just a pillow fight—but, oh my, it put two loggers hors de combat.

Five more men asked for first aid and a score took to the timber and hiked seventeen miles to town rather than return to the battle. Ten bunkhouses were overturned by the playful loggers, it was reported.

This briefly summarizes the annual featherweight scrimmage of the logging camp at Mulholland Dam on Coweeman river.

MAN IS KILLED; ARREST SWEETIE

Dying Words Give Police Their Only Clue.

Burlington, N. C.—Old sweethearts met on a dark downtown street near a red brick schoolhouse and as a result L. J. Jordan, twenty-five, is dead and Miss Nesbit Hanford, a stenographer, is being held in custody on a charge of murder.

All that police know is what the mortally wounded Jordan stammered out between gasps for breath. The girl shielded her silence with choked sobs.

Jordan and the girl met at the designated point. They quarreled over Jordan's approaching marriage to another woman. When a pistol shot attracted people to the scene Jordan was found lying on the sidewalk, a pistol wound in his body and a revolver clutched in his hands, while the girl crouched beside him.

Jordan told the police that the girl "killed me," and that he had taken the pistol away from her after she had fired. He said they were old sweethearts.

Jordan was taken to a hospital, where he died half an hour later. The girl, an expectant mother, is under guard at the Rainey hospital, threatened with a serious illness. She was injured by a fall in her scuffle with Jordan.

Police claim that the girl arranged a secret meeting with Jordan at the schoolhouse for the purpose of killing him. Miss Hanford asserts that Jordan is the father of her unborn child. He promised to marry her, she declares.

Eye-witnesses saw the couple come from behind the schoolhouse after the shooting. The girl, they said, was holding Jordan, who staggered nearly to the street and fell. When police arrived the girl was holding his head. Jordan said before his death that he took the gun away from her "to keep her from shooting me any more." The fatal shot ignited his clothing and burned the flesh about the wound.

Surgeon Is Fined for Overwork in Operation

Berlin.—Dr. Ernst Nirsche of Nuremberg, while performing an operation on a young woman, decided in the midst of his task that it was advisable at the same time to remove the appendix.

The woman was indignant when she learned what had been done without her consent. She instituted proceedings, and the surgeon has been fined $250, with the alternative of 20 days' imprisonment.

An expert declared the removal of the appendix was indicated, but was not absolutely necessary. So the court ruled that the doctor had been guilty of a technical "assault." The decision is adversely commented upon, because of the obvious impossibility of a surgeon stopping in the middle of a serious operation to ask the patient how much farther he may proceed.

"Dead Man" Is Caught Trying to Rob House

Halle, Germany.—A "corpse" that set out on a thieving expedition was caught redhanded by the Halle police. Georg Ibing, a Frankfort citizen, insured his life for $5,500. Then he rented a boat and went on a trip with a friend on the river Main. He never came back. His friend returned alone, telling all about the storm and the capsizing of the boat. Ibing's mourning widow claimed the $5,500 and got it.

All might have gone well but for Ibing's money-grabbing disposition. Instead of contenting himself with making good dough as a dead man he took himself to Halle and was caught in a burglary. The thieving "corpse," his "widow" and friend are now awaiting trial for fraud.

Broken Legs Prevent Escape of 2 Fugitives

Ardmore, Okla.—Deputy Sheriffs Dwight Bell and Monroe Gunter were pursuing an automobile they suspected was being used for transporting liquor. When the machine failed to stop they fired at the tires.

The car's occupants, later identified by officers as M. T. Meeks and M. J. Watson, started running across a plowed field, with Bell and Gunter in pursuit.

Suddenly Meeks fell to the ground groaning, "I've broken my leg."

His companion advanced only three steps further when he, too, fell.

"So have I," he shouted.

Hospital records verify the story.

Value of Kindergarten Not Fully Recognized

Though it is estimated that 5,000,000 children are of kindergarten age in the United States, only approximately 750,000 are now in kindergartens.

This indicates that the value of the kindergarten has been underestimated. Parents do not realize that this pre-grade training is an important step in child development. It is not merely a nursery.

Work in pasting, cutting paper, coloring; in building with sand and clay; and in recognizing certain words encourages thinking and arouses interest in the constructive. The child is impressionable, and a trained teacher can do much to assist him on his way through the schools and life.

School superintendents and social workers are in agreement that kindergarten work cuts down on juvenile delinquency, and parents should be aware of that.—Des Moines Tribune-Capital.

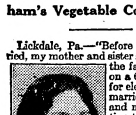
FARM WOMAN BENEFITED

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound



Lickdale, Pa.—"Before I was married, my mother and sister and I did all the farming work on a 64-acre farm for eleven years. I married a farmer and now in addition to my housework and the care of my children I help him with the outside work on our farm. After my last child was born, I began to suffer as many women do. Finally our family doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did and now I am a new woman and I know that good health is better than riches."—Mrs. Clyde I. LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Harold Russell Ryder, the broker who spent millions on Broadway before he crashed, has, according to close friends, a most extraordinary and puzzling personality. They describe him as a man with a mixture of a delusion of grandeur, a kindness complex, a total financial irresponsibility and a Robin Hood desire to aid the needy. Ryder never, in his spending, was of the loud-voiced aggressive type. Always courteous and gentle, he spoke in almost hushed tones.

"May I please have another good table tonight?" he would say to a head waiter, and then to a bus boy, "Will you see that all my guests have plenty of water?"

Then he might give the head waiter $100, and the bus boy $10. He knew the waiters in the places he frequented by name; knew their family history; asked concerning their wives and children. He always tipped lavishly, but if any of the waiters was in trouble, he would hand him a big enough bill to help him out.

Those who knew Ryder tell me he had a mania for helping persons financially. Waiters, taxi-drivers, musicians—he always has been fond of music—scrubwomen, actresses, chorus girls, any of them could get money from him if he thought they needed it. His friends declare that this gave him a reputation he didn't deserve; that he was no roue; didn't esepecially care about women—unless they were broke. His beneficent, caliph-of-Bagdad complex started working immediately to demand his aid and protection for anyone who did not appear to have any money. It was his pleasure to fill their pockets.

All the night clubs know Ryder; the night club workers are for him to the last man. Why not? Ryder is said to have spent over $40,000 on Broadway in a month. Some few were grateful. One man sat in Ryder's office two hours to see him. When he finally did see him, he gave him a hand-made wooden cigarette case.

"I made this for you," he said. "It was the only way I could show my gratitude."

"Where did I see you and what did I ever do for you?" asked Ryder.

"Don't you remember me?" said the man. "I'm a waiter. One night you asked me about myself. I told you my wife was to have a child and I had saved no money. I didn't know what to do. You gave me $200. I cannot tell you how that helped."

* * *

Wherever Ryder got the money, he certainly spent it, and largely on others; although he did own half a dozen expensive cars and had a suite of seven rooms at an expensive country club, where he kept a couple of Japanese valets to wait on his guests. But he visited humbler places of entertainment. They say that one afternoon, in a small Greenwich Village restaurant, he heard and liked a male quartet.

"Why haven't you a piano?" he asked one of the villagers.

"We can't afford one," was the frank reply.

Ryder immediately called up one of the big piano concerns; told who he was; asked them to keep open until he arrived. When he got there he bought a piano which cost several thousand dollars, put it on a truck and had it delivered in Greenwich Village.

"Here is a piano," he said mildly to members of the quartet. "You sing well, but I like songs better with instrumental accompaniment."

* * *

On another occasion Ryder paid $7,000 for a radio and a piano and gave them away. A taxi man he helped in Paris constituted himself Ryder's bodyguard. If he took another car, this driver would follow with his taxi, until such time as Ryder got safely back to his hotel. Ryder did everything in the grand manner, even offering any friend he was sending home a choice of several makes of cars.

Two Girls Burned to Death in Wrecked Auto

Columbus, N. J.—Trapped in roaring flames, Louise Perlingino, sixteen, and Lena Sabatino, twenty-two, both of Trenton, were burned to death when a car driven by Frank Palotto, also of Trenton, crashed into a glass gas tank outside a roadside service station near Grovesville last night. Gasoline sprayed from the broken tank and, striking the heated engine, burst into a blanket of flames which prevented would-be rescuers from reaching the imprisoned girls. Palotta, who was hurled through a window to the roadside, escaped uninjured. He was held on a technical charge of manslaughter pending investigation of the accident.

New Grave Discloses Overripe Egg Burial

Modesto, Calif.—Dave Bishop, tender of a bridge on the San Joaquin river not far from where three men were killed in cold blood April 28 by an itinerant laborer, found what looked like a new grave near the bridge. He hurried to a telephone and summoned deputy sheriffs. When the "grave" was opened it was found to contain several dozen incubator turkey eggs a farmer had buried after they reached a ripe old age without producing turk

ICELAND WILL GET HEAT FROM SPRINGS

Pump Boiling Water to Keep Capital Warm.

Washington.—Iceland, the world's oldest republic, lying just south of the Arctic Circle, is preparing to heat its capital, Reykjavik, and at the same time provide power and amusement through the long winters with boiling water drawn from nearby hot springs.

Progress in this undertaking to a point where, next winter, the national hospital and a school will be heated and an indoor swimming pool will be established, utilizing the water after it has given up most of its heat, was reported to the Department of Commerce this week by North Winship, Consul General at Reykjavik. He described it as the first step toward heating all of the capital.

Progressive Icelanders.

The success of this undertaking provides a fresh explanation of the admiration which anthropologists and other students of human races and progress have long expressed for the Icelanders, who have retained in their isolation the splendid qualities displayed by their ancestors of 1,000 years ago in resisting oppression at home until hopelessly outnumbered and then sailing into unknown seas in flimsy ships to find a land where they could live in freedom.

Iceland was formed, after a fashion, much as the republic was formed, through a volcanic uprising in the earth's crust. That accounts for the abundance of hot springs there, providing water ranging from warm to boiling in temperature. Experiments looking to the use of this natural resource have been in progress for some years, and have shown very favorable results, Mr. Winship reported.

First drillings were made two years ago by the Icelandic Engineering association at Wash Springs, about two miles from the capital. During the succeeding experiments the hot water was successfully used in heating a house, in cooking and washing and in warming the soil. Further investigation and experimentation are planned.

To Pipe Hot Water.

Under the plan for heating the capital a pumping plant will be constructed near Wash Springs. It will be built under ground, and the natural hot water will be conducted first to a large storage tank and thence forced to the city through pipes carefully insulated to prevent escape of the heat. At the end of the pipe line a pressure regulator will be installed and connected with electric pumps to be operated according to requirements. The line will terminate in an air tank to assure an even flow. Construction of a storage tank in the city to take care of surplus water during the night, preventing waste and at the same time enhancing the effectiveness of the system, is contemplated early next year.

The pipe system in the buildings to be heated with the spring water, Mr. Winship explained, will be installed in the usual manner, except that the radiators will be somewhat larger than ordinary.

California Town Bars Noisy Barnyard Colony

Burlingame, Calif. — The blatant crow of the rooster, the gabbling of geese and the coo of the pigeon have been officially muted by Burlingame's city fathers.

In solemn conclave, the city council enacted an ordinance muting the vocal utterances of fowls and other barnyard residents, curtailing their number and restricting their wanderings. Owners who permit their charges to moo, bleat, crow, cackle, warble or snort where such noise disturbs neighbors in their sleep or otherwise, are punishable by a fine of $500 and six months in jail.

BLIND 30 YEARS; REGAINS SIGHT

Chicago Man Marvels at Amazing World of Today.

Chicago.—A young man on his honeymoon was stricken with total blindness—thirty years ago.

One day recently, his vision suddenly restored, he sat bewildered by the side of the woman who for three decades had been his guide, his companion and his wife, and—until he closed his eyes again—she seemed unreal.

Three days before the man—J. F. Fish, 2428 North Sawyer avenue—sensed the beginning of the miracle that was coming to him.

He was in his own living room. His wife was there. The feeling he had was as if a black curtain before his eyes became less black at the lower edge and a misty gray border grew.

For some time he considered this without saying anything. Probably it was just an illusion, he thought. But the gray border widened. It became translucent—and then—transparent. He exclaimed:

"My dear, I believe—I really believe that I am beginning to see!"

She started up—then resumed her seat. Her pulse beat fast. But his was beating faster. He continued:

"There are vague shapes. The outline of a door—over there—a chair—is that your hand on the back of the chair?"

Swiftly the whole of the old black curtain seemed to be drawn aside, and the eyes behind the curtain—eyes which last had looked upon the world in the year 1900—saw the amazing world of today.

Mr. Fish is the head and founder of the Northwestern Business college.

When students and teachers come to his office now he closes his eyes "in order to recognize them more readily"—because his ears are better trained than his eyes.

The original loss of his vision was the result of a blow on the head. The restoration was time's slow healing of that injury.

Atlanta Children Fall Far Without Injury

Atlanta, Ga.—Atlanta's parents hope the city's epidemic of long-distance noninjury falling records is ended.

Two-year-old James Chasteen, Jr., startled the competition with a 25-foot fall from the second-story window of his home. The next day James was a little sore in one hip but he was seen looking out of the same window from which he flopped the day before.

That record stood one day. Then Ruth Jansen, four, fell 34 feet out of an upstairs window into a rose bush which must have withdrawn its thorns, for she wasn't even scratched.

George Williams, adult titleholder, has completely recovered from a five-story fall down an elevator shaft which left him whole but somewhat bruised.

Later Mrs. Cora Hunter fell eight inches down one doorstep and fractured a wrist.

Woman Asks to Talk to Board as to Husband

Washington, N. C.—After an elderly woman demanded to discuss the issue in question with Beaufort county commissioners "one at a time," it was decided to defer action until August in the matter of continuing work of the county home demonstration agent.

Fifty women appeared before the board to urge retention of the agent's services.

The elderly woman took the floor. "Mr. Chairman," she said, "I ain't much for talking to a big bunch of men like this, but I sure can tell it to 'em one at a time. If you all are thinking of doing away with the home demonstration agent, I'd like to have the opportunity of seeing each member of the board by himself and talking to him like I been used to talking to my husband."

The commissioners lost no time in deferring action.

Prisoner Walks Out of Court as Officers Argue

Toronto, Ont.—Magistrate Jones and Inspector Guthrie differed in their interpretations of the laws regarding the legality of bright automobile headlights during Mrs. M. V. Molson's appearance in police court on a charge of driving with lights that were too bright. While they were arguing, Mrs. Molson walked out of the courtroom. The argument subsided when it was discovered that the defendant was gone.

"She disappeared during the storm," the magistrate commented as he withdrew the charge against her.

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

Use for Historic Building

The old court house in St. Louis, in which the Dred Scott case was tried, will be used as an exhibition place for the art of the Mississippi valley, according to plans now being shaped by the St. Louis Art league. The historic building, whose dome once was the giant of the city, now nestled down among clusters of skyscrapers, will be abandoned by the civil courts when the new $4,000,000 civil court house is ready for occupancy. The exhibitions, according to present plans, would be devoted mainly to works of modern art and are all associated with the Midwest and the valley.

STATE TAX MEN AND BANKERS IN ACCORD

Months of Negotiation Lead to Agreement on Changes Broadening Method of State or Local Taxation of National Banks.

NEW YORK.—Months of conference and negotiation between an American Bankers Association special committee and the Committee of the Association of States on Bank Taxation have resulted in an agreement on a form of amendment to the Federal statute dealing with state or local taxation of national banks that "maintains the integrity of the protective principles of the section and is satisfactory to the commissioners' committee," says the American Bankers Association Journal.

Thomas B. Paton, the organization's General Counsel, in making the announcement says that previously proposed amendments to the statute, which is known as Section 5219, have been opposed when it was felt their terms would enable any state to place banks in a tax class by themselves.

"The law as it stands today," Mr. Paton says, "permits state or local taxation of national banks or their shareholders in one or the other of the four following forms: the shareholders upon their shares,—a property tax; the shareholders upon their dividends,—a personal income tax; the bank upon its net income; the bank according to or measured by its net income. Only one form of tax can be imposed, except that the dividend tax may be combined with the third or fourth form if other corporations and shareholders are likewise taxed.

"The conditions permitted are: the tax on shares must be at no greater rate than on other competing moneyed capital; the income tax on shareholders must be at no greater rate than on net income from other moneyed capital; the tax on bank net income must be at no higher rate than on other financial corporations nor the highest rates on mercantile and manufacturing corporations doing business within the state; the tax measured by net bank income is subject to the same limitations as the tax on net income of the bank but may include entire net income from all sources."

States Seek Broader Law

National banks and their shareholders are taxed in different states under a diversity of systems, he says. The U. S. Supreme Court has held that the low millage rate on intangible personal property is in violation of the present law where it results in national bank shares being taxed at a rate greater than that assessed upon competing moneyed capital. A number of states, unwilling to use the income methods permitted, had the alternative of either repealing the intangible tax laws or limiting taxation of national bank shares at the intangible rate. Therefore they sought a broadening of the permissive provisions.

Also, Mr. Paton points out, a Supreme Court decision held a state's excise tax on corporations invalid where it included income from Federal and local government bonds in the excise measure. This created doubt as to some state bank excise taxes.

"Conferences have been held to reach some agreement which would protect the banks, satisfy the tax commissioners and avoid a contest in Congress," Mr. Paton says. "From the standpoint of the tax authorities, the main objectives have been an amendment which would permit certain states to retain their low rate tax upon intangibles and at the same time derive an adequate, but not excessive, revenue from national bank shares, and an amendment which would permit certain states to tax corporations on their net income, excluding income from tax-exempts, and at the same time derive the same revenue from the banks as heretofore. From the standpoint of the banks, it has been deemed imperative to maintain the protective principles of Section 5219.

The Changes Agreed On

"In the proposed amendment the existing provision permitting taxation of bank shares no higher than the rate upon competing moneyed capital has been modified with respect to certain intangible tax states only by a provision under which, instead of the moneyed capital limitation, the rate shall not be greater than the rate upon the shares of other financial corporations, nor upon the net assets of individuals, partnerships or associations employed in the banking, loan or investment business, nor higher than the rate assessed upon mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations with head office in the state.

"Also an added fifth alternative permissive method, designated as a specific tax, permits a state, in place of an ad valorem tax on bank shares, to add together total dividends paid the preceding year and the increase in capital, surplus and undivided profits, less additions to capital or surplus paid in by stockholders, and to divide this total by the number of shares. The state may tax the shares based upon this amount, but not to exceed the rate on other corporations in proportion to their net profits.

"This method is designed for states which have heretofore taxed national banks upon their entire net income from all sources at a proportionate rate to that assessed upon business corporations. The amount which is the basis of the tax is the equivalent of the entire net income from all sources, but being assessed against the shareholder upon his property in the shares and not a tax upon the bank, it is not open to the objection as an indirect tax on exempt income."

VITAMINS WERE VITAL

THERE are many records of canned foods which have been kept for decades and found to be in perfect condition when opened, and, although in the following account by Prudence Penny of the New York American, of how the life of an aged German invalid was saved by means of canned foods that were kept for less than a decade, it furnishes a vivid illustration of what modern scientific methods of canning mean to our civilization. This story, which appeared in a recent issue of this newspaper, reads as follows:

"I was in Germany—Leipzig to be exact—in 1923, during those wild days when the value of the mark sunk to depths unheard of; poverty and all its attendant ills were the order of the day, and it was difficult for the vast majority of the Germans to buy enough food to sustain the spark of life in them.

"I, with my American dollars, was by way of being a millionaire! And when I found that I had a dear old penniless invalid lady for a neighbor, I was enchanted at the prospect of spending some of my wealth to win her back to health.

"I searched the markets for the vegetables that she needed, and that I wanted; and found, to my dismay, that turnips and potatoes were all that I could get. No fresh peas, or string beans, or lettuce, or squash; no cabbage, no eggplant, or tomatoes or any one of the delicious vegetables without a couple of which no meal could be complete, to me. And I had an invalid to provide for, too—an invalid who needed those vitamin-filled vegetables!

"I was in a quandary. Some happy chance took me into a little grocery store, and there on a shelf, way out of reach, I saw row upon row of cans—cans of vegetables, all of them bearing familiar American trade-marks. There were all the ones I wanted most, and my heart was gladdened at the very sight of them. I told the grocer to give me a dozen cans to start with; but he looked at me, sadness in his eye at the thought of losing the sale, and said:

" 'No, lady, you don't want those cans. I have to tell you the truth—they've been on that shelf since 1914. Those cans are nine years old! We Germans don't eat many vegetables, you know; and for nine years I've been waiting for an American to come along and buy them. But I just can't sell them to you; it wouldn't be right.'

"It was enough to take the joy right out of life! But I looked again at the cans—there wasn't a bulge to be seen in any one of them; and I did want vegetables! I assured the grocer I was grateful for his honesty, but I'd have a dozen cans anyway. And the poor man, putting me down, I feel sure as a lunatic bent on suicide, sold me the cans.

"When I got them home, I examined them carefully for signs of deterioration of the product each contained. But not a sign could I find. The contents of every one of those cans was as fresh and good as the day they were sealed in the can—and for nine long months my invalid, my guests and I lived on canned vegetables. Not the original dozen cans, of course. I went back to that little shop and bought up the whole supply of the nine-year-old canned goods!

"To me, that was a remarkable demonstration of the quality of the vegetables and fruits that are canned. I am a staunch advocate of Can-Opener Housekeeping, when time is at a premium. And, despite all the gibes that are flung at the housekeepers whose kitchen shelves boast rows of canned goods, I want to assure you that excellent, dietetically correct meals can be prepared with the aid of a can-opener."

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, August 8, 1930. Volume 20; Number 15.

N. S. A. News

According to officials of the Northwest School of Agriculture, extensive alterations are being made in the administration building, which is popularly known as Kiehle Hall to thousands of former students and alumni. This building has served as the center of all school activities for the past twenty years. Of the 976 graduates, all but seventeen have received their diplomas in the auditorium of this building.

Due to the rapid increase in enrollment during recent years, the library, auditorium, gymnasium and other facilities have been completely outgrown.

All gymnasium equipment will now be housed in the new Physical Education building that is under construction on the south side of the campus. Plans include an enlarged library covering one-half of the ground floor, while administration offices, post office and book storage rooms will occupy the rest of the first floor. The stairway leading to the second floor will be moved to the center of the building near the south wall, thus relieving the congestion at the front entrance.

Second floor plans include a new and enlarged auditorium, with raised floor, and stage relocated across the entire north wall of the building. A new balcony with a modern moving picture booth will be built.

We are this week publishing the official proceeding of the county board for their annual meeting held July 14th-16th, and also the proceedings of the four day meeting held July 21st and thru the 24th. Read these proceedings and you will get a good idea of all the work our county board has to do.

How To Market Cheap Rye

Because of the low price of rye this year, dairy farmers will probably find it more profitable to feed their rye direct to the cows, than to sell it for cash and buy back dairy feeds, says H. R. Searles, dairy specialist of the agricultural extension division, University Farm.

It must be admitted, Searles says, that rye is a rather unpalatable feed for dairy cattle and that large amounts of it may cause digestive disturbances. However, if rye is fed in a mixture with other grains, the cows will take it very well and it is nearly equal to corn in feed value.

It is very important however, not to feed rye in large amounts. Mr. Searles advises mixing it with other grains up to 25 per cent of the grain ration, and adds that it is probably best not to feed more than three pounds of rye per day for each cow under any circumstances. If fed on this basis, he says, rye will be the cheapest part of the grain mixture at present prices.

Mrs. H. Moberg, George Clifford, Bertha, and Joyce Moberg called at the C. L. Simmons home Sunday evening.

We Are the Milk Pails and the Cream Cans
Without us the Dairy Cow would be lost entirely, and even with us She might be a losing proposition, because through us the grades of cream or milk can be made to pay or not to pay.
If we are kept clean and well sterilized we will help a lot to keep your milk and cream sweet, but if we are allowed to get rusty and dirty, with old milk left in the seams, then no cream will stay sweet in us long. Off flavors will be sure to develop and the grades will always be poor.
But if we are kept clean and well aired, we will do a lot towards keeping your cows on a paying basis.

New Verses of Omar Unearthed

Early Rubaiyat Has 135 More Quatrains Than Fitzgerald Translation.

Washington. — Another book of verses to be read underneath the bough with a loaf of bread and a thermos bottle of—well, lemonade—may be the product of the discovery in a Calcutta bookshop of an early volume of Omar Khayyam's Rubaiyat containing 135 more quatrains than Fitzgerald translated.

Only the volume in the Bodleian library at Oxford is older than the newly found illustrated manuscript which, according to news from India, bears the date 1505.

"Omar the Tentmaker fast in his grave on which the peach petals blow at Nishapur continues to be, despite the gap of 900 years, Persia's best ambassador to English-speaking countries," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society.

"Yet he who sang:

I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Caesar bled;

is little known as a poet in his own country. Abu-'l-fat'h Omar, son of Ibrahim the Tentmaker of Nishapur, for such was his name, holds in Persia some modest fame as a mathematician, an ancient wise man, who, about the time William the Conqueror was conquering England, assisted in revising the Persian calendar. But Omar, a poet! We have far better poets than he, the Persians say. The western world will never believe it.

Reasons for Persian Neglect.

"If Omar Khayyam is a poet without honor in his own country there are certain geographic reasons for the neglect as well as for his acceptance by moderns. Persians were in Omar's day and are to this day dominated by Mohammedan mysticism which Omar, who was as much a doubter and a realist as most Twentieth century scientists, flouted with verses.

"Omar Khayyam's verses ran against the tide of opinion in Persia of his day and still run against the tide. He was a heretic; his verses are still heretical. So Persia continues to think that Omar as a poet was a good mathematician.

"Much of the geography, the climate, the flowers, the products, and customs of Persia can be found inlaid in Omar's verses which have become so familiar to English readers. His most famous quatrain:

A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

supplies a thumbnail picture of what passes for a picnic, and the last word in holiday enjoyment throughout Moslem North Africa, the Near East and Persia—excepting the wine which is still forbidden.

"From Tripoli to Cairo, to Bagdad to Teheran and Tashkent, 3,500 miles, a bough and the shade it gives are luxuries in a land of eternal sun. Grass is even rarer than trees; no such thing as an American or English lawn exists. So when a holiday comes the people leave the seclusion of their towns, wander down to the bank of a stream where there may be a few trees and there 'star scattered on the grass,' as Omar writes, they rest and gossip.

Women Picnic in Cemeteries.

"Often the greenest spots are the cemeteries. To visit the graves women of the harem are sometimes permitted to go out once a week, an opportunity they seldom pass by, not so much to pay tribute to the dead, as for an outing under the trees. Graveyards are the favorite picnic grounds of the Near East.

"Omar sings of roses, tulips and the hyacinths of the garden; the peach and the pear trees in bloom. The brushes of artists have added some very definite ideas for us about Persian gardens. Yet a traveler to Persia reports that although he searched high and low, he has yet to find a Persian garden. On that dry plateau there is no such thing as a garden in the American or English sense.

"A garden to a Persian is a grove of trees kept alive by irrigation ditches that receive precious water from some creek fed by mountain snows.

"Persia is like a saucer. High mountains rim it. Close to the rim rise the principal cities hugging the mountains because of their dependence on the highlands for water. The center is an upland desert; 'the dead heart of Persia.' Crossing Persia requires crossing the desert, so to a parched and sun-beaten traveler any bit of green he comes upon toward the end of his journey seems a vision of paradise, a garden of unparalleled beauty to be praised and exalted in poetry."

Bank Book of "Bum" Shows $3,517 Balance

New York.—A bank book found under a bed recently in the Municipal lodging house at 432 East Twenty-fifth street revealed that Bernardo Zerato, thirty, who for sometime has availed himself of the free quarters five nights a month, the legal limit, had $3,517 on deposit in the Bowery Savings bank, according to a report to Commissioner of Public Welfare Taylor by Joseph A. Mannix, superintendent of the lodging house.

Mannix directed that Zerato be ejected if he returned and told not to come back again.

Four Men Needed to Lift This Book

It contains the names, in most cases the actual signatures, of about 2,000 American subscribers to the Memorial Theater Rebuilding fund.

PRIEST TOILS ALONE TO REBUILD WRECKED CHURCH

Padre Has Worked Eight Years on Job; Hopes to Complete It in Ten Years More.

Havana, Cuba.—Many a stout-hearted mason or skilled engineer would shy away from the task of rebuilding a huge church, yet that is the herculean job Rev. Reginaldo Sanchez, Dominican priest, has undertaken here.

If only the physical labor of another decade of construction faced the little Spanish padre, his task would be amazing enough. But added to this is his knowledge that fate for 71 years has frowned darkly on all efforts to bring to completion the church structure known as Antigua del Carmelo. Yet for eight years he has toiled and he feels confident that ten years more will see his work crowned with success.

Few churches have had so varied and troubled existence. First begun in 1859 by the secular clergy, Antigua del Carmelo by 1891 had been abandoned and stripped of its images as work had begun on a new structure near-by. On June 25, 1897, a bolt of lightning shattered the uncompleted structure.

In 1898, the remaining parts were used to house volunteers in the war against Spain, and as a soup kitchen for the poor. On July 5, 1907, persons never identified exploded seven pounds of dynamite in the battered edifice. In 1912, however, the church was again blessed and in 1918 the Dominican fathers sent Sanchez from Spain to Cuba to take charge of the parish.

With indomitable courage he began his task of rebuilding, single-handed. Every day for eight years he has labored—cutting huge stones by hand, hoisting them into place with a crude windlass, and between times, turning out delicate ornaments and vessels of clay and then hand-painting them.

Sand, rock, cement and lumber the white-robed priest trundled to the site of operations in a two-wheeled cart. Now and then a member of the church aids Father Sanchez for a day, helping him push the huge hand-saw back and forth to cut a slab of stone, but usually the little priest handles the job alone.

If all goes well, Father Sanchez will dedicate Antigua del Carmelo in 1940.

Different Colored Roses Grow From Same Twig

Roanoke, Va.—Mrs. Ruby Martin of Roanoke has grown two roses of distinctly different colors in bloom on the same twig of the same rosebush. Roanoke Rose society representatives found the stem was of abnormal size and described the phenomenon as a bud mutation of "sport."

The bush is of the Frau Karl Drushki variety, sometimes known as the American White Beauty. The two blooms grew on a nine-inch stem and have individual stems of three inches each.

>
> Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account. Will's father dies suddenly. Lillian and Loring are married. Will's mother dies immediately after the birth of Ernestine's baby.

"What has friendship got to do with business?" Loring asked, and his own face flushed with resentment. "I tell you I've got to make new contacts if we're to bring a different kind of clientele into the office. Besides, I didn't disapprove of Will knowing him. It was only his taking you to that dive. Do you think I would mix Lillian up with that crowd?"

"I can't see any grand difference," retorted Ernestine. "Lillian isn't a baby. She's your wife, anyhow. Besides, the Pastanos are all right—all of them. I know them well, and the two girls are as fine as any I have met. There's not a month passes that we don't visit them, or they don't call. Mr. Pastano admires Will. He once hurt my feelings, and he's been making it up ever since. We've been friends without asking about his political activities or how he makes his money."

"It's all very well for you to take an attitude with me," declared Loring, "but I've come home with the determination to make money—and a lot of it. Chicago is rich. I may as well take some of it as others. And if an acquaintance with a powerful man like Pastano falls to my luck, I'll pursue it. Will would want me to."

"Will would," admitted Ernestine, but her looks were cold. "You've changed, Loring. You used not be so—ambitious."

"I've acquired a new sense of values," he admitted. "Of course I'm not saying at all that a man should stick at nothing to make money. That's a mistake, and no good anyhow. But I've been around—I saw one thing everywhere. It is the passion for the possession of money—as much as a man can lay hands on."

"Don't be silly, Loring," said his wife mildly. "Look how happy Ernestine is, and she's as broke as broke."

"I am happy," declared Ernestine.

"Yes," admitted Loring, "but that is because your capacity for happiness is great. Your pleasure in your marriage and your child wouldn't be spoiled at all by more comforts."

"I don't want anything changed."

"Not now—not at this moment. But if you'll be honest with yourself, you'll find that one reason for your contentment is your great expectations for the future. You feel that your condition is only temporary. Come now, Ernestine—isn't that so? You are confident that there will be money for you and Will, when Peter grows older, and Will's work develops into more importance. Being poor can be a game if it's only an interlude. But if you had to look forward to nothing else—"

The truth of his logic hurt Ernestine unbearably.

"I don't care whether Will ever makes money or not," she declared passionately, almost in tears.

"You think you don't," said Loring inexorably. "But Will wouldn't say that. Every man wants money—every woman wants her man to have it. It's a symbol of power. If Will doesn't get it he'll feel that he's failed your confidence in him."

Ernestine found herself trembling.

Lillian picked the baby up and dandled him and spoke quietly to Loring. "You are disturbing Ernestine and it isn't a bit nice of you. All this shouting makes me wonder if you doubt your own ability."

She took the baby and put him in his mother's arms.

Loring apologized.

"It's a bad habit I have—arranging my own thought in an argument. It dosn't mean a thing—sophistry pure and simple. I know you are sincere, Ernestine. Don't pay any attention to me."

The talk fell into safer lines, but Ernestine was no longer happy. Loring got out his car, and, with Lillian and Ernestine in the back seat with the sleeping baby, he drove to her home. They left her now as they had left her in Erie street, disrupted, unhappy and at odds with Will.

She was awake when Will came in, and she fixed a light supper for him and told him all that Loring had said, with some small editing.

"He's a capable lawyer, I suppose," Will said. "And if Ruby wants to give him work to do, and Loring wants to do it, what's the difference? He's not the only lawyer that would like to get his fingers into Pastano's pie. But anyhow, I've got something to tell you. Underwood's going to New York, and Tucker's to be head of the art room."

Ernestine felt a cruel shock of disappointment. She knew Will had expected this—had hoped for the job himself.

"But Tucker's so young," she protested.

"It isn't that—he's capable. I'm glad he got it," said Will.

Ernestine thought of what this job might have meant. The pay was nearly double. They could have rented this house and, with the rent and the increase, moved into an apartment in Ravenswood.

"Oh," she cried to Will, aghast at her own mental processes. "It's so hard not to consider money. Not to want it! Not to care! I don't want to be greedy and grabby. I don't want to crave success. But I am—I do. Isn't it horrible?"

He looked at her with some humor.

"You aren't greedy and grabby, sweetheart. And as for success, there's a legitimate way to want that—not for the money but for the work. I don't think this has any effect on my future. It's really an executive position, and I'm a solitary worker. I'd be no good at bossing. It's an editorial job, and Tommy has an editorial slant on things. He's fitted for it."

A few days later he came home with a shining face.

"I'm to be Poole's assistant," he said. "Do you realize what this means to me? It's worth ten thousand in cash—to work under him. If a person went to him and offered a hundred dollars a lesson, he wouldn't teach him to draw, but would curse him out of the office. And he'll teach me, and I'll be paid for it. It means no more night work. Ten till six. I do detail in the art room until Mr. Poole comes in and then I work for him all afternoon. He does a copy for a New York syndicate every day, and there's always work to plan ahead and sketches to lay out. He's been boozy a lot lately, and I think McDermott feels that if he has somebody to help him he'll keep ahead and not run so close to publication. Wiston didn't want to send me in there—but Poole insisted on me." He sighed with happiness and added, as an afterthought, "It means another five-dollar raise—maybe more later."

He was so thrilled and excited that Ernestine commanded her heart to yield its disappointment over Tommy's job. But she could not see any real future for Will in losing himself in the great man's shadow.

* * * * * * *

"I don't want mamma to know," Ernestine said. "I'm afraid she won't go to Europe. Besides, you know what a fuss there'll be."

"Then don't tell her," said Will in his simplicity. "It isn't really any one else's business, is it?"

Ernestine sighed. "You don't know how they'll take it. Of course it's their business—they'll have enough to say. And I feel embarrassed with mamma. She'll wonder why I didn't tell her."

Will kissed her cheerfully and went away to his beloved job. He was radiantly happy and his happiness seemed to affect her inversely. Every day was an adventure to him.

"Tommy gives me plenty to do," he admitted one evening. "Tommy's a good boss. He keeps us all humping, and gives every fellow the kind of job he can do best. But it's the work for Mr. Poole that makes up for any chores. Ernestine, I tell you he is a great man. He comes in there—sometimes he doesn't know whether he's eaten or not, but as soon as he gets in that little office, which fits around him like a glove about a hand, he begins to function—the way his mind works is always a surprise. What's the matter, honey?—you're not eating."

Ernestine leaned on her hand and her eyes filled with tears.

"I hate to have mamma go away now," she said.

Will's methods were infantile.

"Then tell her. You know she'd stay in a minute."

"Go on talking about the office, please—so I can think."

Will laughed. He took a half-dollar from his pocket and spun it on the kitchen tablecloth.

"I won me fifty cents, shooting craps at the office," he said. "We can go to the movies."

Ernestine plucked the fifty-cent piece from his fingers, and he made a pretense at regaining it.

"Now my thinking process is entirely disrupted," she told him. "I thought Mr. Wiston was going to fire the next person he caught shooting craps in office hours."

"I don't believe he'll do it," said Will comfortably, and Ernestine did not believe it either. The men were always matching pennies or rolling dice or making up pools.

Will pushed back his chair, came around and cupped Ernestine's face in his hands, kissed her cheeks and lips and pressed her eyelashes down hard with his caresses.

"Don't be blue, honey—don't worry," he bade her cheerfully. "You're the prettiest, sweetest woman in the world. It's natural for us to have a family. You're not going to be unhappy about the new baby, are you, Ernestine? It's the way of love."

"I know," she said. She drew him down and kissed him. But her face was strangely sad. "Nothing can make me unhappy, Will, as long as we love each other. I get hurt because we go for weeks without seeing my family—I seem to be drifting away from them. Mamma and Lillian are always so busy, and papa is in New York. And I get proud and avoid them on my part. But as long as we have our love for each other—this oneness—it's the best thing in life—what can we lack?"

He picked her up, sat down in his mother's little rocker, cradled her, sang silly songs in her ear and teased her. But after a little while he was talking about the office again, and she was resting against him, entirely inattentive, her thought on her own affairs.

CHAPTER VIII

Will and Loring

Loring succeeded in securing for Ruby Pastano the deed and title to the old LeQuinne place in the restricted colony at Langley lake. Ernestine was filled with indignation that he should do such a thing.

"Mamma won't like it at all," she told Lillian. "LeQuinne's land runs right down to ours with nothing but Stone creek between the two places. You know how it will be with the Greeks there. The house will simply be bursting with visitors all summer. They will have speed boats, and there will be children in the water from morning till night."

"But I thought you liked them," protested Lillian. "You are friends of theirs. Mrs. Pastano is so happy about it, I thought you would be delighted, and so did Lorrie. In fact he counted on your help in calming mamma if she objected."

Ernestine shook her head.

"He can do his own calming. It's plain to me that Loring's ideas differ from ours. Will and Ruby Pastano are real friends, yet Will would never have thought of selling that place to Ruby. He fits into his own place, in Chicago, but he won't fit in there. The people—the Hendersons and the Mayces and the O'Tooles won't be kind to them. They'll not belong to the country club, nor be in the tournaments. I suppose it's not my place to worry about it, only I am thinking of mamma."

"Mamma won't go there after this summer, or next. Didn't you know, darling, that this stone-merger thing is going to make papa rich? You know, papa owns altogether nearly seven quarries in Indiana where some of the best limestone is cut, and then he has proxies for the Langley quarries. For the last year he and Lorrie have been buying options and small interests in other quarries. Now they have made a merger. The quarries are worth at their present rating five or six million dollars altogether, but the merger will be worth twenty-five million. Don't you see what it means?"

Ernestine stared at her. "Papa—worth millions?"

Lillian nodded with complacent pride. "Yes, and Loring is getting some of the stock. He is to be counsel for the merger, and he has a holding. You don't need to worry about mamma at Langley lake. I'm going down to open Lake Haven next week. Can't you come with me, instead of waiting for Will's vacation?"

"I don't like to leave Will alone in Chicago, in the heat—" said Ernestine.

"But I am leaving Loring. Are you well, Ernestine?"

"My feet bother me," Ernestine admitted. "I asked Doctor Grey about it, but he didn't say much. He's put me on a diet. I'll be all right."

"I think you ought to stay at Langley lake all summer."

Takes Much Water to Supply World's Cities

Have you any idea how much water the average city dweller uses daily? Take London, with its gigantic population. Here the authorities have to supply an area of 558 square miles, and give the 7,000,000 people the water they need. Would you have imagined that each of these demands no less than 36 gallons every day? Yes, that is only the average supply per head per day. In the dry, hot weather the amount required for each person becomes 40 gallons, or more than a barrel of water per day for each man, woman, and child. London is not the thirstiest town. Scotland consumes more water than England. In Glasgow and Edinburgh, for instance, the average consumption per head is not 36, but 37 gallons; and to Helensburgh, in Dumbartonshire, belongs the distinction of being the most thirsty town in the whole of the British Isles. Here they take 81.7 gallons per head. One reason given for Scotland's large consumption is that the water supply is much better than in England.

CHILDREN CRY FOR IT—

CHILDREN hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and just as harmless as the recipe reads.

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, you should use it to keep the system from clogging.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts is carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

TIRES OF NUDE LIFE EXPERIMENT

German Scientist Has Had Enough of Primitive

Los Angeles.—Primitive life seems to have palled on Dr. Friedrich Ritter, noted German scientist, although his affinity, Frau Doran, with whom he ran away, still clings to romance in the raw on the lonely Galapagos island off Ecuador.

This is the observation of Charles S. Howard, San Francisco globe trotter, who visited the couple in the course of his 66-day voyage from Florida on his yacht Sarah.

"The doctor and frau were in the nude when we first saw them," said Howard, "but they donned clothes to greet us. They were so excited to see us they were almost irrational in their joy.

"I asked the doctor if they ever planned to return to civilization. 'Well, maybe, but she says no, never,' he replied. So I guess the doctor, at least, is kind of tired of the primitive life and of his dictum of denying himself all food except fruit.

"He wears long hair and talks as though he considers himself inspired; but you can find a lot of folks like that without leaving California."

Ritter's trip to the island was promoted by a desire to escape the "boredom of civilization," and for the purpose of testing certain scientific theories relating to primitive nutrition and dietetics.

He left Berlin in July, 1929, with his woman companion, whom he had restored to health and who had expressed a wish to share his experiment. He spent his entire fortune on the trip.

The journey was made by way of Ecuador, where the couple bought a small boat to complete their travel to the Galapagos group—about 600 miles distant. Setting up a primitive domicile in the wilds of the island of their choice, the doctor and his companion engaged in testing the effect on their systems of a diet combining raw and cooked food, with raw cereals prepondering.

Salesman Kills Bear as Lumberjacks Hide

Longmont, Col.—Matching an old-fashioned rifle and his nerve against a huge black bear charging on a sawmill camp, Herbert Sullivan, Longmont salesman, killed the animal with his first shot.

Sullivan sells automobiles and has rarely fired a gun since his boyhood days on Fourth of July.

He had barely reached the sawmill in Big Elk Park, 30 miles west of Longmont, to deliver a new car, when a hatless lumberjack dashed into camp, shouting "The bears are after us."

Sullivan asked if they had any firearms and was handed an old-time 45.70 rifle. He went out alone.

A few rods from the camp he saw two bears. They saw him at the same time, and one, a female, charged down upon him.

Sullivan aimed at its head as it rose on its hind feet and let go. The bullet struck the bear in the jaw and passed through its head. The other bear fled.

Sullivan told the story to friends here and brought the bear home to prove it. The animal weighed 250 pounds.

Shooting Bull Is Not Profitable, Man Finds

Burtonsville, Md.—Shooting the bull is all right if one uses no more dangerous weapon than the tongue, but when it comes to shotguns it's an entirely different matter, William Miles, farmer, discovered.

John Matthias, a farmer, possessed a bull he prized highly. Recently the bull sought new pastures and found them, so it is alleged, in Miles' cornfield.

Montgomery county police arrested Miles on a warrant sworn out by Matthias, charging cruelty to animals. The warrant set out that Miles lost patience with the bull, blazed away with a shotgun and then left the wounded animal to suffer.

Mosquitoes Gentlemen, They Prefer Blonds

Philadelphia. — Mosquitoes prefer blonds and will pass up a brunette nine times out of ten when there is a blond in sight.

This was the assertion of Herman Horning, city entomologist and an authority on mosquitoes and their habits.

"Mosquitoes and flies are sensitive to light," explained Mr. Horning. "They are easily attracted to light-haired folks, both men and women, and seem to prefer fair people to dark.

"Another noticeable thing is that in fields where mosquitoes buzz around cows or horses it will be found that light-colored animals are the greater sufferers."

Cuckoo (the Clock Kind) Always Is in Season

Morehead City, N. C.—It may be illegal to shoot song birds but Jim Kelly got away with shooting the "cuckoo" in the clock. Game Warden Silas Brown said he was not justified in arresting Kelly for picking off the artificial bird. Jim was awakened at 3 a. m. by the cuckoo clock. He reached for a shotgun, fired at the bird and the noise ceased immediately. The bird retired in fragments behind its doors.

LOVE PIRACY "MAN" EXPOSED AS WOMAN

Wed Girl When Her Brother Backed Down.

Minneapolis, Minn.—For 24 years Eva Mary Hotaling lived as a man because she could get better jobs and earn more money. She even married a girl to save the family honor when her brother fled to avoid responsibility. And now she has been named as the "man" who stole a married woman's affections!

The suit was filed in the shape of a divorce complaint by Edward S. Halstad, prominent and well-to-do jeweler, against Mrs. Maunena Halstad, who, he charges, treated him "cruelly and inhumanly" after she met "Donald Hotaling," which is the name under which Eva Mary has gone for almost a quarter of a century.

Secret Is Bared.

Halstad's amazement when he learned that his supposed rival was a woman—a fact that reached the authorities because some one close to Mrs. Halstad babbled—may be imagined. He and his wife have been estranged for some time as a result, she said, of threats which he made against her life.

When she sued for divorce he retaliated by naming the supposed man who had been a frequent visitor at his home and whose friendliness with his wife he believed to be due to a clandestine love affair between them.

Miss Hotaling, admitting she was the "Donald" named in the jeweler's complaint, expressed regret that she had been found out and her sex revealed.

"I was just sixteen when I first donned male attire," she said. "It was not done as a lark, but as the result of a deliberate plan when, seeking work, I discovered that it was very hard for a girl to get a decent job at living wages."

Saves Brother's Name.

To detectives she said that when her brother, Donald, refused to marry a girl who was in trouble through him, she took his place and led her to the altar. For seven years they lived together, she said, and not even the girl's own family knew the truth until she died in 1923.

After an investigation the authorities held that if Eva Mary chose to wear trousers and call herself Donald there was nothing that could be done about it legally and she was permitted to go about her affairs.

Corrects Line of Poe on Statue, Is Jailed

Baltimore.—Incensed by a superfluous letter carved upon the Poe memorial statue in a park here, Edmond Fontaine, a plant pathologist, recently carried out a recently published threat that he would clip off the plural "s" in the carved script from Poe's "Raven," "Dreaming dreams no mortals ever dared to dream before."

Thus read the inscription on the face of the monument while accepted editions of Poe's works have the word "mortal" instead of the plural form. Fontaine is under arrest.

Asserting that the erasure made the line perfect and that there was no defacement of the monument because the letter was at the end of a line, Fontaine said: "Police say I had no business to do it, which is true, but art and poetry cannot bear up under the strain of seven years' waiting to have that error corrected. Poe himself would suffer agonies over such neglect by the Baltimore public."

Montana Voters O. K. New Yellowstone Span

Sidney, Mont.—Richland county's electorate has given Montana's building program added impetus by approving at the polls the proposed $85,000 bond issue which will help finance construction of a new bridge across the Yellowstone river east of Sidney. Construction of the span will entail expenditure of $350,000, of which federal and state governments will contribute $265,000.

6,552 Eggs in 22 Years Faithful Hen's Record

Maud, Okla.—A hen that has faithfully laid eggs and hatched chickens for 22 years is owned by Sam Colvin, negro, living near here.

The aged hen has laid 6,552 eggs since 1909, according to the record kept by Colvin. She has 1,260 descendants. The hen has produced approximately $1,638 worth of chickens and eggs for her owner and shows no intentions of quitting.

Anyway the Policemen Had Good Intentions

Columbus, Ohio.—Ashby Williams is still pondering over what is the most costly—robbers or police protection. When robbers recently made an attempt to break into his poolroom here, police arrived in time to frighten the invaders away. Investigating to ascertain whether anything was missing, the officers discovered four half pints of liquor and the fact that Williams was operating the place without a license. Arraigned the next day in court, the proprietor was fined $225 on the two charges.

RHEUMATIC FEVER TRACED TO TEETH

Scientist Tells of Tests Made on Animals.

Philadelphia.—Jefferson Medical college has just completed experiments tending to prove definitely that rheumatic fever is the direct results of focal infections, such as infected teeth and tonsils.

This was achieved by managing for the first time to produce satisfactory infections artificially in animals and studying the immediate and subsequent results.

Dr. Virgil Holland Moon of the college laboratory announced the results and explained the methods of these experiments at clinical sessions in the amphitheater of Jefferson hospital, arranged by and for ex-internes of the institution.

He said that previous efforts at artificially inducing chronic focal infections in experimental animals had failed because the viruses used had been introduced under the skin by injection.

The new method employed an infected cotton swab, which was sealed in muscles or under the skin of the animals after incisions had been made.

This set up a chronic infection, which permitted development of symptoms in the animals corresponding "nearly exactly" to the symptoms of human patients suffering from rheumatic fever.

Autopsies on the animals proved that changes in the heart and artery tissues were identical with those found in autopsy on human rheumatic fever victims.

For several years physicians have suspected the direct relation of chronic focal infections to rheumatic fever, but experimental methods never before had permitted conclusive proof of the theory, Doctor Moon said.

Berlin Police Search Woman's Gambling Club

Berlin.—The Berlin police have discovered and raided a woman's gambling club. They gently but firmly arrested and jailed the seven members they caught playing. The scene of the raid was a private residence in Kantstrasse.

The women are of the sort who do not have to do their own housework, and they had become accustomed to filling their idle hours with playing cards for money. Driven out of their various clubs because of their passionate devotion to gaming, they formed a gambling club. They were playing rhummy when the police burst in, although baccarat has been their usual game.

It was the first time in 17 years the Berlin Schupos have had occasion to raid a feminine gambling club. But they had presence of mind enough to sweep the cards off the table and carry them off for evidence.

Lowest of Monkeys Faces the Low-Down

Baltimore.—A lemur, one of the lowest of the monkey-like animals, classified by zoologists as relatives of the human race, has just been received at the laboratories of the Johns Hopkins University school of medicine. It is one of three brought in by a dealer in rare animals from East Africa.

Prof. Adolph H. Schultz of the department of physical anthropology said the animal is to be kept for a time to study its habits and behavior. Then it will be sent to join some 300 other monkeys, apes and lower primates in the anatomical collection. The school of medicine of Johns Hopkins has the largest collection of these animals in existence.

Engineer Derails Train to Save Boy; Is Killed

Hammond, La.—Bund Ford, engineer of the Illinois Central's Panama limited, gave his life to save a fourteen-year-old boy. His fireman also lost his life.

When the boy's auto stalled on the tracks, Ford deliberately derailed the train by speedy application of his brakes.

He failed to avert a collision and the auto was smashed. The boy, injured, will live. Ford and the fireman were scalded to death.

While dying the engineer revealed that years ago he had figured in a crossing fatality and resolved never again to be responsible for a death.

Indians Adopt Friendly Crow as a Lucky Omen

Glacier Park, Mont.—Mrs. Yellow Kidney of the Glacier National park reservation, recently adopted a crow which flew into her tepee through the open flap. She allows the bird its freedom, and it has steadfastly stayed by her, even sleeping in the wigwam nights. The Indians regard the friendliness of this bird as a good omen, and the tribe is making "good medicine" over it.

Raw Alaska Lands Are Luring Settlers

Anchorage, Alaska.—Every steamship from Seattle is bringing prospective colonists who are eagerly examining the fertile soil of Mattanuska valley. These newcomers will have the choice of a huge area of valley land which now grows tall grass and groves of softwood trees. The usual homestead laws apply to settlement of the raw Alaska lands.

Rats Scent Danger and Flee From Poison Trap

Have rats the power to sense coming dangers? The question is answered in the affirmative by some authorities in a summing up of the result of a campaign against the rat nuisance in Oslo, writes a correspondent of the London Sunday Observer. The campaign lasted for a week and fifteen tons of poison were distributed in bins and cellars. There were approximately 600,000 rats in Oslo and when the campaign ended not a single rat was seen. Some had been poisoned, but not more than a small fraction. What had happened to the rest?

Several people reported that a few days before the poison was laid down regiments of rats were seen wandering out of town, following the main roads. The experts now admit that these stories are not entirely fantastic. When the first report of the "emigration" was reported they inquired into it and saw the rats leaving. As far as the rats are concerned, the campaign has been satisfactory for Oslo itself, though the neighboring villages are not so enthusiastic.

Strike Period Note in Restoring Home of Lee

The restored home of Gen. Robert E. Lee will be one of a fine old southern family of the period rather than a large museum of antiquities.

Major General DeWitt, the new quartermaster general, says the work is being vigorously carried on by the War department, with every possible effort being made to get authoritative information. The department wants the restoration to capture those times when it was occupied by the Lee and Custis families.

In addition to providing for the restoration of the building proper, congress contemplated complete refurnishing and authorized acceptance of furniture donations. It has been definitely decided, General DeWitt says, to accept only genuine originals of the proper period. An accepted article will carry the donor's name.

Congratulations to George J. Van Rhee of the Spring Valley Tribune.

His editorial entitled "The Minnesota State Fair" was awarded first prize in the editorial contest staged jointly by the State Fair publicity department and the Minnesota Editorial Association.

Mr. Van Rhee will receive a $50 cash prize and a desk ornament from the fair management.

Second prize, $30 and desk ornament, was won by John E. Casey of the Jordan Independent. Third prize, $20 and desk ornament, went to Verne E. Joslin of the Heron Lake News.

The Minnesota State Fair

One of the institutions in which residents of the state can well take pride is the Minnesota State Fair, showing each year the first week in September.

Naturally we are proud of the record that the Fair has achieved in the past seventy years, but always desirous to progress and extend its sphere of influence so that many more people will attend this year's big exposition and benefit from the many wonderful educational exhibits that have been arranged, the management is making special efforts to induce every man, woman and child in the Northwest to visit the seventy-first annual Fair and dairy exposition.

One of the means of securing increased attendance is lowering of the general admission price from seventy-five to fifty cents without curtailing its educational and entertainment program, in fact they are the most stupendous in the Fair's history.

A prize list of over $133,000 has been approved for educational exhibits. The finest displays of livestock, farm products, boys' and girls' club work, women's work, bee culture and machinery, to be assembled anywhere this year, will be open for the inspection of all visitors.

A visit to the livestock section will be equivalent to taking a short course, for there will be assembled 3,000 head of the finest cattle, horses, sheep and swine in the country.

The evening horse show will have an international flavor with horses and riders from many states and Canada participating.

The outdoor machinery show will be the largest staged this year. More than sixty acres of moving-type exhibits, featuring the newest models in farm, road building, barn and home equipment, will be displayed.

The auto show, the woman's building with its many fine displays of household arts, the Boys' and Girls' Club work demonstrated, the fine arts show with its famous paintings, the educational exhibits of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the work of the children in the school exhibits, are only a few of the thousand and one features.

An entertainment program that surpasses those of other days has been arranged. It will include horse racing, auto racing, aviation, feature bands, circus attractions, fireworks and the Whoopee Way with its two score rides and shows.

Harness and running horse enthusiasts will have their innings as twelve harness and nine running races have been scheduled; $15,000 in purses being offered by the Fair.

Dare-devils of the auto racing world will furnish the thrills on three days. More than a score of the leading speed kings will be seen in action.

The aircraft exposition will depict the history and development of aviation as well as show the various models of planes, gliders, motors and other equipment.

There are so many features to the program of the 1930 Fair, that it is impossible to enumerate them all here, but the above should suffice to interest all. However, much of the effort is lost unless each person attends this big event and sees it for himself.—Written by George J. Van Rhee.

FRUITS FOR FROSTY DAYS

PINEAPPLE
PEARS
FLOUR

JUST in between the mid-winter desire for rich pastries, and the summer urge for fruit desserts, there come some frosty days when we don't know just what we do want for dessert. Try combining fruit and pastry, and make some of the newer pies and tarts and charlottes that are good both for your health and your pocket-book.

Did you ever go into the French bakery, just around the corner, to buy a little of this and a little of that, and find that your few pastries had cost more than your porterhouse steak? And the next day when you went into the kitchen and made your own pastries, did you discover that there was plenty for two pies instead of one and that the extra crust made a whole dozen of tiny little tarts to tuck away for luncheon another day? That's economy.

Economical and Good

If fresh fruits soar in price a bit beyond your budget, you will find canned fruits quite as delicious, with two real advantages—first, that the fruits are always healthful because they have been gathered at the correct degree of maturity, and second, that it's always strawberry time on the canned foods shelf.

Suppose we take advantage of the pep that's in the air these frosty days and see what we can do with a sack of flour, a few cans of fruit and the other "makings" of pastry goodies. We'll pass up grandmother's apple turn-overs and the old-fashioned pies, and try some brand new fruit pastries recently evolved by an expert dietitian. The first one that passed the test as 100 per cent O. K. is

Grape-fruit Pie: Scald one cup milk in a double boiler. Mix one cup sugar, one-eighth teaspoon salt and one-third cup flour; add to the scalded milk. Stir until thick and creamy. Cook ten minutes, covered. Add two slightly-beaten egg yolks and one tablespoon butter. Stir. Add one-half cup canned grapefruit syrup and one tablespoon lemon juice. Allow to thicken again, then cool and pour into previously baked crust. Cover with meringue made of the two egg whites, three tablespoons confectioner's sugar and one-half cup moist cocoanut. Brown in a slow oven, 300 degrees, for fifteen minutes.

Cranberry Ice Box Cake: Put the contents of a No. 2 can of cranberry sauce, one-half cup seedless raisins, one-third cup chopped nuts, ten chopped dates and one-third cup water in a sauce-pan, and heat slowly and carefully until the cranberry sauce is somewhat thick. Put alternate layers of sliced sponge cake and cranberry mixture in a buttered mold, finishing with cake. Pack down well and let stand overnight in the ice-box. Unmold and slice. Serve with cream or any desired sauce.

Attractive Desserts

Pear Pastries: Cut plain or sponge cake in squares and split in half-inch layers. Put two layers together with icing, jelly or jam. Cook contents of one can of pears in a thick syrup made of one-half cup pear syrup and one-third cup sugar, basting often as the pears cool, to glaze them. When cool, place a half pear on each piece of cake and pipe around edges and sides with whipped cream.

Apricot Raisin Charlotte: Remove crusts from eight slices of bread and spread liberally with butter. Crush the contents of a No. 2 can of apricots, retaining the syrup as well as the fruit. Add two tablespoons sugar, two tablespoons lemon juice and one slightly-beaten egg yolk. Bring to boiling, stirring constantly. Cook until slightly thickened. Then put alternate layers of bread and the hot fruit mixture in a deep dish. Press well and place something heavy on top. Let stand several hours in the ice-box. Unmold, cut in wedges, and serve with cream.*

BUYING READY-MADES

Most women of today consider ready-to-wear garments a boon in their busy lives. No time spent in selecting materials and planning dresses, which in a home-made product are so apt to be a disappointment even when finished—you have only to choose the styles that are becoming to your figure, try them on and see for yourself, and let the manufacturers do the worrying about styles and patterns.

In buying ready-made garments there are many things to be considered, if you would spend your money to the best advantage:

First comes the choice of material. Is it good enough to justify the price asked for it? If a wash dress, will it hold its color? If wool, will it hold its shape and wear well? Is the material suitable to the use for which the garment is designed? In an evening gown we do not demand serviceability, but the cloth in a street frock must be durable, must stand up under steady strain, and must not spot from rain and mud.

Second—Is the garment well made? Look to see whether it is likely to pull and fray at the seams. Examine the stitching closely. Coarse or crooked stitching can spoil the appearance of the most promising creation. The tension of the machine should have been carefully adjusted so that the goods do not pucker.

Third—Choice of trimming. After selecting a good quality of cloth, see that the trimmings are of good quality also. Cheap trimmings have spoiled many an otherwise attractive garment. Frequently by removing cheap buttons that are used as trimming, and replacing them by others, or going without trimming altogether, a garment may be greatly improved in appearance.

Fourth—The time spent in getting in and out of clothes is an important point in the busy woman's life. Complicated fastenings, girdles, and collars make dressing a time-consuming process. The present tendency is all toward the simple dress of few fastenings, that, in many instances, slips on over the head.

Collars and vestees should be put on with snappers so that they can be freshened without cleaning the whole garment. Girdles should be detachable. As dry-cleaning is expensive in most places, it is important that the garment be one that can be cleaned easily and cheaply.

Suppose you suddenly learned that your grandmother used to walk a tight rope on one foot, her other foot held high in the air. You'd be shocked.

But you would not be as seriously shocked as ten million British old ladies, male and female, suddenly informed that Queen Mary actually smokes cigarettes.

She smokes only two, one after luncheon, one after tea. But she does smoke.

Her marvelously complicated Victorian hats, skirts below her ankles, stately carriage, dignified expression, cannot make the horrified millions forget the three dreadful words: "Queen Mary smokes."

New Uses For Familiar Vegetables

By CAROLINE B. KING

THE housewife who has a garden to draw upon for her vegetable supply has a gold mine at her command if she did but know it, for in the fresh green things from her garden patch lie all the rich vital qualities her family require for their well being.

String beans, cabbage, carrots, chard, lettuce, contain Vitamin A. Asparagus, beans, cabbage, carrots, lettuce, peas, white potatoes, string beans and tomatoes are rich in Vitamin B. Vitamin C is contained in beets, cabbage, carrots, lettuce, peas, potatoes, string beans and tomatoes. Escarolle, spinach and tomatoes are rich in iron; beans, carrots, cauliflower and onions contain lime, and asparagus, cabbage, carrots, celery, lettuce, onions, potatoes cooked in the jackets, squash and turnips are all valuable because they supply the roughage or bulk the body needs to keep it in good condition. Home canning of tomatoes affords an opportunity to select fully ripe and choice fruits.

When one realizes what a wealth of healthful qualities these easily grown garden vegetables contain, it would seem impossible to serve too many vegetables. One may begin the meal with a vegetable appetizer, and finish it with a dessert salad made of vegetables, and all the way through the other courses deliciously cooked hot vegetables of all sorts may be served as main dishes, as entrees or in any other form one wishes.

Tomato Juice Cocktails are extremely good. Make them by straining canned tomatoes through a coarse sieve, pressing lightly. To three cupfuls of pulp add the juice of half a lemon, 1 tablespoonful of sugar, salt, pepper, and paprika to taste, and if desired a mere whiff of celery salt. Put in the shaker half filled with crushed ice and shake vigorously, strain into cocktail glasses and serve with tiny sandwiches of wholewheat or graham bread.

Scalloped Egg Plant is a tempting main dish or entree. Cut a large egg plant in slices about half an inch thick, pare them and place in salt water for a few minutes, then rinse and cut in cubes, cover with boiling salted water, cook till tender and drain well. Chop one small onion and saute it in 2 tablespoonsful of melted butter, add a tablespoonful of chopped parsley and one of flour, cook, stirring gently for a few moments. Then pour in a cupful of milk and simmer till thick, adding ½ teaspoonful of salt and pepper and paprika to taste. Add the egg plant and turn into a buttered baking dish. Cover with bread crumbs, dot with butter and bake a nice brown.

Cucumber Salad with Pineapple: Add 1½ cupfuls of boiling water to a package of lemon flavored, sweetened gelatine, and stir well, set aside to cool. When beginning to thicken add a tablespoonful of vinegar, one cupful of cubed cucumber and a slice or two of canned pineapple finely shredded. Season with paprika and a little salt, turn into small molds, chill well, and unmold on lettuce leaves. Serve as a dessert salad with cream cheese balls and wafers.

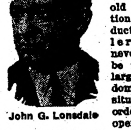
THE INDIVIDUAL YET NEEDED BY BUSINESS

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association



John G. Lonsdale

SOME seem to think that the day of the individual in business has passed. But they are wrong. While the individual may not attract such outstanding attention as he did in the days of old when institutions were conducted on a smaller scale, he nevertheless is to be found in any large corporation, dominating the situation, giving orders here, cooperating there and shouldering the responsibility of keeping a large group of lieutenants, captains and privates working in unison and moving forward under the banner of progress. And all of these are held accountable to the public because the public has entered into a partnership agreement with the corporation through purchase of stock.

Welfare of Workers

Even in the gigantic mergers that have taken place within the last two years there remains more than ever the necessity for a leader, an aggressive personality, whose duty it is to see that basic principles are not forgotten, that the rights and privileges of the individual workers and the customers they serve are as well provided for as in the smaller business units.

It is gratifying to note that our corporations are giving more and more concern to the welfare of their workers. Numerous benefit organizations have been formed, opportunities offered for advancement of education and position, hospital service established and insurance and retirement pensions provided.

This general humanitarian movement in reality is the outgrowth of analysis, which has disclosed the need of improving the well-being of our individual workers, realizing at the same time that our institutions will benefit.

PREPAREDNESS IN BUSINESS

By R. S. HECHT,
American Bankers Association.

My observations for many years, both as an employee and as an executive, have convinced me that the reason some men and women go ahead and others do not is that some keep themselves constantly prepared to accept and fulfill larger duties and responsibilities as they offer, and some do not.

Grant, as we must, that there is a certain element of luck in the conditions under which opportunity for promotion comes to different men and women, we nevertheless must also see that it is each individual's own state of preparedness which determines his ability to seize opportunity if and when it comes, and having seized it, to succeed in meeting the greater demands which it inevitably places upon him.

Real advancement never means going ahead to easier tasks, but always to harder ones. Opportunity for advancement is worthless unless in accepting it you are able to carry with you the abilities and qualifications that prepare you to meet the heavier exactions that are an inherent part of opportunity.

It is far better to go into action in the field of enlarged responsibility prepared and qualified, rather than that you and the institution you work for shall be exposed to the hazard of your having to build up to new responsibilities after having assumed them.

The new spirit of all business seeks to prepare its people in advance through education for the higher duties it holds in store for them.

Bank Bandits Active

The greatest number of bandit raids on American banking ever recorded in the figures of the protective department of the American Bankers Association were reported during the six months ending last February. Bank members of the association reported for investigation 311 forgery cases, 107 holdup robberies, 16 burglaries, 2 sneak thefts and 8 mortgage swindles while non-member banks, numbering less than half the total enrolled in the association, suffered 86 holdup robberies and 9 burglaries, non-members being burglarized or held up once for every 89 banks, as compared with once for every 164 member banks. The association detective agents caused the arrest of 143 of the 236 bank criminals apprehended during the period covered.

The association's report on these conditions urges support of the movement to provide city police departments with radio-equipped cruising automobiles which have proved particularly effective in Cleveland and Detroit in the broadcasting of alarms and the closing in on criminals immediately after or even in the midst of the perpetration of crimes. Last year the average time elapsed between the receipt of radio calls by these cars and the 1325 arrests which followed was one minute and forty-two seconds, the report says.

STATE TAX MEN AND BANKERS IN ACCORD

Months of Negotiation Lead to Agreement on Changes Broadening Method of State or Local Taxation of National Banks.

NEW YORK.—Months of conference and negotiation between an American Bankers Association special committee and the Committee of the Association of States on Bank Taxation have resulted in an agreement on a form of amendment to the Federal statute dealing with state or local taxation of national banks that "maintains the integrity of the protective principles of the section and is satisfactory to the commissioners' committee," says the American Bankers Association Journal.

Thomas B. Paton, the organization's General Counsel, in making the announcement says that previously proposed amendments to the statute, which is known as Section 5219, have been opposed when it was felt their terms would enable any state to place banks in a tax class by themselves.

"The law as it stands today," Mr. Paton says, "permits state or local taxation of national banks or their shareholders in one or the other of the four following forms: the shareholders upon their shares,—a property tax; the shareholders upon their dividends,—a personal income tax; the bank upon its net income; the bank according to or measured by its net income. Only one form of tax can be imposed, except that the dividend tax may be combined with the third or fourth form if other corporations and shareholders are likewise taxed.

"The conditions permitted are: the tax on shares must be at no greater rate than on other competing moneyed capital; the income tax on shareholders must be at no greater rate than on net income from other moneyed capital; the tax on bank net income must be at no higher rate than on other financial corporations nor the highest rates on mercantile and manufacturing corporations doing business within the state; the tax measured by net bank income is subject to the same limitations as the tax on net income of the bank but may include entire net income from all sources."

States Seek Broader Law

National banks and their shareholders are taxed in different states under a diversity of systems, he says. The U. S. Supreme Court has held that the low millage rate on intangible personal property is in violation of the present law where it results in national bank shares being taxed at a rate greater than that assessed upon competing moneyed capital. A number of states, unwilling to use the income methods permitted, had the alternative of either repealing the intangible tax laws or limiting taxation of national bank shares at the intangible rate. Therefore they sought a broadening of the permissive provisions.

Also, Mr. Paton points out, a Supreme Court decision held a state's excise tax on corporations invalid where it included income from Federal and local government bonds in the excise measure. This created doubt as to some state bank excise taxes.

"Conferences have been held to reach some agreement which would protect the banks, satisfy the tax commissioners and avoid a contest in Congress," Mr. Paton says. "From the standpoint of the tax authorities, the main objectives have been an amendment which would permit certain states to retain their low rate tax upon intangibles and at the same time derive an adequate, but not excessive, revenue from national bank shares, and an amendment which would permit certain states to tax corporations on their net income, excluding income from tax-exempts, and at the same time derive the same revenue from the banks as heretofore. From the standpoint of the banks, it has been deemed imperative to maintain the protective principles of Section 5219.

The Changes Agreed On

"In the proposed amendment the existing provision permitting taxation of bank shares no higher than the rate upon competing moneyed capital has been modified with respect to certain intangible tax states only by a provision under which, instead of the moneyed capital limitation, the rate shall not be greater than the rate upon the shares of other financial corporations, nor upon the net assets of individuals, partnerships or associations employed in the banking, loan or investment business, nor higher than the rate assessed upon mercantile, manufacturing and business corporations with head office in the state.

"Also an added fifth alternative permissive method, designated as a specific tax, permits a state, in place of an ad valorem tax on bank shares, to add together total dividends paid the preceding year and the increase in capital, surplus and undivided profits, less additions to capital or surplus paid in by stockholders, and to divide this total by the number of shares. The state may tax the shares based upon this amount, but not to exceed the rate on other corporations in proportion to their net profits.

"This method is designed for states which have heretofore taxed national banks upon their entire net income from all sources at a proportionate rate to that assessed upon business corporations. The amount which is the basis of the tax is the equivalent of the entire net income from all sources, but being assessed against the shareholder upon his property the shares and not a tax upon the bank, it is not open to the objection as an indirect tax on exempt income

Airplane Employed by Whalers in Antarctic

A Norwegian whaling fleet now at work off the ice banks of the Antarctic is accompanied by two airplanes which are being used to scout for schools of whales. It has been found that in certain years the whales are much more difficult to find than in others; in fact, they seem practically to disappear, and it is hoped that the airplane with its greater mobility and wide range of vision will be able to help in solving the problem. The machines can be equipped with three sets of landing gear: wheels for landing on the deck of the "mother" vessel, pontoons for the water, and skis for the ice. A wireless "there she blows" will summon the fleet when the airplanes sight their quarry.

IF ICHABOD CRANE HAD A FLASHLIGHT

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

John G. Lonsdale

WE ALL remember the story of Ichabod Crane and the headless horseman. There was the dark form by the side of the road—thundering hoofs on the Sleepy Hollow highway — and Ichabod fleeing in confused terror before this terrible monster. If Ichabod had only known that his hobgoblin was an inventive rival disguised with a a pumpkin head, he would have had a good laugh and gone on with the business of vanquishing his competitor.

What Ichabod really needed was a modern flashlight. Then he would have discovered the trickery at once. Many business men need the flashlight of analysis to uncover the hobgoblins in their business and then they might sit back and laugh at their rivals who hesitate to investigate and learn the truth.

At this time, when business and banking are making strenuous efforts to have a clear vision ahead, it is especially important that the power of research and analysis be employed to their fullest extent. When these twin brothers of good management have been pressed into service in all fields, I am confident we shall see a further lessening of periods of stress. However, I believe business in general has learned the valuable lesson that any prosperity that is not leavened with a little adversity would not seem basically safe or sound.

RESERVE SYSTEM'S DIVIDENDS ANALYZED

Bankers Find Increased Payments to Member Banks Would Be Small Inducement.

Various proposals that member banks in the Federal Reserve System should participate more largely in its net earnings through an increase in the dividend rate above the present fixed 6 per cent "would be a very small financial inducement" to them, it is declared in a recent study of this subject by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. This is shown, the commission says, by a theoretical forecast, on the basis of the past six years, of additional earnings that would be disbursed to member banks during the next six years under two plans introduced in bills before the United States Senate.

"The Fletcher bill provides that Federal Reserve Bank earnings, after present 6 per cent dividends to members and completion of a 100 per cent surplus, should all be distributed as extra dividends to the stockholder banks," the report says. "If the earnings of each Federal Reserve bank were distributed among its own members there would be no extra dividends in the Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago and San Francisco districts during the next six years, but the other six Federal Reserve Banks would pay annual extras at the following rates: Richmond, 6.08 per cent; Atlanta, 4.09 per cent; St. Louis, 3.50 per cent; Minneapolis, 9.51 per cent; Kansas City, 5.48 per cent; Dallas, 4.83 per cent.

"If the earnings were pooled and paid out to all members in all districts each member would receive an average annual extra dividend of .78 per cent. Under this plan no franchise tax as now would be paid by the Federal Reserve Banks to the Federal Government.

Another Plan Analyzed

"The Glass bill would provide that, after present 6 per cent dividends, one-half the remainder should be paid to member banks as an extra dividend with the residue going to surplus and Federal Government as franchise tax. The average annual extras to members would be as follows: Boston District, 2.51 per cent; New York, .48 per cent; Philadelphia, 2.05 per cent; Cleveland, 2.09 per cent; Richmond, 3.26 per cent; Atlanta, 4.67 per cent; Chicago, 3.20 per cent; St. Louis, 2.02 per cent; Minneapolis, 4.75 per cent; Kansas City, 2.74 per cent; Dallas, 3.31 per cent; San Francisco, 1.87 per cent.

"If these extra funds were pooled the result would be an extra average annual dividend of 1.73 per cent for each member. Under this plan the system would still pay as now an annual franchise tax, amounting to $1,941,996 on the average."

By way of concrete instance, the report says, a member bank having capital and surplus of $200,000, therefore holding Federal Reserve Bank stock amounting to $6,000 on which it is receiving $360 under the present 6 per cent dividend arrangement, would with the addition of each 1 per cent to the dividend rate receive an additional income of $60 a year.

"If each member bank will figure out for itself the dollar-and-cents gain it would enjoy we are confident it will be agreed that the gains are small as against the economic disadvantages which can be pointed out," it concludes.

Highway Materials Made in Minnesota

Nearly two thirds of the 1,200,000 barrels of cement used in building 280 miles of new trunk highway pavement this year is made in Minnesota, according to information given out by Commissioner C. M. Babcock. This is cited as one example to show how Minnesota materials are used, whenever possible, in highway construction and maintenance.

Nearly a million gallons of road tar used in bituminous gravel treatment is also produced in the state, this being the first year that road tar from a Minnesota plant has been available. The tar is a by-product of a coke plant in St. Paul. The home product is about one eighth of the total order of road oil and tar used this year.

All sand and gravel, both for paving and for grading roads, comes from Minnesota pits, except that Iowa material is used on one paving job at the Iowa line.

The entire order of 500,000 feet of new snow fence being bought this year is being made in Minnesota. All posts for the 60 miles of guard rail being built this year come from Minnesota forests.

All tile and concrete culverts and nearly all metal culverts used by the department are made in Minnesota. A large proportion of other materials, such as paints, road machinery, signs and markers, are made in the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Lorentson and family spent Sunday at Red Lake Narrows.

Edgar Horien spent a few days last week at Roseau taking in the Roseau County Fair.

H. O. Hanson and Theo. Ness, in company with a number of men, left Tuesday morning for Detroit, Michigan, to bring back a fleet of 1931 Fords for W. Sandeen of Thief River Falls.

Bank Bandits Active

The greatest number of bandit raids on American banking ever recorded in the figures of the protective department of the American Bankers Association were reported during the six months ending last February. Bank members of the association reported for investigation 311 forgery cases, 107 holdup robberies, 16 burglaries, 2 sneak thefts and 8 mortgage swindles while non-member banks, numbering less than half the total enrolled in the association, suffered 86 holdup robberies and 9 burglaries, non-members being burglarized or held up once for every 89 banks, as compared with once for every 164 member banks. The association detective agents caused the arrest of 143 of the 236 bank criminals apprehended during the period covered.

The association's report on these conditions urges support of the movement to provide city police departments with radio-equipped cruising automobiles which have proved particularly effective in Cleveland and Detroit in the broadcasting of alarms and the closing in on criminals immediately after or even in the midst of the perpetration of crimes. Last year the average time elapsed between the receipt of radio calls by these cars and the 1325 arrests which followed was one minute and forty-two seconds, the report says.

Bordewich Aids in Capture of No. Dak. Bank Robbers

Sheriff John P. Bordewich played an important part in the capture of the two negro bandits who looted a Michigan, N. D. bank of $3113, on Tuesday morning. Immediately after the robbery, Bordewich was notified that the bandits were headed this way. He at once went after them, passed them once on the road, but got on their trail again At Alvarado Bordewich arrived just a few minutes after the negroes had departed. They had stopped for gas, and hit south. Bordewich pursued them to Northland, a little inland town south of Alvarado, where he saw the bandit car parked in front of a store.

Bordewich, by entering the store from the rear, got the drop on the robbers and, with the aid of Alex Paulson, who has accompanied him from Alvarado, searched them and found $2,634 on their persons. In an unguarded moment, one of the negroes made a lunge at Paulson, and in the scuffle the two escaped, Bordewich receiving several cuts on his hands.

Upon leaving Northland, the bandit car was spotted by the Grand Forks police, who had trailed them from Alvarrdo. After a three mile chase, the negroes were overtaken and captured. Bordewich accompanied the party into Grand Forks, where the negroes were incarcerated.

Osea Jim Sledge, 20 years old, and George Taylor, 18, the bandits, were residents of Waukegon, Illinois.

At 10:30 p. m. Wednesday they began serving penitentiary sentence of 15 and 20 years at Bismark. Thus, only 40 hours aftetr the robbery, the two had been captured, confessed, faced two court arraingnmets, pleaded guilty, given prison sentences and were locked in "the big house" at Bismarck.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account. Will's father dies suddenly. Lillian and Loring are married. Will's mother dies immediately after the birth of Ernestine's baby. Changes in Will's office fail to bring advancement and Ernestine again is looking forward to motherhood. Pastano acquires a summer home near that of the Bricelands.

"It would be nice," said Ernestine vaguely, feeling hurt because she had not known about papa, or the stone merger—feeling out of things, "but I want to be with Will."

In July they went to Langley lake, where Lillian was established and where somehow she appropriated the role of hostess, although it was not her house any more than it was Ernestine's. Will refused to worry about the Pastanos living on the point, and Ernestine saw that he lacked her own snobbish prejudices about the lake colony. He took Peter and went to visit the Greeks the first morning he was there, and stayed all day, romping with the young Pastanos, teasing Alexandria, who adored him, and eating Madame Pastano's pickled fish.

Ernestine had asked John Poole to come down for the two Sundays they were at the lake. She had come to love the man as much as Will did, and had grown into the way of ignoring has bad habits. He was admirably sober the first Sunday he came down to them, and Will and Poole spent the day in the wood path and on the water, making ridiculous sketches in the sand, carrying Peter about with them.

But the second Sunday was a day of misfortunes. Ernestine was ill and could scarcely rise that morning, and it seemed to her that Will was impatient and unsympathetic.

Loring telephoned that he had stripped his gears and put the car in the garage. He would have to come on the train, and Ernestine realized with dismay that John Poole would be with him. Lillian brought the two from the station in her car. John Poole was already fuddled with drink and elaborately polite, and it was easily seen that Loring was in a state of nervous exasperation. His face was flushed, his brow furrowed.

"I've got to go right over to Pastano's to see a man that's coming out there today," he said to Lillian as soon as they had had Sunday dinner.

"If you are going to see Ruby, I'll go with you," said Mr. Poole. "I have a most important matter to discuss with Mr. Pastano. Mos' important. He has a nephew—yes, I know"—as Will laughed—"he has forty-seven nephews—but this is a most particular one. This boy is to study modeling. He is to be the exception—an artist in a family of clever criminals. I'm to see Mrs. Pastano about him. I'll go with you."

He rose and took a familiar hold on Loring's arm.

"Will can take you over in the boat, after while," Loring said, "I must hurry, and Pastano can't talk to both of us at once."

"No, I want to go with you," insisted Mr. Poole.

Loring no longer made the faintest effort to conceal his disgust.

"Your desire is unrequited," he said, and Will laughed and came around the table to his friend and boss and took hold of him.

"You're coming with me, you old war-horse," he said. "You're drunk. I'll wager you haven't done a lick of work all week. We'll go over to see Ruby after while. Loring doesn't want you, John, so come along with me."

John Poole turned and detained Loring who was trying to escape.

"You don't want me?"

"No," said Loring nervously. "I've had enough of you—too much. I don't ever want to see you again as long as I live."

"Come outside and fight with me, and I will beat you, and then we'll go to Pastano's—together."

Loring was furious. "I won't fight with you—you old fool!—Will, for G—d's sake, take him off me. Why did you bring him down here, anyhow?"

"Don't be so hard with him," said Will [illegible] warily. "He's got a little [illegible] me in handy some [illegible] our mind about friends of mine before—Pastano and Wiston, for instance."

Loring turned to Lillian who stood, silent and grave, by her table. "If this is what I am to expect here it's the last Sunday I come down."

Will flushed. "So Ernestine is intruding now?" he said slowly. "Perhaps you have already consummated your intention of cheating her out of her privileges in this house as elsewhere—"

"Anybody could cheat Ernestine," exclaimed Loring. "She was cheated once and for good when she married you. She ruined her life then, and now she must endure anything because she lacks protection and is handicapped to boot."

Will took a step forward, his big hand raised, and though he still smiled his face was evil. He spoke low and rapidly, and with an indescribable effect of vituperation:

"You great big stuffed shirt—you imitation—you safe-player and bribe-taker, you! You coveter! Do you think I don't know what's the matter with you?"

There was a pause which lasted indefinitely. Loring had swollen to rage, and then he had collapsed, until he stood looking at Will with a dreadful, haunted face.

It was strange, Ernestine thought afterward, that none of them felt, even then, that Loring was afraid of Will. There was some other element which gave Will tremendous advantage. Before the blaze in Will's eyes, before his cursing breathless phrases, Loring fell into a strange dejection. The two men looked at each other in the stillness that swirled around them all. Will turned at last to Ernestine.

Will and Poole Spent the Day in the Wood Path and on the Water.

"Go get your things, kitten, and get the baby ready," he said in a gentle voice. "We'll all go back together. I'll go to the hotel and get a taxi to take us to the depot. We can get the afternoon train. Gather your things up again, John."

With tears running down her face, Ernestine obeyed him. Loring went off, cursing under his breath, and Mr. Poole followed him to shout unheeded threats and maledictions. Lillian helped Ernestine to get ready, both of them crying.

"It's the end," said Ernestine. "We can never see each other again now. Our lives are separated indefinitely," and Lillian was thinking, "What will mamma say?"

"I'll call you up, when I get in town. Write to me, Ernestine. Don't let them tear us apart—"

"My life is with Will—yours with Loring," said Ernestine, and wept afresh, trying to stem the tears, trying not to care, but feeling the nervous, uncontrollable necessity for weeping.

In the train, going back to Chicago, she still cried now and then. "Why does Loring hate us so?" she asked at last in a low tone. "Especially me? Why does he hate me? He seems to want to wound me, to strike at me. He's done it before. But I've never harmed him. Why does he hate me, Will?"

"Hate you?" exclaimed Will, and looked at her strangely, his dark bright eyes searching her pale face for guile. "He doesn't hate you, Ernestine. But forget him—I'm glad something has happened. They've only made us unhappy, anyhow."

* * * * * * *

It was nice to be home again. Ernestine went about her little house with a feeling of comfort and joy.

Will was not due at the office until the end of the week, but on Monday, as Ernestine was finishing up a washing for the baby, he got dressed to go downtown. As she kissed him good-by and watched him go, then turned back to the routine of home, Ernestine felt a sense of well-being blot out yesterday's turmoil. She resolved not to think about it, nor to worry.

It seemed to her that Will had barely had time to go to town and come back again before he stood in the kitchen doorway, his eyes upon her with such a look in them that she gave a little cry and her hand flew to her throat.

"Will—what's happened?"

He put his hat down slowly. He hung his head, unable to speak to her, but at last he got it out.

"I've lost my job."

"Will—"

He said no more.

"Tell me—what happened?"

"Craps."

Ernestine sat down weakly in a chair by the kitchen table and gave a foolish-sounding laugh.

"Unarm, Eros—" she exclaimed and grinned at him. "I'm glad. You would never have quit, and now you'll get a job where they'll appreciate you."

"Ernestine!" he said, and choked. "I'll make good for you—I will! You'll see—some day."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Poole had not been at the office when Will was dismissed by Mr. Wiston. It was some days before he learned the details and gave them to Ernestine. The fellows had all surrounded Will with affectionate greeting on his arrival in the office unexpectedly. They had at once planned to eat supper in a crowd. Somebody produced dice to determine immediately who would have to pay. They squatted on their heels in a close ring between the sloping desks, and Tommy Tucker cried a fierce schoolboy "jiggers" at them. Will held the dice, and he straightened up and turned about boldly rattling the cubes in his big hand, and faced Mr. Wiston.

Mr. Wiston made quick work of him, almost, it seemed to Will, or so he said, as though he were glad of the chance. Within ten minutes after his arrival, Will walked out of the Sun offices, his possessions, done up in a paper package, under his arm, while half a dozen indignant but futile youngsters mourned after him.

But John Poole would not have it.

"You fire my help and you fire me," he told Wiston, and he left bag and baggage.

Nobody had thought of this. Mr. Wiston remonstrated with him, but nothing would satisfy John Poole except Will's reinstatement, and that Wiston would not concede.

So Will had added to his own anxieties a sense of responsibility about John Poole, of concern over Ernestine's break with that part of her family which was in or near Chicago.

Mr. Poole let it be known in newspaper circles that he and his assistant were available, but to his astonishment he had no offers. He was old, he had been identified with the Sun for many years. The Sun's rivals were busy developing their own artists and establishing them. It was only a year or two longer, it was said, for John Poole, and anyhow he would probably be back at the Sun within a month.

Patti Only Member of Fair Sex at Banquet

In 1859 Adelina Patti made her debut at the Academy of Music in New York in "Lucia," says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle Magazine. Not since Jenny Lind had a singer so captivated her audience. To the end of their lives many of her admirers insisted that she was the last one entitled to be called "la diva."

Twenty-five years later, in 1884, Patti again sang at the academy. To her honor a banquet was planned by a number of prominent New York men, including Judge Daly, William Steinway and Nathan Stetson. Naturally the wives of these men were expected to be present, but they virtuously refused to sit at the table with Patti, who had been divorced from her first husband, the Marquis De Caux, and married to Nicolini, the Italian tenor.

Extremely embarrassed, the gentlemen sent a committee to put the case to Mme. Patti as delicately as possible, and ask her if she would consent to be the guest of themselves only. Patti consented unhesitatingly, and she was the only woman present at a party of some seventy masculine admirers, in the ballroom of the Hotel Brunswick.

Date From Colonial Times

The Pennsylvania Dutch are descended from Germans who settled in Pennsylvania during the Colonial period. They began to migrate to Pennsylvania about the time the Quakers did. Many of them were from the Rhenish Palatinate. It has been estimated that in the years 1708 and 1709, more than 30,000 Germans went to England, and were transported to America in English ships.

Let us a little permit nature to take her own way; she better understands her own affairs than we.—Montaigne.

Of the First Generation

By EDGAR T. MONFORT

(Copyright.)

"BUT, John, I couldn't do it, dear. I haven't the courage. Besides, you'd be very unhappy. It simply wouldn't work."

Edith Montague clasped and unclasped her hands nervously and looked at her friend.

"Can't you see it? Can't you feel it? Don't you know I'm right?"

John Williams instinctively moved a little further away.

"I'm at a disadvantage, Edith, I can't press my suit, and if you don't love me. . . ."

"Oh, John, you hurt so, you don't understand. You must realize that your people and mine wouldn't mix. You don't know any of the crowd I know. You—you aren't interested in the same things they're interested in."

"You mean I don't play golf and bridge all day and half the night and my parents aren't educated. That's what you mean. You mean you'd be ashamed of them, that's what you really mean and you can't face the danger of introducing my mother to your friends and having her say 'was' for 'were.' I know it all. I realize that I'm the first college man in my family and that your people have been educated for centuries. I know it all. I'm the first generation. Sometimes I wish I'd have married the little girl I ran around with when I went to high school at home.

"I thought she was my future wife until I got out in the world, then when I went back things were different. She had changed, or rather I had, and I found myself wondering how I'd ever loved her. She was narrow and tame. Her brain was almost stodgy, she couldn't talk about anything. Didn't know anything to talk about. Then you came along. I worshiped your culture and your knowledge of things. And now you've thrown me down, cast me off like an old dress—kept me dangling for six months, then this. . . ."

He stopped from sheer exhaustion and Edith sat looking at him, her lips parted, her breath coming in little gasps. After a moment she spoke.

"But, John, you forget that you threw Grace down after a life-long friendship, because you did not think you could make her happy or to put it more crudely because you did not think she could make you happy. You have just said it yourself, yet you blame me."

The truth of the situation came to him suddenly—for the first time.

"You are right, Edith," he said at last. "I had never seen it in that light before, but I could have bet on your saying the right thing. I accept your refusal. I am paying the price of the first generation."

Without another word he rose and moved toward the door.

"Oh, John, let's be friends," she said impulsively, following him. "Some day you'll meet the right girl, the one who will just fit your heart and station and when you do I want you to let me know, because I'm very unhappy that this should have happened."

"Don't worry about it. It's my suffering, not yours," he answered, his face averted. "I'll go now."

With a mumbled word he slipped out the front door and down the imposing front steps leaving Edith staring in bewilderment.

The weeks that followed were dreary ones for John. He threw himself into his profession and unconsciously frowned if a girl so much as crossed his line of vision. He had had enough—too much. This falling in love business was a trick of nature to make you suffer.

The only girl he couldn't shake was a little neighbor from back home who had come to the city to study music. He had promised her parents that he would go and see her each week to keep her from getting homesick and it was upon one of these Sunday visits in early spring that he really saw Carolyn Gray for the first time. They were taking a walk in the country just outside the city when she looked up at him suddenly and spoke.

"John, you know what I'm going to do when I go to get married? I'm going to marry a man who is educated himself but whose parents have had no advantages—just like mine. I won't have anybody ashamed of my father and mother, thank you. They're too fine, and it would almost kill them. There's a girl down at school now who is ashamed for her mother to meet her fiance because he comes of cultivated people. She's a snob. That's what she is and I'm ashamed of her—not of her mother."

He looked at the slim little figure walking beside him—at the healthy glow in her cheeks, at the earnest blue eyes.

"You've made me see myself in the proper light," he said slowly at last, "and you've shown me a way to happiness."

"Oh, what is it?" she asked, catching his earnestness.

"I won't tell you now—you'll have to wait a few weeks." And all the way home as he walked beside her he was conscious of the thrill of her nearness and he said to himself over and over in bewilderment:

"And I thought I'd never love again!"

Tough One

"What is the hardest job you ever tackled?"

"Trying to keep on living high when the finances were low."

Find Boy Chained in Trunk 4 Years

Karachi, India.—When City Magistrate Sukker raided the stronghold of Pir Pajaro, who claims to be a Moslem chief and "Saint of the Turban," he found a boy chained to the bottom of a trunk. He also found three cats likewise chained and shut up in a box, an old man of 70 hidden in a closet, two monkeys in a box and sixty cases of firearms and bullets.

The authorities claim that Pir Pajaro kept his victims in that condition for four years. They also allege that he killed the boy's mother, for which offense he is now being tried.

LIGHTNING BOLT SETS RIVER AFIRE

Water Is Covered With Film of Gasoline

North Weald, Essex.—During a violent electrical storm which passed over this section recently a stream covered with a film of gasoline was struck and set on fire, the flames menacing a large hotel and a number of nearby homes. The gasoline is believed to have leaked from the tank at the airdrome in the village.

The firemen were called out and succeeded in saving all the endangered buildings.

The storm was one of the "freakiest" ever known in England. It covered a wide area and did much damage. Many houses were struck by lightning. The rain was one of the heaviest experienced in years. In a number of London suburbs the streets were under water to a depth of nearly a foot.

In some sections there was a sharp fall of snow, while only a few yards away the sun shone brilliantly.

At Glasgow the heat was intense, the mercury registering 100 degrees in the sun.

Snowflakes as large as half crowns heralded a violent storm in Eltham. Rain later fell in torrents.

No rain fell in Woolwich Town, two miles away. Clapham Common and Galham had a tropical-like downpour, but Tooting escaped.

A hailstorm at Southend village covered the roads and gardens with white and young crops suffered severely. One cultivator said that his crops looked as if they had had a scythe over them. An hour and a half after the storm had passed heaps of hailstones remained piled in corners.

Baby, 40 Days Old, Says, "What a Life!"

Sao Paulo, Brazil.—A "child prodigy" has been produced here, in the person of Amerys Mattar, who, having attained the ripe old age of forty-three days, is said to be able to speak fluently.

The father, an omnibus driver, was interviewed by the press and said the supernatural talents of his daughter were first made plain to him the other day when Amerys—then forty days old—remarked: "What a life!" This philosophical statement was followed, according to the proud father, by, "Oh, Look, Daddy, There's Saint Mary!"

At this point the interview was interrupted by Mattar's brother-in-law who informed the press that the child prodigy's father, getting home late the other night, told the child prodigy's mother that he had been kept at work, whereupon Amerys pointed to her father and said: "That's not true; papa was out having a good time with the fellows." Mattar admitted that he had forgotten that.

Amerys herself modestly refused to make any statement to the newspapers.

Razor Blade Eater Causes Traffic Jam

Boston.—Stunting on a window ledge nine stories above Central Square, Cambridge, James O'Reilly, thirty, a window washer with a penchant for eating razor blades and electric light bulbs, attracted such a crowd of spectators to the square that all automobile traffic was shut off and the police were obliged to intervene.

Patrolman John J. Donahue told O'Reilly he would have to give up his breath-taking antics, and stick to washing windows.

O'Reilly once was with a circus as a glass eater. He volunteered to eat a razor blade or a light bulb and when one of the patrolmen handed him two large sized glass bulbs he consumed one with apparent relish and was about to start on the other when the sergeant expressed himself as sufficiently convinced. O'Reilly went his way.

Justice, Barefoot, Nabs Looters of His Ice Box

Snyder's Lake, N. Y.—Justice of the Peace Lynd Cox is not so peaceful, two youths discovered when they attempted to make off with his Sunday dinner. The judge, hearing noises on his back porch, discovered Thomas Campbell and William McDonald of Troy looting his larder. They fled, and Cox, in bare feet, gave chase. Even after he stepped on a barbed wire and cut his toe, the judge got his men and arraigned them before a fellow justice of the peace who fined each of the culprits $15.

Restless CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A coated tongue calls for just a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed.

The 17-year locust is about one inch long when full grown and is marked with black and yellow.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Strengthened by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

La Junta, Colo.—"After my little daughter was born, one of my neighbors persuaded me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to build me up. The first bottle made quite a change in me. I got an appetite and can sleep much better, I am not so nervous as I was. I have six children and do all my own work. I can do so much more now than I could when I began taking the Vegetable Compound and I shall certainly recommend your medicine whenever I have an opportunity."—Mrs. JOHN OSBORN, R. #2, Box 216, La Junta, Colorado.

Capital Starts Vast Park Plan

Preservation of Historic Sites Included in Project at Washington

Washington.—With the appropriation by congress of the first installment of an authorized total of $33,000,000 for park purposes in and around the National Capital, including the George Washington Memorial parkway, a long-cherished hope is being translated into a certainty.

Without further delay surveys now may be undertaken and preliminary work begun on a park project which will reward the efforts of those who have been urging for years completion of a program made years ago for the beautification of Washington and its environs.

Nothing like the proposed memorial parkway in natural beauty and historic charm, it is said, could be developed anywhere else in this country. No European city, according to the late Viscount James Bryce, has "so noble a cataract" in its vicinity as the Great Falls of the Potomac, which is the crowning glory of the 15-mile stretch of the Upper Potomac valley now forever preserved as a national monument.

Dedications Expected in 1932.

Included within the parkway is the Mount Vernon Memorial highway from Washington to Mount Vernon, authorized two years ago, now in process of construction, and completion of which is promised in time for the George Washington Bicentennial in 1932.

It is hoped that dedication at least of the memorial parkway, which ultimately will include also another highway, from Fort Washington to Great Falls on the Maryland side, and a bridge across the Potomac at or near Great Falls may be a feature of the bicentennial celebration.

The memorial parkway will extend from Mount Vernon to a point above Great Falls and will include both shores and the hill sides along both banks of the Potomac, the gorge in the vicinity of which Capt. John Smith 300 years ago found "beares, deere and other beasts" and argall, an animal which, from his description, probably was a bison.

Canal Built by Washington.

Within its limits are the site and remains of the historic "Powtomack" canal, built on the Virginia side of the river under the direction of George Washington, and traces of other engineering works of the young Virginian, as well as the spot where he camped with Braddock.

The scenery of the entire area is remarkable for its variety and grandeur. It is a region of crags and cataracts, rock cliffs surmounted by towering trees, wild valleys and waterfalls and runs, a roaring river and quiet pools, rapids and rocks, culminating far above the canyon's lower portal, in the Great Falls.

Then the Potomac plunges down in a series of small falls extending over a mile and dropping from terrace to terrace, the roar of the rushing waters contrasting with the broad and placid stream rippling past the Lincoln Memorial a few miles away.

"The Potomac," wrote James Bryce, "has two kinds of beauty—the beauty of the upper stream murmuring over a rocky bed between bold heights crowned with woods, and the beauty of the wide expanse spread out like a lake below the city into a vast sheet of silver."

The Great Falls he referred as "a magnificent piece of scenery which you will, of course, always preserve."

Saving of Falls to the Nation.

Only within the last few weeks, however, were the steps finally taken to protect and preserve the falls from sacrifice to a power project, which was averted by passage of the Capper-Cranton bill providing for the acquisition, establishment and development of the George Washington Memorial parkway as a "requisite" to the "comprehensive park, parkway and playground system of the National Capital."

The act authorizes the appropriation of $16,000,000 for the purchase and development of lands within the District of Columbia, and of $7,500,000 to be expended on a fifty-fifty basis for land to be acquired in the adjoining states of Virginia and Maryland.

In order to make it possible to acquire with a minimum of delay properties which are daily and rapidly rising in value, it is provided that the money may be advanced in required amounts and reimbursed to the United States without interest at the rate of $1,000,000 a year by the district from any funds to its credit in the United States treasury, and also without interest, by the two adjoining states, within a period of not more than eight years, of any sums in excess of the contribution of the United States.

Cramton's Plea for Historic Sites.

The bill was ranked as an emergency measure by Representative Louis C. Cramton of Michigan, who first introduced it in the house in December, 1928. In urging its passage at the last session, he declared that it represented no new policy, but sought only to make effective plans long since prepared and approved, but "disastrously slow in realization."

"That which man made, man may replace, and when he will," Mr. Cramton said. "But the beauties of nature man cannot restore when once destroyed.

"Those woods which Washington loved are disappearing; those charming ravines are being leveled, those palisades of the Potomac are daily scenes of blasting that rob them of their primeval beauty. While we make a realty of the dreams of l'Enfante in carrying forward man-made beauties, we must not permit the beautiful scenic realities of Washington's time to become only mourned memories."

He warned the house that the $16,000,000 estimated by the National Capital Park and Planning commission as the minimum allowance for the lands to be acquired in the District of Columbia should be made immediately available to forestall the erection of buildings which would bring the value of the properties far above the estimated figure.

Drive Linking Forts of 1861.

Perhaps the most important single project in the district plan, according to Mr. Cramton, is the "Fort Boulevard" following the hills and circling the city and connecting the Civil war forts, generally referred to as the Fort-to-Fort drive, and covering a distance of 22.8 miles from Conduit road to Blue Plains.

Of this proposed drive or continuous parkway, the commission reported in 1929:

"The Civil war forts around Washington were built on hills and ridges which commanded distant views. The historic interest attaching to the 'defenses of Washington,' and the remarkable views obtainable from the old forts has led to a demand that these sites should be held by the public for park purposes."

Delay already has considerably abridged the Fort-to-Fort drive, plans for which were made and approved as far back as 1901. Local real estate developments have made impossible the carrying out of the original plan but there is still the possibility of securing an unusual and interesting circumferential parkway joining a chain of local parks containing the old Civil war forts, "a very stunning park project," according to Col. U. S. Grant III, executive officer of the commission.

Problem of Rising Land Values.

The total cost of the lands required for park purposes within the District of Columbia was estimated by Colonel Grant in December, 1928, at about $10,000,000, and increasing at the rate of from $900,000 to $1,000,000 a year.

In emphasizing this feature of the problem, Representative Cramton reminded the house that Central park, purchased in 1857 for $5,000,000, and improved at a cost of $10,000,000, over the opposition of those who contended that it was so far out and the horse-drawn street cars were so slow that few people could go to it from lower New York, now is valued at "somewhere between the $580,000,000 estimated by the assessors, and $3,000,000,000, the selling price which would be asked by conservative real estate men if the property were for sale."

Maryland and Virginia authorities are co-operating with unanimity and enthusiasm in the program worked out by the National Capital Park and Planning commission for the acquisition and development of the George Washington Memorial parkway, the extension of Rock Creek park into Maryland and of the Anacostia river, Indian creek, the northwest branch and Sligo creek, and have raised funds considerably in excess of $100,000 awaiting the legislation just enacted by congress.

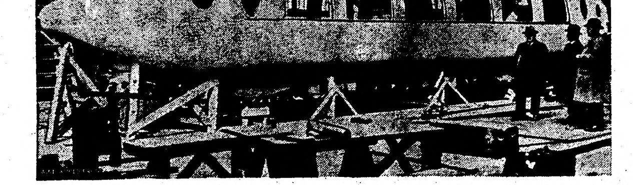
New System of Transportation in Scotland



A new system of transportation is to be tried out near Glasgow, Scotland, when the "rail-plane," the invention of George Bennie, will be demonstrated to the public. The coach, shaped like an airship, will be driven along overhead rails by a propellor at each end which will be electrically driven. The train will be capable of making a speed of 150 miles an hour. The photo shows the coach in the course of construction.

CONVICTS GOVERN SELVES IN ISLE OF PINES PRISON

Infractions of the Rules Are Investigated by Prisoners—School Maintained.

Isle of Pines, Cuba.—The "presidio modelo" or model prison here is well named. Many wardens and prison boards in the United States could well afford to see how Cuba maintains this prison for 2,800 men.

The five buildings housing these men are of unique construction, circular in design. Each cell opens into a court and the air is always fresh and pure as a large window allows the sunlight in each cell sometime during the day. Modern sanitary facilities, a cot and chair are the furnishings in each cell, which contains only one man.

No guards are found inside the buildings. The prisoners govern themselves. Whenever a prisoner breaks [illegible] selected by the prisoners from among themselves to investigate and report to a jury of five prisoners; who try the case and report to the warden, Captain Costello.

A wall about three feet high surrounds the prison. If any prisoner attempts to escape he is shot without warning.

There is no pampering nor prisoners' aid societies. A school is maintained, but attendance is not compulsory. The prisoners make all of their own clothes and shoes, raise all foodstuffs and build additional prison sections as needed.

It costs the government 29 cents a day to feed each prisoner. Breakfast at 5 a. m. consists of bread and coffee. The mid-day meal at 11 usually contains one fresh vegetable, a thick porridge, bread and coffee. Supper is about the same with meat substituted for the porridge. The whole atmosphere of this prison is more like a training school than a prison.

INDIA AND ITS PEOPLES

By Capt. L. R. Claud Robinson

THE RELIGIONS PROBLEM IN INDIA

THE existence of over seventy million Mohammedans in India is the most formidable obstacle in the way of those whose battle cry is "India a nation." The startling fact that no Mohammedan can have a Hindu relation and vice versa is an indication of the nature of the obstacle.

The gulf which separates the Mohammedan from the Hindu is a wide one owing to the difference of their social systems. That of Hinduism is exclusive, while that of Mohammedanism is communistic. Under the Hindu social system men are graded minutely and segregated, as it were, in an infinite number of water-tight compartments; under Islam all men are equal. Hinduism is aristocratic; Mohammedanism is essentially democratic.

At Indian railroad stations separate supplies of drinking water are provided for Mohammedans and Hindus. Hindu veneration for the cow as a sacred animal is very real, and the slaughter of cattle causes a Hindu to experience feelings of positive pain. On the other hand, the religious observances of the Mohammedan demand the sacrifice of the cow. This is an ever-present source of trouble between the two. Again, Hindu images and idols in their temples are an offense against the Mohammedan belief in the existence of but one Supreme Being.

Another divergence between the two exists in the matter of language. The classical language of the Hindus is Sanskrit, those of the Mohammedans, Arabic and Persian. And just as Hindi may be said to be the spoken language distinctive of the Hindus, so may Urdu be said to be the distinctive tongue of the Mohammedans. Hence, the teaching or the omission of the one or the other in Indian schools is a potential source of dissatisfaction.

But perhaps the most striking contrast between Islam and Hinduism is observable in their architecture. Mohammedan architecture is notable for its purity of outline, its simple grandeur and stateliness; whereas Hindu architecture is characterized by an amazing exuberance or ornamentation and an elaborate intricacy of design. The architecture of these people represents the embodiment in wood and stone of their ideas, particularly in the realm of religious thought. Thus, the same divergence which is noticeable in the character of their buildings is to be found in their conceptions of the spiritual world.

A GLIMPSE OF HINDUISM

THE vast majority of the population of India—about two hundred and twenty million—are Hindus. Hinduism as a religion is not comparable with Christianity, Mohammedanism, or even in one respect with Buddhism, for it claims no founder who propounded a faith for the salvation of mankind, and Hindus themselves are not in agreement as to what is essential in a man calling himself a Hindu.

Perhaps the main characteristic of Hinduism is its tolerance of religious beliefs, which, it is admitted, contain doctrines and methods of worship varying from mere heathenism to the sublimest ideas of the Godhead. A well-known Hindu, Babu Sarada Charan Mitra, has defined the term negatively as applicable to all inhabitants of India who are not Christians, Mohammedans, Parsees, Sikhs, Jains or Buddhists and he further amplifies his definition by stating that Hinduism includes "the most sublime conceptions of Indian sages with regard to God and the soul, as well as debasing superstitions of half-savage tribes living in the forests."

Others are more definite and lay down certain beliefs as essential to anyone possessing Hinduism; for example, belief in the immortality of the soul, in the doctrine of Karma (virtuous action), in the transmigration of the soul until it attains Moksha (salvation), and in the possibility of obtaining Moksha in any of several ways, namely, Karma or virtuous action, Bhakti or devotion to God, Juana or the attainment of knowledge of the true nature of things by meditation.

I think that the two fundamental and almost universal beliefs among Hindus are the doctrines of Karma and transmigration; or the belief that as a man sows, so he reaps here and hereafter through countless incarnations, and in the possibility of release from rebirth, the achievement of which may be said indeed to be the supreme objects of the Hindu religion. Certain it is that most Hindu practices are based upon the theory of successive lives conditioned by acts in the present and the past.

The idea prevailing among Western people that life is the great present reality to be made the most of, and that the future that lies beyond it is dim, shadowy and unrealizable — consequently of little immediate interest or concern—is altogether alien to the Indian mind. To the Hindu peasant all existence in this world is suffering and sorrow. His ambition is not to prolong it, but to escape from it.

Italy Unable to Check Movement From Villages

Italy's efforts to check the flow of population to the cities apparently have not been successful. This is especially true in the Alpine districts. The rapid depopulation there in recent years has been causing anxiety to the Italian government, which two years ago authorized the expenditure of $100,000 upon the construtcion of highways, the sanitation of mountain areas and other improvements. Afforestation laws, designed to create new opportunities for woodmen in the Alps areas, were also passed. The attractions of the cities of the plains have continued, however, to prove too strong for many of the old mountaineering stock, and the fall in the population of Alpine towns and villages has not been appreciably checked. Some villages have lost from half to two-third of their population in less than half a century.

Clock Made Trouble

Munich held its breath as the most perfect pianissimo was softly weaving through the hall at a concert by the New York symphony orchestra under Toscanini's baton, when suddenly a loud, purring sound set in, and continued most insistently—until one of the musicians jammed his instrument against his side with fury. He had bought one of those small pocket alarm clocks which belong in the pocket of every real tourist who has seen Europe. He had forgotten all about it until the little clock did its duty, purred conscientiously, but at the wrong moment.

BANKERS REPORT DROP IN SAVINGS

Lure of Stock Market Partly to Blame, but Slackened Speculation Expected to Bring Return to Thrift.

The first recession in the nation's savings account in banks in the twenty years during which records in this field have been kept by the American Bankers Association was disclosed for last year in the recent annual compilation prepared by its Savings Bank Division. The shrinkage amounted to over $195,000,000, on the basis of figures for the year ending June 29, 1929, whereas a year earlier the reported increase was over $2,300,000,000, the largest ever recorded. The number of savings depositors also decreased during the year covered by more than 500,000 accounts. The lure of the stock market and affiliated activities are cited as part of the explanation for these changes.

The association's statement says that savings deposits in banks and trust companies of continental United States on June 29, 1929, stood at $28,217,656,000. The recession in savings, it declares, indicates a fundamental change in the savings situation, irrespective of whether it is temporary or not.

How Savings Used to Grow

"In 1926 savings deposits increased $1,562,000,000, in 1927 almost $1,400,000,000 and in 1928 over $2,300,000,000," it says. "It appears now that some influences in one year have taken the gain that might reasonably have been expected in savings deposits for 1929 and lowered them from the high mark of the preceding year. This recession is not one coming as a result of drouth, famine, unemployment or conditions outside of the United States.

"A year ago it was stated: 'The year closing June 30, 1928, registered the largest gain in savings deposits in banks and trust companies of continental United States ever recorded in the history of this country.' What a difference one year makes! From a gain of more than 2¼ billions of dollars in savings deposits to a loss of almost 200 millions!

"The loss in savings deposits is reflected also in the loss of savings depositors. The year 1929 showed a total of 52,664,127 depositors, against 53,188,348 for 1928, a loss of 524,221.

"Industrial production was much higher last year than the preceding year. Factory payrolls were considerably greater. In production, employment and trade, advances were made over the preceding year. In the farm areas the improvement noted for 1928 did not recede in 1929 and the livestock industry in all its branches was prosperous.

The Causes of the Drop

"The causes of the recession are possibly multiple. There is scarcely any reason to doubt that one of the important factors draining away savings and decreasing depositors has been the lure of profits to be made in stocks. For a number of years the people have been regaled with stories of profits made in stocks in all types of companies. During the last few years there has been a specious philosophy preached that panics such as formerly occurred were no longer possible.

"If it was the lure of profits in stocks which caused the recession in savings, then a factor in future savings will be the success attendant upon this venture of savings depositors in stocks. If the experiment did not prove generally successful, then another year will doubtless witness an increase in savings deposits as well as in savings depositors."

HELPING YOUNG FOLK TO BECOME BANKERS

Through the American Institute of Banking, which is the American Bankers Association's educational section, the banking profession is educating 35,000 bank men and women in the technical and scientific departments of their work. These students are enabled by this institute, which is entirely non-commercial in its operations, to obtain a grasp of the finer points of banking without interrupting their employment or interfering with their earnings, in their bank jobs.

The courses given, including banking economics and law and bank administration in all the departments, have been worked out under the direction of senior college educators and the lectures are always given by practical men, such as lawyers in the legal courses, experts in banking operations and college professors in the economics courses. There are chapters with meeting rooms in over 200 cities and also a number of smaller study groups are fostered with correspondence aid.

It has been said that the A. I. B., as it is familiarly known throughout the banking field, is the greatest adult educational organization in the world and is supplying the banking business with the largest supply of trained workers each year that any comparable line of business is receiving. The organization holds an annual convention attended by hundreds of young bank workers as well as senior bank officers actively interested in furthering the institute's educational work, at which numerous technical subjects of practical banking application are presented and discussed. This year's convention will be held at Denver, Colorado, June 16 to 20.

THRILL PROGRAM FOR STATE FAIR

Refueling Demonstration, Glider Flight, Horse and Auto Races to be Featured.

THE greatest thrill program in history will be presented at this year's Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, August 30 to September 6, announces Raymond A. Lee, secretary of the Fair.

Spectacular aviation numbers, thrilling horse races, hair-raising auto contests, a wonderful horse show, open-air circus acts recruited from the four corners of the earth, gorgeous fireworks, band concerts, and a thousand and one other attractions make up the Fair's entertainment program.

The Curtiss-Tanager, winner of the $100,000 Guggenheim Safety Airplane Contest, the Travelair "Mystery Plane" capable of a speed of 300 miles an hour, and other world-famous aircraft, will be exhibited by the Curtiss-Wright Company of New York. There will be a refueling demonstration, showing how endurance flights are made possible; multiple parachute jumps with from four to eight jumpers leaving a single plane, and all floating through the air at one time; a motorless glider flight, with the aviator performing the loop, and other nerve-racking stunts.

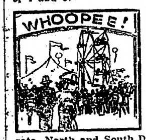
THE AWAKENING

Two hundred of the nation's finest trotters, pacers and runners will compete in the twelve harness and nine running horse events on the four-day program for the $15,000 in purses offered by the management, September 1, 2, 4 and 5.

Two dozen of the world's most daring automobile drivers will race for fame and fortune in the gasoline events on the card, scheduled for the opening and closing Saturdays, and Wednesday.

"The Awakening," a colossal spectacle, staged especially for the Minnesota State Fair, will be presented in front of the grandstand each evening. Richards' famous concert band will furnish the musical scores. The production will be climaxed by a sensational display of fireworks.

Horses and riders from seven states and Canada will vie for honors in the Evening Horse Show, September 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5.



The Boy Scout Indian Village, depicting the early life of the redskins, will prove of interest to all visitors. More than fifty Indians from Minnesota, North and South Dakota, will be brought to the camp. Wigwams, tepees, dances, ceremonials and pageantry will provide the Indian atmosphere.

And then there will be the 60-ton whale; the 10-ton sea elephant, the only living one in captivity; Morris & Castle's 25 new rides and attractions on the "Whoopee Way," and other features too numerous to mention.

Admission to the State Fair will be 50 cents this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Pete Hagglund of Gilbert, Minn., spent Monday evening and Tuesday visiting with relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fricker left Tuesday morning for Winnipeg and other points to spend a week's vacation.

H. O. Hanson and family, Mrs Chas Hagglund and son Ben and daughter Orlene, and Melvin Hanson spent Sunday evening at the Ole Hagglund home in St. Hilaire.

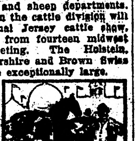
STATE FAIR HAS RECORD EXHIBITS

Livestock and Agricultural Displays Best Ever—Admission Is 50 Cents.

THE Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show — America's outstanding agricultural exposition—will present the greatest educational program in its history from August 30 to September 6, announces Raymond A. Lee, secretary.

Premiums totaling $133,464.25 have been set aside for the best livestock, farm and industrial products displayed.

Two million dollars worth of livestock has been entered in the cattle, horse, swine and sheep departments. Outstanding in the cattle division will be the regional Jersey cattle show, with animals from fourteen midwest states competing. The Holstein, Guernsey, Ayrshire and Brown Swiss shows will be exceptionally large.



Record showings of beef cattle, horses, sheep and swine are assured. The poultry contests have attracted more than 8,000 birds.

The Agricultural building, featuring its 36 county exhibits, and the finest grains, grasses, corn and vegetables grown in the state, will prove of interest to all visitors. The Horticultural building will be heaped high with enticing displays of fruits and flowers.

Twelve hundred boys and girls, representing the winners from more than 45,000 youngsters enrolled in 4-H club work throughout the state, will compete in the dairy calf, pig, sheep and colt finals at the Fair.

Every person who owns machinery or contemplates buying any in the near future, will want to visit the 60-acre machinery display. All that's new in farm equipment, road building machinery and labor-saving devices for the farm, factory or home, as well as old established lines of machinery, will be on display. All exhibits will be of the moving type, so that persons interested will be able to see the various machines in actual operation.

4H
CLUB WORK

A loan collection of famous paintings and sculpture, valued at more than $1,000,000 will be exhibited in the Fine Arts building.

Exhibits near and dear to the hearts of women will be found in the Woman's building. There will be displays touching on such important subjects as home-making, child training, clothes, art, travel and politics.

There will be the butter and cheese, bee and honey, fish and game, and school exhibits. The auto show, presenting many new models of cars; the aircraft show sponsored by the Curtiss-Wright Co.; the electrical show, where Mr. Televox, the mechanical man, will hold forth; the state exhibits, featuring the work of 35 departments and institutions, and a score of other educational features equally as interesting.

The admission fee for this year's Fair will be 50 cents.

H. O. Hanson and Theo. Ness returned Tuesday from Detroit, Michigan, where they had been to help bring back twenty new Fords for Sandeen's garage at Thief River Falls. They report that conditions are bad in the industrial centers right now.

Highway Washboards Are Studied in Tests

High pressure tires produce washboards, and they are formed more quickly at higher speeds, but balloon tires and shock absorbers will prevent their formation, according to reports of a series of road tests made by the engineering experiment station of the State College at Pullman, Wash.

The tests were made on a dry gravel road, 1.4 miles long, carrying no traffic except the test car. A device which measured the movement of the springs was used in recording the bumps, so there was no guess work. The surface was scarified and bladed smooth between each test.

Using high pressure tires and no shock absorbers, the corrugations began to appear after 36 trips when the car was going at 40 miles an hour, but did not appear until the 100th trip when the car was going 25 miles an hour.

Using the same tires and shock absorbers, 92 trips were required to produce washboards when the car went 40 miles an hour, and 188 trips when the car was driven 25 miles an hour.

When balloon tires were substituted and the shock absorbers taken off, no washboards appeared up to 360 trips, and with the shock absorbers added, none appeared up to 570 trips. "Whether or not balloon tires would promote or retard the formation of washboards on an already deeply washboarded highway, is a question yet to be answered," says the report.

While the percentage of high pressure tires on passenger cars has greatly diminished and is at present very small, the report points out that the percentage of trucks on the highways is constantly increasing, and truck tires are nearly all of the high pressure type. The report suggests that if some type of shock absorbers could be applied to all vehicles using high pressure tires, large savings in the maintenance of gravel roads might be accomplished.

A liberal supply of feed, especially plenty of mash, will help to keep laying hens from going into a molt at this time of the year.

The United States import about 75,000,000 pounds of cheese annually. The manufacture of this amount of cheese would make a market for the product of about 15,000 good American dairy cows.

If sodium chlorate or calcium chlorate have any place in the control of quack grass, it is in just such places as fence lines, says Andrew Boss, vice-director of the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment Station.

BOY SCOUT INDIAN VILLAGE AT STATE FAIR

The Boy Scout Indian Village will be one of the outstanding features at the Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, August 30 to September 6.

Indians in native dress, living in tepees, cooking their food in the open, and participating in dances and ceremonials will be in camp.

Boy Scouts from several states will demonstrate: whistle drills, fire by friction, first aid, signalling and tower construction, rope making, baking bread on a stick and other scout tricks.

There'll be no admission charge to the Boy Scout Indian Village.

Boy Is Killed

James LeRoy Alby, aged 7, was killed almost instantly Friday on the farm of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Taggart of Newfolden. The lad had run behind the manure spreader, just as the clutch slipped into gear, and his head came in direct contact with the revolving beater. Death followed a few hours afterward.

James was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Alby of Drake, N. D., former residents of this city. In 1926 they moved from Newfolden to Thief River Falls, and two years later went to Drake. Mr. Alby was not at home at the time of the tragedy, but had gonne west to seek employment. James had come with his mother in June to spend the summer with his grandparents. —Times.

Feeding the Navy

THE enlisted personnel of our navy numbers about 86,000 men whose activities produce healthy appetites. Generally speaking about 60,000 are on sea duty, the others being assigned to duty at naval yards and training stations.

The satisfying of their appetites calls for 258,000 meals every 24 hours—an annual total of 94,170,000 rations, at a gross cost approximating $20,000,000. This job, enormous as it is, is doubly complicated because these men are located on some 420 vessels and at 20 shore stations, not including hospitals, which are scattered all over the world.

For economy sake and convenience of handling, annual supply purchases are made—bids being advertised for and opened publicly. The quality must be high, the character suited to the climate where used and all food must meet the requirements of the pure food and drug act. Meats must meet the approval of the bureau of animal industry.

Stocks of "dry" items are maintained at Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Hampton Roads, Va., Bremerton, Wash., and Mare Island, Calif., from which points these and other items are dispatched to other stations and ships as required.

In round numbers, 70 cars of butter, 85 cars of milk, 225 cars of sugar, 525 cars of flour, 540 cars of fruits, 1,600 cars of meat and meat products and 2,400 cars of vegetables—111 trains of 50 cars each, with 15 cars left over for good measure, are used. And this does not, of course, include hundreds of cars of other miscellaneous items not mentioned above.

N. S. A. FALL TERM TO BEGIN SEPT. 29

School Will Be One of Best Equipped Institutions of Its Kind

The fall term of the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, will open September 29, and the winter term close March 27, according to an announcement made by Superintendent A. A. Dowell. This makes a convenient time for farm boys and girls to attend school, for they are thus able to assist with the regular farm work during the six summer months.

With the completion of the new Physical Education building, which is now under construction, and the complete remodeling of Kiehle building, to provide additional library, auditorium and administrative facilities, the Northwest School will be one of the best equipped institutions of its kind in this country.

All students are housed in the school dormitories, thus receiving home-like supervision.

Boys may take special work in gas motors, field machinery, carpentry, blacksmithing, animal and dairy husbandry, field crops, horticulture, and poultry. Girls' courses include foods and cookery, clothing and textiles, nursing, and business training. In addition, all students receive excellent training in English, public speaking, debate, history, economics, and physical education, together with such electives as voice, piano, violin, orchestra, and choruses.

For a copy of the school bulletin and other information, write the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston.

Rumson, N. J.—Did the sinister curse which for 40 years dogged romances of the royal Hapsburgs abroad span the Atlantic to strike down Donald Shields Andrews, brilliant and wealthy chemical engineer, in his elaborately equipped laboratory at Rumson?

Andrew's divorced wife, daughter of the former Crown Prince Rudolf of Austria-Hungary, ended her life by drinking a fatal potion at the second Victory ball in London on Armistice day, 1919.

Forty years ago her father, who was the son of Emperor Franz Josef, and his paramour, Baroness Marie Vetsera, were found shot to death in a hunting lodge deep in the royal preserves in Austria.

Truth Never Revealed.

Suicide? Murder? The outside world has never learned definitely.

Donald Shields Andrews, son of Matthew Andrews, Cleveland ore magnate, from whom he inherited more than $1,000,000, found his death lurking in a glass containing cyanide of potassium.

The poison, deadly at rattler's bite, had been placed on a table in the laboratory alongside another glass partially filled with water. The supposition is that Andrews reached for the water, but instead grasped the cyanide.

Surely, said many, there was no motive for the suicide theory in this instance. It was pointed out that Andrews, who was thirty-six, had no business or domestic troubles and although he had been treated for a nervous disorder, was in good spirits only a few minutes before he drank the deadly poison.

But those acquainted with the curse hovering over the Hapsburgs and those close to them cannot but associate this latest tragedy with it. It serves to recall his romance with the princess.

She Was His Elder.

Young Andrews, whose father was a business associate of Mark Hanna, was enrolled at the Sheffield Scientific school at Yale when he first met the princess, then known as Mrs. Alma V. Hayne. She had divorced a captain in the British Flying corps some time previously and was several years the senior of Andrews.

The young man's father objected strongly to the affair and it was said at the time employed detectives to prevent the marriage. However, Andrews and the princess eluded the sleuths, and the ceremony was performed on April 24, 1915.

The couple went to Europe on their honeymoon. A month later the husband returned—alone. From abroad came a statement purporting to emanate from Mrs. Andrews, that she had married the Yale man only to keep him from carrying out a threat of suicide if she rejected him.

Andrews went into seclusion and from daylight until dark labored unceasingly in his luxurious workshop. On the day of his death he had gone to the laboratory at 4 a. m. In midafternoon John Ross of Red Bank, N. J., friend and business associate of Andrews, called.

A sinister silence enveloped the place. With some trepidation Ross pushed his way into the room where Andrews lay on the floor, dead. Chief of Police Joseph Herdon investigated, and because of the presence on the nearby table of the cyanide and water, decided that death had been accidental.

But others shake their heads and mutter of the Hapsburg course.

Man Already Dead, When He Gets Pardon

Jackson, Miss.—The state of Mississippi has pardoned a negro who has been dead since November, records at the penitentiary offices here reveal. Jim Foote, the negro, until his suspension by Governor Bilbo last year, had served 23 years of a life-time sentence.

He returned to his home and died, his petition for clemency unanswered until last week.

Pilot Runs Out of Gas; Lands on Golf Grounds

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Roy Minor, thirty, Los Angeles plane pilot, interrupted several good games of golf recently when he was forced to make a landing on the links of the Pittsburgh Country club in Beechwood boulevard.

Piloting a new Standard plane, minor found his gas tank empty and his motor "dead" as he arrived over the city. Unable to draw on his reserve tank, he circled around the East End district in search of a landing place. When he had almost despaired of finding one, he sighted fairway No. 4 of the country club and began a swift descent.

Golfers scattered as the plane skimmed over the fairway and came to a stop. Residents of the district, believing the plane had crashed, called police. Lieut. Michael J. O'Connor and Patrolman Edward Sweeney arrived in time to help Minor replenish his gas tank.

Minor, who had intended to fly only as far as Pittsburgh, took off from the golf course on his return trip to Los Angeles when the tank was refilled.

Arkansas May Lose One of Representatives

Little Rock, Ark.—Arkansas probably will lose one of its congressional districts under the reapportionment that will take place when the national census is completed. The growth of the state's population in the last decade was less than 6 per cent and a shifting population probably will reduce the congressional representatives from seven to six.

SCIENTISTS WILL EXPLORE MYSTERIES OF SEA'S BED

With New Device They Hope to See What No Man Has Yet Gazed Upon.

New York.—The first descent by human beings to the bottom of the sea, whose mysteries are one of the major riddles still facing science, will be made early next year by Dr. William Beebe and Otis Barton of the American Museum of National History, it has been revealed here by Mr. Barton. He recently arrived here after spending several weeks with the Beebe expedition now exploring in Bermuda waters.

The scientists hope to see what no man has yet gazed upon, from a specially constructed steel chamber in which they will be sealed prior to the drop of the apparatus to the sea bottom.

This device will be similar to the apparatus which was used recently by the two men to sink to a depth of 1,400 feet near Bermuda, a world's record. It will be as nearly a perfect sphere as possible to gain the fullest resistance to water pressure and will be about five feet in diameter.

The scientists crouched within will study the ocean bed through specially designed portholes fitted with strong quartz glass. Powerful electric searchlights will play on the marine life they will encounter. With the aid of specially designed telephones they will keep in constant touch with those on the surface.

Several points on Long Island sound and the mouth of the Hudson river may afford a suitable field for this new and unusually important research, it was said, but it is likely that Dr. Beebe may again choose Bermuda waters as the scene for his operations.

Oldest Theater Razed to Build Modern Home

Lockport, N. Y.—The Temple theater, Lockport's oldest amusement house, where many world's great actors and singers have performed, is being razed to make room for a more modern structure. The building has been devoted at various times during its long career to almost every form of entertainment from grand opera to roller skating. Fifty years ago it was gutted by fire but rebuilt immediately.

State Gets Pelt of Bear Killed Chasing Children

Manorville, N. Y.—The pelt of a 150-pound bear which Ralph Vedder shot after it had chased two children from a blueberry bush was turned over to the state police, in accordance with the law.

Vedder, who resides in West Saugerties and is a highway construction workman, was summoned by the children after they had been frightened by the animal's approach.

Youth Takes 11,000 Volts; Still Lives

Tremonton, Utah.—A ten-year-old boy here had something even better than an operation to tell his playmates about when he emerged with his life after an encounter with 11,000 volts of electricity. He was forced to remain in bed and receive treatment for severe burns, but he was proud to know that he had been touched by four times the amount of electricity used to execute criminals, and had been able to crawl to a house unaided.

Dean Yoder was a hero to his playmates after his experience.

The youth was playing on the roof of a barn near his home. He slipped, threw his arms up to regain his balance, and his arm hit a wire carrying 11,000 volts of electricity. The shock hurled him off the barn, to the roof of a slanting shed, and to the ground. He immediately started crawling to the back door of a neighbor.

Physicians and officials familiar with the effects of electric shocks were of the opinion that the fall from the barn acted as a counter shock. They could think of no other factor that entered to save the boy's life.

BANDIT BEATS ROPE BY SHOOTING SELF

Cornered by Armed Men, He Cheats the Hangman.

Rome.—Cornered by carabineers and militia and determined to cheat the hangman, Celio Pace, an Italian murderer and bandit with a black record, committed suicide in full sight of the armed men sent out to capture him.

Pace had squandered the riches of his family, robbed his father and killed him, and tried to kill his sister.

A marked man, an outlaw, he fled to the mountains in Trento, northern Italy, where, hunted like the animal that he was, he lived like a dog in inaccessible caves, which were strongholds of the Italian army during the war.

For many weeks he escaped justice, but at last he realized that his mountain fastness had been penetrated by carabineers and militia.

Undaunted still, he sought refuge in a cavern situated on a mountain top, below which yawned a great precipice, 1,500 feet deep.

Reinforcements were brought up, however, and machine guns were trained on the murderer's cave, leaving him no loophole of escape.

But Celio Pace scoffed at death and defied the hangman to the last.

He left his lair and climbed a mountain ridge, where in full view of his besiegers he put a bullet through his heart and, with a gesture of scorn, plunged headlong to his doom in the depths of the abyss.

Feline Heroine Braves Fire to Rescue Kittens

Winnipeg.—Winnipeg firemen who fought the spectacular blaze in the Thorkellson box factory recently tell a stirring story of a feline heroine which braved flames and smoke four times to rescue her kittens from their home in one of the burning lumber piles.

The mother cat was first noticed by the fire fighters when the lumber pile in which she lived was a mass of flames. Appearing to be in great distress, she meowed and raced backwards and forwards from the fire. The firemen tried to save her, thinking she was bewildered by the heat and did not know where to run for safety.

The cat refused to be caught, however. She made a dash under the pile and a moment later was seen coming out with a kitten in her mouth.

She scurried across a field, but was back again in a few seconds without the kitten.

Four times tabby made the perilous trip. Her fur was singed, but she saved all her offspring.

Whether they survived the heat and smoke is not known, for a search for her new home was unavailing.

Two Tragedies Orphan Virginia Girl and Boy

Richmond, Va.—Two tragedies within a year have deprived Doris and Monroe Reece, Caroline County (Va.) children, of both mother and father.

The death of C. R. Reece, the father, a saw mill operator, several days ago in a mill accident near Wright's Fork, followed the burning of Mrs. Reece about 12 months ago.

Reece was dealt a fatal blow over the heart when a driving belt snapped and struck him. Mrs. Reece received burns while rescuing the two children from their burning home.

Fishin' for Fish, but Snare 7,400 Pennies

Memphis, Tenn.—One of a trio of juvenile fishermen grabbed for a fish and got a handful of mud. In the mud were several battered pennies. They hurriedly stripped off their clothes and started hand-dredging operations. By nightfall they had a total of 7,440 pennies presumably dumped there by slot machine operators who didn't want the dilapidated pennies used again as nickels in their machines.

Royal Canaanite City

Evidence of a great flood, probably the source of the account in the Book of Genesis, has been found at Kish as well as at Ur of the Chaldees, Dr. George Duncan, of American university, an authority on Biblical archeology, says. The mound known as Beit-Misrim, which is being excavated by Xenia theological seminary, probably represents a Canaanite royal city conquered by Joshua and mentioned in the Bible as Kiriath-Sepher, in the opinion of Doctor Duncan. Evidence of worship of the sun and worship of the serpent has been found at various cities of Biblical lands now being excavated, he points out.

It was dull in Chicago that summer. Mamma was still in Europe, and Ernestine felt that she could not confide in Lillian about Will. There were times when she was frightened about her own health. She felt faint in the heat. She could not eat at all. She had not felt this way before Peter was born, but then she had been strong and well. She couldn't understand this—her feet were swollen until she could not wear her shoes. Mrs. Schluss and Mrs. Pryor expressed their anxiety. Only Will, engrossed in his own troubles, was unaware of her frailty. She presented to Mr. Poole and to Will a superb calm, and a facetiousness that was easier for her than tragedy.

Will found some work for an advertising agency, which he brought home to do. He might have taken one of the jobs papa had offered him from time to time, but papa was in Europe and Loring in charge of his affairs.

Ernestine could not forgive Will for playing baseball in the streets with John Pryor and a half a dozen other half-grown boys, when he came back from his fruitless jaunts after work. "He doesn't care," she thought, and longed to wound him, to strike through his carelessness. She grew almost morbid—"Perhaps he'll have reason to waken—to understand that life's a job for a man."

Will took five dollars, almost the last of their cash, one morning early in August and went out, looking very clean and spruce, and with the light of adventure in his eye.

"I'll find work today, or stay out till I do," he told Ernestine and kissed her on both cheeks.

Peter clung to him ecstatically.

"Peter loves Will the better," she thought, pressing any thorn at hand against her heart. After he was gone, she went to her trunk and got out the bankbook she had obtained that day two years ago, when she had come out here and found Will's father dead. Here was a secret source of supply of her own. She looked at her bank balance. It was enough to pay for herself and the new baby, if she went into a two-bed ward, as Doctor Grey had planned for her. This was her money. Will would have to manage for himself and Peter. She decided to go and get the money and have cash in the house if anything happened. But she would not let Will know she had it.

She put the small bankbook on the dining room table and went about the clean and tidy house, washing dishes, setting the rooms in order.

There was a long letter from mamma in the morning mail. Ernestine did not finish reading it, for she had to go and lie down on her bed, seized with such pain that she could scarcely forbear crying out. She felt within herself no light at all, no buoyancy, no spark of life. She was dull, leaden, submerged. She felt she ought to make some effort to resist this spiritual inertia but she was too ill. She wondered if her child would be born too soon. This thought goaded her into action. She rose and gathered from her trunk Peter's little baby garments, long since washed and mended and laid away. She made the things she might need for the baby into a bundle and put it in her dresser drawer. She would get her money. She would arrange her own affairs—with competence. When the call came, she would be ready.

But she must rest first. She made herself a pot of fresh tea, asked Mrs. Schluss to look after Peter, and at length in the early afternoon she started off on the long walk to the street car.

She rode interminably, withdrawing her spirit from the concussion of the heat waves that came up from the stone pavement into the street car. Walking in a mist she reached the bank and went inside. She opened her purse, but found among its contents no bankbook. Like a picture in a dream she could see the leather square of it on the dining room table in the little house. She had left it at home.

If she had been in normal condition she would have realized that it was quite possible for her to establish her identity at the bank. She had made many small deposits. The teller would have remembered her. But as she stood in disappointment, the world grew black before her eyes, and for a straining moment, fully conscious but blind, she stood in silent terror.

The blindness passed, and she picked up her purse and went out of the bank, turned, half instinctively, toward Mrs. Bennett's. A strange girl was at the door, a colored girl who rolled her eyes at Ernestine.

"Mis' Bennett's out, ma'am. Will you wait?"

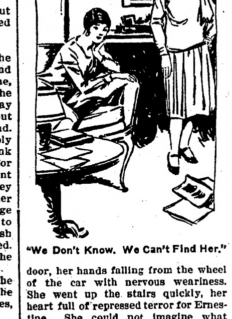
Ernestine left without a word, and went back to the boulevard. The darkness, the blindness was coming down on her again. She felt that she was going to faint. She could not hold on any longer—there was nothing with which to cling—she no longer cared.

The great bulk of the bus was moving down toward her—gigantic, menacing. She felt that it would crush her, and moved back a little on the sidewalk, her horrified eyes fixed upon the monster which seemed to swell and grow, and then, strangely, to rise from the pavement and to turn slowly and gracefully about in the air. She knew it was delirium, she knew that the bus could not act that way. But her knowledge could not pierce her fear of confusion. And then the bus lunged at her—the blindness came down again, and Ernestine, alone and very ill, fell down upon the pavement of the boulevard with a soft and plaintive moan.

CHAPTER IX

Loring Finds Ernestine

It was nine o'clock when Lillian reached Chicago from Langley lake in obedience to Loring's frantic telephone call. She turned the car into Erie street, as Loring had instructed her, and stopped before Mrs. Bennett's door, her hands falling from the wheel of the car with nervous weariness. She went up the stairs quickly, her heart full of repressed terror for Ernestine. She could not imagine what might have happened to her. It wasn't time surely for her baby. Loring had been brief and unsatisfactory over long-distance.



"We Don't Know. We Can't Find Her."

The door was opened by a colored maid who stared in silence.

"Is Mrs. Bennett in? I'm Mrs. Todd's sister. They told me to come here—"

The girl gave a squawk and threw her hand up over her mouth and rolled her eyes at Lillian.

"Can you tell me where Mrs. Todd is?" asked Lillian sharply.

"Lawd, Miss. Wisht I cud. Nobody knows. But you better c-min and talk to Miz' Bennett. She kin tell you the fac's."

Trembling seized Lillian, but she followed the girl in silence to Mrs. Bennett's sitting room, and in a moment found herself confronted by a plump little woman whose face was gray and ravaged. Lillian looked at her with pleading eyes, afraid to trust her voice. Her throat was dry and closed.

"Please—where is she? What has happened?"

"We don't know. We can't find her."

"Tell me—please."

"She's not been well—you knew of course that she was expecting another confinement?"

Lillian nodded, realizing that she was ignorant of the date.

"Well, since Will's been out of work, she's not been well."

"Will out of work? I didn't know that." Her heart was shaken with remorse. Will out of work, and Ernestine ill, and she had known nothing of it—playing bridge and golf and swimming at the lake.

"But where did she go? Who was with her last? What happened?"

Mrs. Bennett tried to be coherent.

"She left her little boy with a neighbor and went out alone, early in the afternoon. Evidently she intended to go to the bank, for Will found her bankbook lying on the table. We can't find out whether she was at the bank or not. No one noticed her, and she did not withdraw any money. But she came here about four. I was out and she left, but the maid said she looked as though she were going to drop then. That's the last that's been seen of her. Will got home about three, and he began to worry because Ernestine had not told him she was going out, and it was so hot, and she's not been well. He decided to come over here to the bank, and when he found that she hadn't been there, he went to your mother's. Ernestine wasn't there. Then Will came here, and Mr. Hamilton met him here. I phoned to Mrs. Schluss for them, but Ernestine wasn't at home yet.

"Wherever she was she would have come home to Peter, as Will argued, and I agreed with him. Will was nearly distracted—the men quarreled bitterly, and Mr. Hamilton called up Ruby Pastano and the papers, and organized a search—of course, people in the city go off and are delayed and don't get home on time. But, you see, now it's nearly ten and we haven't heard anything of her. Mr. Hamilton has notified the police. They'll find her—unless—"

"What do you mean?" cried Lillian sharply. Her hands were shaking so that she could scarcely hold her purse and gloves.

"Well—your husband—Mr. Hamilton, he's got the idea that she may have destroyed herself. But Will says no—she wouldn't do that."

"Will is right. Ernestine wouldn't do such a thing."

"But pregnant women get wonderful queer notions in their heads," insisted Mrs. Bennett dolefully. "Mr. Hamilton was nearly wild. He told Will that he had killed Ernestine—it seemed hard for Will to hear, but he brushed it away like nothing." She paused.

"Mr. Hamilton's got a taxi for us out there—had it since six o'clock. I don't know how much this'll cost him."

"That doesn't matter," said Lillian impatiently, and tried to control her perturbation. She was disturbed anew at the thought of Loring violent, uncontrolled—she had never seen him so, except on the other occasion of his quarrel with Will. But this was worse. He had always been so fond of Ernestine—as though she were his own little sister. She felt a great relief to think that he had taken charge of the search. He would find Ernestine if she were to be found.

But the thought of her sister out in these hot streets, lost, ill and alone, caused her such anguish that she could scarcely breathe. What would mamma say to her? Mamma loved Ernestine the better—always had. Mamma had really left Ernestine to her.

The door was flung open and Loring stood there. His eyes were glittering with fear or fever. He looked at her as if he scarcely knew her.

"Lillian!" he exclaimed.

"I drove," she told him, "all the way. I've been so worried."

"You had cause to worry," he said grimly. "When we find Ernestine she is going home with us—to stay. Don't you agree? She's got to have somebody to take care of her."

"Of course, Loring."

"I've news of a sort," he said slowly, and they stared at him. "I don't know what it's worth. There was a woman taken to the County hospital this afternoon—from this neighborhood. She was a young woman, and she was to be confined. It might have been Ernestine. I've sent Will out there, and I came by to see if you were here"—to his wife—"and to wait here for a phone call."

The telephone shrilled, and the sound leaped through them all. Mrs. Bennett picked up the receiver with a trembling hand, while they all watched her in straining silence.

"Yes—yes—this is Mrs. Bennett. . . . Oh, he did. . . . Oh, thank you. . . . Her sister is here. I'll tell them."

She turned from the phone.

"It's the hospital office. Will has identified Ernestine, and he's there with her. Oh, Mr. Hamilton—you found her!"

"Get your hat," said Loring. "And come with us. Never mind your keys, Lillian. We'll take the taxi."

Advises Use of Slogan to Overcome Dejection

Slogans are advocated as an aid to a healthy mental outlook by James D. Weinland, who considers their effect and lists a number in an article in Hygeia Magazine.

A good slogan can brighten our whole horizon, fill us with courage and be an emotional stimulus. It directs and holds the attention to a bracing thought. For instance, when a man is down in the dumps it is comforting to think that "the men who try to do something and fail are infinitely better than those who try to do nothing and succeed," or that "there are more chances and opportunities in life than we know."

There are slogans hidden away in the world's literature that fit almost any mood or desire, says Mr. Weinland. Proverbs are rich in them. Poems are jeweled with them. Each person must select the ones that mean most to him. Used at the right time the words can penetrate like a sharp dart into a mood and dissipate it. They act like a bugle call marshaling the forces of our resolution and ordering them into action.

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Air Fighter Will Take Title From Victories

For many centuries it has been the habit of men who have acquired renown in war and been rewarded therefor with the titles of chivalry to embody in those honorable titles the names of the places where their claims to distinction were acquired.

Recent instances that Americans will readily recognize are Lord Roberts of Kandahar, Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, Lord French of Ypres and so forth. Now for the first time in history a warrior has fetched a title out of the sky.

The Chevalier Willy Coppens, air attache to the Belgian embassies at London and Paris, has been authorized by the king of the Belgians to add to his family name the title "de Houthulst." It was over the Houthulst sector on the Flanders front that the Chevalier Willy Coppens de Houthulst achieved the majority of his very notable aerial victories during the World war.—The Argonaut.

Ancient Weapons of War

A rare specimen of a gun known to be at least 300 years old has been added to the collection of the Hastings (Neb.) museum. The gun is one of the earliest types of matchlocks and the barrel is more than five feet long with a bore of more than an inch. For many years this gun was a part of the famous collection of firearms owned by the duke of Austria. There are now more than 600 projectile arms in the museum collection, also about 200 swords, bayonets and other varieties of side arms.

Mentioning No Names

"It says here," remarked Mr. Grouch, "that a woman in New Orleans has a 7-foot alligator for a pet."

"Huh!" retorted his wife, "I know a woman in this town who has a 6-foot insect for a husband."

The Imperial Valley

THE Imperial valley, comprising several hundred thousand acres of land, is located in the southwest corner county of California. It is lower than the Colorado river and its climate is "bone dry"—the rain fall averaging only about four and one-half inches per annum.

It long was a barren waste where neither man nor beast could well exist and scarcely more than locally known. But, one day in 1904 the Colorado river went on a rampage, poured over the valley and into a dried-up salt bed until a lake sixty miles long and now known as the Salton sea—the bottom of which is 287 feet below sea level, was formed.

Uncle Sam went to the rescue. He made his river behave. The combat between them created nation-wide interest and thus the world learned of the Imperial valley.

The overflowing river had covered the land with silt which made a good soil. Irrigation followed. Abundant crops of alfalfa, grain and other products appeared. Now hundreds of miles of canals and ditches carry the water from the river to many thousands of these thirsting acres which required only this life-giving fluid to transform this dried-up waste into one of the outstanding valleys of the world and startle the nation with their productiveness.

Fruits, vegetables, bees, poultry, dairying and live stock followed alfalfa and grain and millions of dollars' worth of crops are produced yearly where nothing of value grew before—all because of the overflow of the river which threatened to be a disaster but turned out to be a boon in disguise.

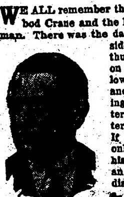
IF ICHABOD CRANE HAD A FLASHLIGHT

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association



John G. Lonsdale

WE ALL remember the story of Ichabod Crane and the headless horseman. There was the dark form by the side of the road—thundering hoofs on the Sleepy Hollow highway — and Ichabod fleeing in confused terror before this terrible monster. If Ichabod had only known that his hobgoblin was an inventive rival disguised with a pumpkin head, he would have had a good laugh and gone on with the business of vanquishing his competitor.

What Ichabod really needed was a modern flashlight. Then he would have discovered the trickery at once. Many business men need the flashlight of analysis to uncover the hobgoblins in their business and then they might sit back and laugh at their rivals who hesitate to investigate and learn the truth.

At this time, when business and banking are making strenuous efforts to have a clear vision ahead, it is especially important that the power of research and analysis be employed to their fullest extent. When these twin brothers of good management have been pressed into service in all fields, I am confident we shall see a further lessening of periods of stress. However, I believe business in general has learned the valuable lesson that any prosperity that is not leavened with a little adversity would not seem basically safe or sound.

RESERVE SYSTEM'S DIVIDENDS ANALYZED

Bankers Find Increased Payments to Member Banks Would Be Small Inducement.

Various proposals that member banks in the Federal Reserve System should participate more largely in its net earnings through an increase in the dividend rate above the present fixed 6 per cent "would be a very small financial inducement" to them, it is declared in a recent study of this subject by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. This is shown, the commission says, by a theoretical forecast, on the basis of the past six years, of additional earnings that would be disbursed to member banks during the next six years under two plans introduced in bills before the United States Senate.

"The Fletcher bill provides that Federal Reserve Bank earnings, after present 6 per cent dividends to members and completion of a 100 per cent surplus, should all be distributed as extra dividends to the stockholder banks," the report says. "If the earnings of each Federal Reserve bank were distributed among its own members there would be no extra dividends in the Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago and San Francisco districts during the next six years, but the other six Federal Reserve Banks would pay annual extras at the following rates: Richmond, 6.08 per cent; Atlanta, 4.09 per cent; St. Louis, 3.50 per cent; Minneapolis, 9.51 per cent; Kansas City, 5.48 per cent; Dallas, 4.83 per cent.

"If the earnings were pooled and paid out to all members in all districts each member would receive an average annual extra dividend of .78 per cent. Under this plan no franchise tax as now would be paid by the Federal Reserve Banks to the Federal Government.

Another Plan Analyzed

"The Glass bill would provide that, after present 6 per cent dividends, one-half the remainder should be paid to member banks as an extra dividend with the residue going to surplus and Federal Government as franchise tax. The average annual extras to members would be as follows: Boston District, 2.51 per cent; New York, .48 per cent; Philadelphia, 2.05 per cent; Cleveland, 2.09 per cent; Richmond, 3.26 per cent; Atlanta, 4.67 per cent; Chicago, 3.20 per cent; St. Louis, 2.03 per cent; Minneapolis, 4.75 per cent; Kansas City, 2.74 per cent; Dallas, 3.31 per cent; San Francisco, 1.87 per cent.

"If these extra funds were pooled the result would be an extra average annual dividend of 1.73 per cent for each member. Under this plan the system would still pay as now an annual franchise tax, amounting to $1,941,996 on the average."

By way of concrete instance, the report says, a member bank having capital and surplus of $200,000, therefore holding Federal Reserve Bank stock amounting to $6,000 on which it is receiving $360 under the present 6 per cent dividend arrangement, would with the addition of each 1 per cent to the dividend rate receive an additional income of $60 a year.

"If each member bank will figure out for itself the dollar-and-cents gain it would enjoy we are confident it will be agreed that the gains are small as against the economic disadvantages which can be pointed out," it concludes.

New Road Being Made

Mr. Huset of the Adolphson & Huset road construction company of Thief River Falls, arrived here last week with one of their drag line dredges, and commenced at once with the work of rebuilding the road from the Chas. Heinze corner west for about six miles.

This road has been in a poor condition for many years and has had many spots in it that were hard to get thru at times. By cutting down the ridge west of town, enough gravel can be found to cover practically all of the six miles of new construction and it will make a fine road for those living west and northwest of Holt. Mr. Huset has a day and night crew working on the dredge and hopes to have the job completed in about 6 weeks.

Tar Roads Center-Lined

Center-lines will be marked on about 100 miles of bituminous highways by the State Highway department this summer. The center-lining is intended largely for the safety of persons using these highways at night. Bituminous gravel roads are generally wider than the pavements, but the black surface is difficult to see at night.

There has been some difficulty in finding a paint which will adhere to the bituminous material, but the department believes it has overcome this difficulty. A bright orange which, it is hoped, will retain its visibility a long time, will be used.

Think This Over!

Out of a good many inquiries of our patrons we have found that the average pump engine will run on about 2.5 cents per hour.

Three or four hours pumping every day will keep your cream sweet, and at a difference between sweet and sour of 2 cents per pound you will save 25c on every 5 gallon can 30% cream you have in your cooler or approximately two thirds.

Try this out and let us know your results.

Church Harvest Festival

To Be Held Sunday September 7

The Nazareth Lutheran Church Harvest Festival sponsored by the Ladies Aid and the Luther League for the purpose of raising money for the local church budget, will again be held at the Hjalmer Johnson home a half mile north of Holt on Sunday, September 7.

The Ladies Aid will have charge of all the eats which they also furnish and the Luther League will take care of the Ice Cream stand and a few other arrangements.

This is an annual affair and it is hoped that every person in this community will cooperate with the church in making this Harvest Festival a big success. Several hundred people attended the doing last year and all enjoyed the day very much. We invite you one and all to come back this year and bring your friends.

The program committee is now busy lining up a very good program for the festival. They expect to have out of town speakers and singers as well as several local people who have promised to assist with the entertainment. If possible, a whole band will be organized to furnish music.

The Ladies Aid will have the menu for the day ready for publication next week, when we will also have the full program.

In the meantime you can help the church along by telling your friends about it. There will be some very delicious eats served for both the 12 o'clock dinner and the afternoon lunch.

A cordial welcome is extended to the public.

Rain Tuesday Night

The first rain in many weeks, outside of a brief shower last Thursday afternoon, fell in this territory Tuesday evening, and continued for quite a few hours. It furnished quite a relief from the dry spell, and delayed threshing very little. As far as plowing is concerned, the rain didn't help much—it rather made the ground harder than ever.

Barber Shop Moved

O. E. Sovde, local barber has moved his barber shop from the old building he occupied on Main for the past few years, to the room in the bank building between the post office and the main offices of the bank. The room which now houses the barber shop has been redecorated thruout and is one of the best business locations in town.

Mr. Sovde has added all new and modern equipment to his shop and can give the public the same service here as they get in any city. A new and complete line of all kinds of toilet goods are displayed for sale in the local shop which also is a big feature for a small town.

In addition to all this, Mr. Sovde has his shop so arranged that his customers are in a private booth while having their work done, which makes it an inviting place for the ladies as well as gentlemen.

Pay the new shop a visit and look the place over. You are all welcome at any time.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Maruska of Thief River spent Monday evening here with relatives.

Thief Lake Damned

Several farmers from the Mud Lake and Elm Lake districts and Geo. Fricker, candidate for county commissioner for this district, spent Tuesday at Warren where they attended the hearing about the State damming up the free outlet at Thief Lake. Very little opposition was voiced against this proposition by those living close to the lake, but many of the land owners up on the Moose river bottom objected to the damming because they claim that when the lake gets full any extra water will back up the river and flood them out. Let us give you a tip on this nut cracker—sell the surplus water to some one who has not gotten soaked yet. This water was sold to us once, so why not cut the price and dispose of it for good? A new ditch going south to Red Lake River in Beltrami county would look good and also provide a new highway somewhere.

Hospital Being Built

Construction work is going ahead at a rapid rate for the erection of a hundred thousand dollar hospital in Thief River Falls, the work to be completed by the first of the year. The hospital, to be known as Saint Luke's Hospital, will be three high with full basement, entirely fireproof and modern in every respect, and will have a maximum capacity of approximately 75 beds. It is being built by the St. Luke's Hospital Association of Thief River Falls, under the direction of Dr. Theo. Bratrud of Warren, who will serve as Chief of Staff.

Sure Cure

We have every reason to believe that all victims of loss of speech would be permanently cured if it could be arranged for them to make a hole in one.

Altruistic Position

We should eat more raw carrots and fewer rare beefsteaks, says a dietician, and just to prove our unselfishness we are ready to turn over all our raw carrots to him in exchange for his rare steaks.—Springfield Union.

State Lands Taxed

Following on the heels of the decision recently handed down by Judge Andrew Grindeland calling on the Minnesota Department of Rural Credits to pay special school aid taxes on land owned by it, Judge Wm. Watts ruled recently that the Department must pay full tax on all lands which it owns.

The law suit was brought to court by Polk county, but Marshall and a number of other counties also had agreed to abide by the judge's decision. A total of 248 Rural Credit farms in the county are involved, with taxes amounting to $38,000 a year.

The Department of Rural Credit at present owns about 1500 farms thruout the state, embracing 244,000 acres and involving the payment of between $150,000 and $200,000 a year in taxes.

Polk county in its action contended that the farms taken over by the bureau are not public lands and therefore are subject to taxation. This contention was upheld by Judge Watts and he returned judgement against the state accordingly.

In some school districts where the state had acquired several farms, on which no taxes have been paid, has caused too much of a tax burden on those whom have tried to hold their farms.

The next man that the courts should go after is the big land speculator who holds several thousand acres of land without paying the taxes when they are due. These land sharks let the taxes run until the county has to force them to pay up, and then, as a rule, they want a reduction on the whole sum. Make them pay it all the next time they come in, and maybe they will see where it is as well to pay when other fellows pay, instead of waiting and have to pay a lot of penalty beside the regular assessed tax.

Threshing has been progressing at a rapid rate here this fall. The hot and dry weather has been ideal for this work and the farmers expect to be thru with their threshing in about a week.

Like Service On a Limited

MODERN express trains, like the Twentieth Century Limited, are typical of this age of comfort and efficiency.

Also typical of twentieth century progress is modern banking—such as the Marshall County State Bank endeavors so earnestly to provide.

Checking accounts, savings accounts, insurance, loans, estate service—all financial matters — are handled with a dispatch, reliability, and courteous efficiency that make banking here an ever renewed comfort.

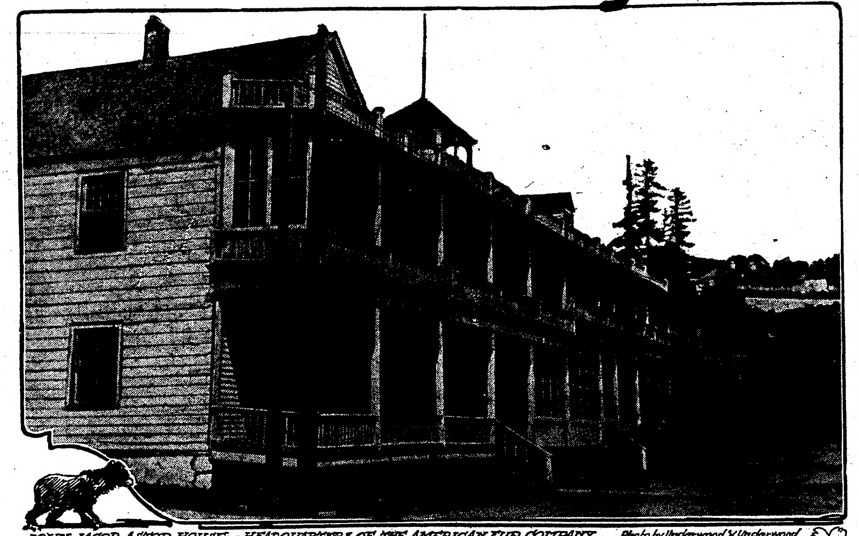
An Old Fur Trading Post Becomes Community Center



JOHN JACOB ASTOR HOUSE—HEADQUARTERS OF THE AMERICAN FUR COMPANY Photo by Underwood & Underwood

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN A building where once was established the capital of the rich fur trade of America, where an "uncrowned king" reigned over a wilderness empire peopled with thousands of Indians, French-Canadian voyageurs and American and British trappers and traders, there the members of a modern American community will soon be meeting to discuss civic affairs and to join in civic celebrations. For the John Jacob Astor house, headquarters for the American Fur company of more than a century ago, is to be saved from decay and ruin and is to become the community center of Mackinac Island, Mich. And thereby hangs the tale of a romantic last chapter which has just been added to the already romantic story of historic Mackinac.

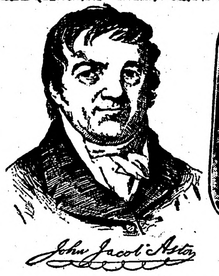
In reality the story goes back to the earliest white occupancy of North America to the time when "two leading objects of commercial gain gave birth to wide and daring enterprise in the early history of the Americas: the precious metals of the South and the rich peltries of the North." It was for the prize of these rich peltries that France and England strove mightily for more than a century. The Frenchman lost, but when the Englishman found the prize in his hands it was only to discover that instead of rivalries and jealousies, of bloody feuds and lawless competition between Frenchmen and Englishmen, as before, it was now a matter of such practices among the Englishmen themselves.

To put an end to this condition of affairs, and especially to enable the "little fellows" to hold their own in the competition with the powerful Hudson's Bay company, which operated under a royal charter granted by Charles II away back in 1670, several of the principal merchants of Montreal, historically the center of the Canadian fur trade, in 1783 entered into a partnership which became known as the Northwest company. For a time this company held lordly sway over the Great Lakes region in a manner reminiscent of the feudal barons of Europe.

The success of the Northwest company encouraged the founding of other companies and resulted in the organization of a new association of British merchants to exploit the region south of the Great Lakes, an almost untapped reservoir of wealth in peltries. The principal post or "factory" of this new company was established at historic Michilimackinac, famous as an important French settlement since 1671 and the scene of the dreadful massacre of the English garrison during Pontiac's war, from which place the new company took its name of the Mackinaw company. In the meantime the government of the new republic into which the traders of the Mackinaw company were extending their operations began to view with an unfriendly eye the growing influence which these Britons were acquiring over the Indians of the region. To counteract this influence, the federal authorities of the United States as early as 1796 sent out agents to establish rival trading houses on the frontier, all a part of the government "factory system," to supply the needs of the red men, to link their interests with the Americans rather than the British and incidentally to divert the rich fur trade into American channels.

The effort, however, was not especially successful, as is so often the case when government enterprise tries to compete with private industry. Which brings us to the first important link in the history of Mackinac, the A. F. C. and the ancient structure which now houses the community activities of a modern American municipality. In 1783, the year the Northwest company was being formed in Montreal, a citizen of the little German village of Waldorf, near Heidelberg on the banks of the Rhine, set out to join an elder brother who was living in the United States.

Arriving in New York Astor became a clerk for a fur dealer. After a while he was sent into the Iroquois country to buy from the Indians and soon he was in business for himself, first handling musical instruments, then musical instruments and furs and finally furs alone. At first he went on foot, with a heavy pack on his back, camping out or living in the lodges of the Indians. He went to Montreal and from Montreal followed the fur traders westward, pushing beyond Lake Superior into the prairie country. Industrious, prudent and thrifty the young German was soon on his way to a fortune.



John Jacob Astor

THE FUR STORAGE HOUSE

At first Astor shipped his furs to London but as soon as he discovered that China was a good market for fine peltries he embarked upon a venture into the Orient. He first chartered, then bought or built ships to carry furs to China and bring back tea until, as he said, he "had a million dollars afloat which represented a dozen vessels." When the treaty of 1795 between Great Britain and America opened up a chance for direct commercial intercourse between Canada and the United States, Astor embarked upon this trade but soon found himself balked by the power and influence of the Mackinaw company.

Knowing of the desire of the American government to curb the growing power of the Mackinaw and other British companies, Astor laid before the federal authorities a plan whereby, if he were aided and protected by the government, he would divert the whole of that trade into American channels. The authorities were sympathetic but gave him no direct aid. But with this encouragement, in 1809, he obtained a charter from the state of New York for the American Fur company with a capital of a million dollars in which he was the president and principal shareholder. Two years later he made an arrangement with some of the partners of the Northwest company by which they bought out the Mackinaw company and merged it and the American Fur company into a new association to be called the Southwest company.

Astor then conceived a magnificent scheme of laying a chain of fur posts across North America from St. Louis to the Oregon country, of establishing a fort at the mouth of the Columbia and carrying his furs direct from this place to China. But this venture, undertaken during the unsettled times on the eve of the War of 1812, was a dismal failure, the story of which is recorded in full in Washington Irving's "Astoria." After peace was concluded in 1815 Astor bought out his partners in the Southwest Fur company and re-established the American Fur company.

Mackinac became the headquarters of the A. F. C. and as such was soon the "fur capital of America;" for during the winter of 1815-16, aided by an act of congress which prohibited foreigners from trading with the Indians in the United States, Astor had the fur trade south of the Great Lakes and throughout the Mississippi valley under his control, driving out the brigades of the Northwest and Hudson's Bay companies.

The fur company continued operations from 1815 to 1834 when Mr. Astor transferred his stock and charter to Ramsey Crooks and associates. Mr. Crooks became the president and business continued as usual until 1842 when, on account of competition with the old Northwest Fur company (British) and other causes, it was obliged to assign and the American Fur company's career ended.

Even as early as the last year of the American Fur company's existence Mackinac island was a noted summer resort, especially for visitors from the southern states, and as railroads and other improved methods of transportation came into existence greater number of Americans visited the island. The A. F. C. headquarters were transformed into a hotel. As the Astor house it became one of the important hostelries on the island, but after changing ownership a number of times, during which it was remodeled and some changes made in its outside appearance, its use as a hotel was given up in recent years.

A year or so ago a troop of Girl Scouts under the leadership of Mrs. Rose Webb set about to raise a fund for the establishment of a community center. By various means they got together a small sum of money which they hoped would eventually grow into enough to allow the founding of such a center, either by purchase of a building or the construction of one. Then the suggestion was made, "Why not buy the old Astor house for that purpose?" Realizing the historical significance of the structure and its adaptability for the purpose, they approached the owner of the building and found that he was willing to sell. The small sum which the Girl Scouts had raised was used as the first payment, other contributions were made by natives of the island and residents of other cities who spend the summer at Mackinac and an association was formed which is now actively engaged in raising funds to complete the payment of the purchase price.

Meanwhile the work of rehabilitation is going forward. Partitions between the rooms in one end of the building have been torn out to make a large assembly hall for community gatherings and plans are under way to restore the building as much as possible to its original state. As the visitor of today walks through the front door of the Astor house he steps from the reality of a modern American city street into the realm of the romantic past. Where the reconstruction work is under way he can see the great beams of wood, held together by wooden pegs, in as good condition as they were when put there more than a hundred years ago. He walks over a floor made of eight-inch square hand-hewn timbers, and he sees hand-wrought strap hinges on the doors and heavy iron bars.

In one corner of the large rooms on the first floor stands a tall desk, the top of it composed of many pigeon holes. On each of these is a little strip of paper on which is written in handwriting of almost "copper plate engraving" fineness "accts. receivable," "accts. payable," "receipts" and the like. The ink is somewhat faded but the lettering is still as readable as it was in the long ago when Ramsey Crooks stood at this desk and transacted the three-million-dollar-a-year business of John Jacob Astor's American Fur company. For this desk, a placard tells you, is the very one which that famous A. F. C. "resident manager" used.

Go up the stairs—as you go, running your hand along a beautiful old walnut stair rail—and in some of the rooms you will find old furniture which would delight the eye of an antique dealer. Look out through the six-inch panes of handmade glass with which the windows are glazed and in the rear of the building you will see the vine-covered storage house where once those great bales of peltries of marten and mink, of otter and beaver, of fox and lynx and wolverine were piled "for shipment to Mr. Astor in New York." And these are only a few of the interesting survivals of the days when beaver was king, linking the historic past with the present in this building, which will be the most interesting community center in the United States when the work, which a troop of Girl Scouts started and a group of patriotic and public-spirited women are carrying on, is completed.

Love in a Garden

By EVANGELINE WEIR

(Copyright.)

IT WAS good to be in the country away from the rush of city life and its problems; just to live without thinking about it. She walked across a path into an orchard where the first apples lay thick on the ground—green apples, yellow apples with gay, rosy cheeks.

She nearly bumped into a kneeling man who was putting apples into a basket. For a second she was confused, but he offered her an apple before she had a chance to apologize for trespassing. "A Maiden Blush," he told her with a mischievous light in his eyes.

"Such an old-fashioned name," she responded. "Recalls long skirts, slim waists and huge pompadours. Do you live here?"

"I am learning to be a farmer. My lesson for the present is to pick apples for market."

Ellen Barnes walked away munching an apple.

"Pretty scene for a moving picture," she thought as she crossed the brook and stepped into the road.

It was a week before she saw him again. He was crossing the garden with a basket of apples on his shoulder.

"How do you do, student farmer," she called to him as she passed by.

"Have an apple?" he called after her. "A Maiden Blush?"

Every day Ellen Barnes passed the big garden on her way to and from to the country post office. Each time she found him working there. Sometimes he came to the fence and talked to her; sometimes he just waved his hand and continued his work. One morning he was not there when she passed and repassed. At the end of the week Ellen had to acknowledge that she missed him, missed him enough to lean over the fence and question the farmer's wife, but learned nothing by her prying.

Then one morning he was in the garden cutting roses. He waved his hand at her and asked her to stop. After a few minutes he jumped over the fence, roses in hand. "They are for you," he explained. "I'll walk down to the house with you."

"Where have you been?"

"Did you miss me, Joan?" he asked softly.

"Joan?" trying to read his face. "My name is Ellen—Ellen Barnes."

"I call you Joan."

"Why?"

"You look like Joan Dare of the 'movies.'"

"Do you know her—personally?"

"Yes—and no."

A smile crept into her eyes.

"If you continue at your present job at two dollars a day, you may be able by and by to go to Hollywood and meet her."

He shook his head. "She is very rich."

"Do you worship this lady of the 'movies,' young farmer?"

He sighed, "You do not understand."

There was a sudden tightening of Ellen's lips. She did understand.

The walk was the beginning of many walks, and Ellen was happy. She was in love with the student farmer and that fact alone should have sent her back to her own world instead of loitering near the garden.

One evening as they sat watching the rose glow of a sunset, his hand sought and held hers. A tingling joy stirred her young blood and sent the color to her pretty face. Then she was in his arms and heard his voice, soft and low as it told the old, old story. He spoke of a rose-covered cottage, a garden and an orchard. It was all so clean, simple and sweet that it brought the tears to her eyes. Love had been offered to her many times but nothing like this splendid, simple young man was giving her. She drew his head down to her breast and laid her cheek against his hair.

"Joan!" he murmured softly.

"Are you sure you're not in love with that other girl—your dream woman?" she asked him.

His arms tightened around her and his voice was determined.

"No one shall come between us—not even that other woman."

"Why should that other woman try to come between us?" she asked.

But her question was not answered for he had taken her face between his hands and was kissing her.

"Who are you, really?" she asked suspiciously.

"The farmer's wife told you."

"That you were Henry's sister's husband's second cousin's nephew."

"It is unbelievable that I have such a remarkable family tree, but it is true," he admitted. Then he laughed.

"You have known from the first that I am Joan Dare. What is the big idea, and who are you?" she said.

"Merely a scenario writer who thought he was in love with Joan Dare but now is hopelessly in love with Ellen Barnes. Joan is a glorious woman in her war paint and feathers, but Ellen in an old sport suit with a sunburned nose is the sweetest thing living. I am ready to die for Joan, but I want to live for Ellen," he told her dramatically.

"Don't waste your talent; save it for a picture," she laughed.

And they sat in an old garden in the fragrant twilight happy in having found each other at play. They had eaten an apple but they did not fear the outside world so long as they could go forth hand in hand to work, suffer or play.

St. Paul, Minn.—"I used to be as tired when I got up in the morning as when I went to bed. I had fainting spells and palpitation. Of course it was my age. I read a Lydia E. CHAPTER IX—Continued

—15—

At the hospital an interne was very businesslike.

"Her husband has identified her. Yes, he is with her now. No, you can't come in—well, only for a moment."

There lay Ernestine in the stiff, long-sleeved, hospital shirt, her hair black between her white face and the white pillow, a nurse beside her counting her respiration, Will crouching there, his face against the covers. Her eyes were opened, flushed with fever. She was talking—pleading—in delirium. Ernestine, the darling sister—in this dreadful place!

"You will all have to go," said the nurse, snapping shut her old-fashioned watch and darting a resentful look at the interne. "We cannot have anybody in this ward after hours. Mr. Todd, you will have to go."

"Ernestine," cried Lillian, and Ernestine said quickly:

"Will's coming. I tell you my name is Briceland B-r-i-c-e-l-a-n-d—I think there's more. The bus ran over me—it leaped at me—"

"She was crushed?" exclaimed Lillian, and the nurse said:

"No—she's just delirious. Please go."

"Can't we have her moved to a private room? Can't we move her?" It was Loring now.

Will had lifted his face, and he stared at Ernestine and gently smoothed her cheek, while her bright eyes turned on him.

"Papa—you must find Will—he'll worry," she urged him.

"I can't say about moving her. You'll have to see the floor doctor. She is very ill to be moved—please leave the ward now."

The nurse was definite. Training and authority were behind her, and they withdrew. Even Will had to leave her, but Ernestine made such an outcry that the nurse permitted him to come back until Loring should make arrangements to move Ernestine.

Lillian found herself in a tiny reception room furnished barely. Loring had gone to the office, Mrs. Bennett to the phone booth downstairs. For a moment Lillian thought she was going to be sick. She clung desperately to the arms of the chair. She was the only woman in the room. A black man stood near her, twisting a cloth cap in his hands, his lips moving soundlessly. There was another man, shabby, unclean, suffering in patient silence, and they were joined by a third and then a fourth vague quiet figure.

Lillian's feelings were not of pity but revulsion. She could not bear it—Ernestine here with the scum of the earth—mamma's baby—their beauty—in this place that smelled of lysol, that was as full of the sounds of sickness and suffering as purgatory is full of groans. This place was hell, it was nightmare. There came from the streets the clang of an ambulance—and a stretcher moved in the hall. Loring was beside her, beckoning.

"We are taking her to the Presbyterian hospital. They'll have a room and a nurse for her when we get there. Also a good doctor."

Lillian followed him in confusion. The ambulance she had heard was for Ernestine. The taxi threaded after it through the streets, and again there was delay. Mrs. Bennett left them to go back home. Will was with Ernestine and the stretcher. But now, at last, a small freshly painted room, as clean as a scalded dish, a high narrow bed, by an open window, an electric fan on a white dressing table, a chair or two, and a graduate nurse, capable, cool. There was a doctor, too.

Lillian stood just inside the door. The doctor was silent for a long time, examining Ernestine, reading the copy of the chart that had been sent with her.

"Uremea—and some albumen," he said as though any of them knew what he meant. "The baby will be premature—if we can get her through her confinement now swiftly, she'll be all right. When did you say she was expectant?"

Will named the date. The doctor nodded with satisfaction as though his worst fears were confirmed.

"Well, it's a nasty case," he said, "but perhaps we shall pull her through. Miss Nana"—he turned to the nurse with a rapid fire of instructions and requests and laid his coat aside. "Now—there's nothing any of you can do but give us elbow room and quiet. She's already had two convulsions. When the next comes we shall be ready for her—" The horrid word shot through Lillian's mind like a sword thrust. No—no—only idiot children—only diseased and terrible people—only the poor and helpless were so afflicted. Not Ernestine—oh, God—not Ernestine!

The doctor put them out with deliberate firmness, allowing Will to stay.

"If you go across the street, there's a nice little hotel there. Tell the clerk I sent you, and go to bed. Miss Nana will call you if there's any change, or if she's delivered. The battle is ours, now."

Lillian knew that it was as hard for Loring as it was for her to accept this dismissal and leave Will behind. Will was so futile! He would have left her in that other dreadful place.

In silence they crossed the street, registered at the hotel, and were assigned a room. They moved about in silent misery, looking out of the windows at the walls of the hospital.

"Did you know Will lost his job?"

Loring hesitated. "Yes," he said at last. "I knew it."

"But why—"

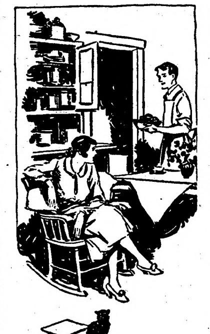
"I didn't know how Ernestine would take it, if I butted in. I thought she would let us know if she needed us."

"You know how proud she is—"

Loring moved restlessly. "I think I'll go back to the hospital. You stay here. No need for both of us to go. I'll call you if you're needed."

Weary and confused, Lillian took off her clothes, bathed in the tiny bathroom and lay down across the bed, partly dressed again. Her whole thought was strained at first toward the hospital and the possible issue of Ernestine's illness. Then her thoughts turned and turned, from Loring to Ernestine, to Will, to mamma and papa and Ernestine and back to mamma again. Mamma had allowed papa and Loring to dictate to her about Will's father. That had really separated Ernestine from them long ago. They had offered Ernestine their love and help only at the price of betrayal of her marriage. Tears came to Lillian, and eventually, tired and sad, she fell asleep.

Daylight streaming over her bed wakened her. She rose, dressed, went across to the hospital and asked for Will, wondering as she did so whether or not she should have asked for Loring.



She Sat There and Watched Him Prepare Supper.

Will came to her in the reception room, looking at her from dull heavy eyes, silent, waiting.

"How is Ernestine, Will?" she asked him softly.

"She is still very ill," he answered, and added as an afterthought: "The baby is a girl."

He was exhausted, unshaved, sad and awry. As he stood there looking vaguely about him he seemed to Lillian the most forlorn and helpless human being she had ever seen. She pitied him, but he vexed her.

"Oh, Will," she said impulsively, "you shouldn't have allowed Ernestine to have this other baby—so soon, when you weren't prepared. You should have protected her." He averted his face, but she saw his flush.

"I've got to go back upstairs," he said, and added, as he turned to the door, "Loring has already lectured me on birth control. He's left the hospital. You must have missed him."

Lillian was ashamed. She had not intended to say such a thing. It was none of their business, really. At the hotel she stopped at the desk for the key, but Loring had it. She went up in the quiet elevator. When she opened the unlocked door of their room and went in, Loring was lying back in a chair by the open window, his hat on the floor beside him, his collar and tie lying upon it. He was staring straight before him, and when Lillian came to his side he looked up at her with a piteous expression.

For a moment, standing there, a dart of such pain went through Lillian that she cried out. This was what Ernestine could do to Loring. She knew, with a gripping pang of conviction, that nothing that could ever happen to her would cause him such anguish—such rout. This was what Will meant when he said that he knew what was the matter with Loring! She fell on her knees beside him, sobbing, and laid her face upon his knee. His hand fell on her shoulders. He mistook her fear and pain.

"She'll be all right, Lillian," he whispered. "God grant she will! The doctor said that a day or two will tell. It's uremic poisoning."

He sat forward in his chair, and his clenched hand fell on one knee, while the other arm held her convulsively.

"Thank God you weren't there. Thank God you will never know how she suffered. Will fainted once, and the nurse brought me into the room. They were fighting death like a physical foe. I helped to hold her—" He gave a stifled cry and tore the buttons from his shirt as he expanded his lungs against the crushing fear that lay upon him.

"Oh, Lillian," he cried to his wife, "I don't see how she can live—after last night. The doctor thinks she will, and so does Doctor Grey. He's with her now. But I don't see how she can survive that struggle. But one thing is settled for us, for ever." He pulled her tear-wet face up from his knee, and looked at her with blazing eyes. "You and I will have to be enough. No child is worth such anguish. No life is worth—death. No children—for us."

She hid her face against him. Her arms held him close.

"I don't care, if only you will love me."

He pressed her to him but his eyes had flown to the windows of the hospital, and she felt a tremor pass through his big frame.

* * * * * * *

Ernestine stayed in the hospital until the baby was a month old. Will borrowed the money from Mr. Poole and paid the hospital bill, paid the nurse and the two doctors, the day she was to be discharged. Loring protested in vain. The removal to the expensive private hospital had been his suggestion—it was he who got the nurse, who got the two doctors; he had planned to meet all these expenses. But Will was deaf to him. He was going to pay Ernestine's hospital bill, he declared, if he had to rob a bank. What business was it of Loring's? It was Will's wife—Will's child.

Legally the debt was Todd's. There was nothing that could be done about it, but the argument increased the bad blood between the men. Ernestine wanted to go to her own home, she told Lillian. Mamma was hurrying back from Europe. The house at the lake was closed. Lillian remonstrated with Ernestine's determination to go back to the house out in Mayfair.

"But what will you do?" she asked, and her face grew red. "Will isn't even working."

"Yes, I am," said Will. "I started today. Mr. Poole is going to open an independent studio, and I am going to work for him. He's got hold of the copyrights to his old strip and we are going to syndicate it ourselves. It will bring us in a lot of money. I'm to get fifty dollars a week to begin with . . . and we'll be all right."

Lillian's dismay was increased, not diminished, by this news. The combination of Will and Mr. Poole was worse than nothing, it appeared to her.

"I don't know what mamma will say," she protested feebly, but neither Ernestine nor Will seemed to be moved by that.

It was a wonderful day when Ernestine went home. All the way home in the taxi Will held the baby in one arm and Ernestine in the other, and his face was shining with joy when at last they stood in their little kitchen, she weak and trembling in his arms. He was starved for her, but he kissed her gently, got the rocker and filled it with cushions and placed it by the open kitchen door. She sat there and watched him prepare supper.

"Will," she said, when they had eaten, and he had closed the door against the fall dusk, "you're like you used to be. You're like you were that day we met upon the street, when I first fell in love with you. Tell me, what is it?"

"The new job, I guess. I'm crazy about it, Ernestine. In the first place, to be working again is good—and to be working for John Poole.—And then, Ernestine, I think we're going to do it.—I believe we'll make a success—a big one."

His enthusiasm was boundless. While he washed the dishes he talked to her, and then they put the children to bed, and he drew Ernestine onto his knees.

"Tell me, Ernestine—it was an ungodly business—but you aren't sorry, are you? Now that you're both home again—you're glad we've got her—aren't you?"

They sat looking at the baby. Will pressed his cheek against Ernestine's shoulder.

"Tell me," he implored her.

Ernestine understood his need for assurance. He was still suffering from the humiliation Lillian and Loring had heaped on him.

"They said—I shouldn't have allowed—allowed," he exclaimed sharply at the word. "I never thought about it."

"We're married, aren't we?" asked Ernestine, and as his bright look questioned her she shook her head a little.

"That's all," she said. "That's the answer. I'm your wife—I love you—of course I'm glad."

He kissed her passionately. It seemed so long since she had been in his arms like this—close, close.

"Oh, Ernestine," he said, "I don't deserve you. The future is uncertain. But if ever a wife deserved a good husband, you do. But, sweetheart, it's hard, it's been harder for you than for me; don't think I don't know it. But it's been worth the risk, hasn't it?"

"As long as we hold together," she whispered. "As long as we love."

And he poured his kisses upon her thin flushed face.

"I'll make up to you for everything—you'll never be sorry," he told her. And she lay against him, yielding, tremulous and in love, forgetting everything else for him as she had forgotten again and again.

INDIA AND ITS PEOPLES

By Capt. L. R. Claud Robinson

ACTIVITIES OF MAHATMA GANDHI

THE demand for home rule comes principally from the western educated classes in India, who number about four and a half millions. They are the national exponents of such ideas as dominion status and responsible government, which means little to the rural masses, who constitute nearly 90 per cent of the entire population of India.

Mahatma Gandhi, a Hindu lawyer and a dominant figure among Indian nationalists, is himself partially a product of western civilization in that he was educated in England and practiced law in Durban, South Africa, from 1906 to 1914, when he returned to India. It was while in South Africa that Mr. Gandhi initiated his first passive resistance movement, designed to secure the free and unlimited entry and registration of Asiatics in the Transvaal. Riots and disturbances occurred in various parts of Natal. As a result an Indian inquiry commission was appointed, but Mr. Gandhi and his followers refused to recognize it. Nevertheless, as a consequence of the recommendations made, a settlement of the various questions at issue was arrived at.

To understand Mr. Gandhi and his attitude toward western civilization, which has proved such a puzzle to many, one should read his book entitled "Indian Home Rule." In it European medicine is singled out for special attack. He wrote of hospitals that they were "institutions for propagating sin," and of the medical profession that, far from being of real service to humanity, it was "injurious to mankind."

In his campaign against western civilization Mr. Gandhi has made machine-made goods the object of his most bitter attacks. His desire is to see the ancient spinning wheel introduced into every Indian household, but he has not found it practicable to give up the use of the railroads and automobiles, against which he has so fiercely inveighed.

No one, I think, questions Mr. Gandhi's patriotism or sincerity, nor is this lure for the primitive, with which he is possessed, peculiar to himself. Rousseau and Tolstoy both found it irresistible. The danger appears to lie in the fact that a return to elemental life must also mean a return sooner or later to elemental emotions in all their crudity. It seems unlikely that this is the real goal of the peoples of India.

AN INDIAN CAVALRY RIDING SCHOOL

I JOINED my new regiment, a crack Indian cavalry unit, at Rawal Pindi in the Punjab. I still have unpleasant memories of my first morning in the riding school. A good looking chestnut horse had been alloted to me, which my Indian sice, or groom, led into the yard of my bungalow. Not having done any serious riding for years, I was dismayed to see the animal had neither saddle nor stirrup and only a single rein. Mounting as best I could, my grave faced trooper led the way to the riding school.

Away to the right a squadron of my new regiment was executing a drill movement at the gallop. The sight of their turban-headed, khaki-clad figures, and the dull gleam of their lances, gave me a thrill of anticipation. Towering in the background lay the mighty Himalaya mountains, purple tinted in the early morning light. We approached two mounted British officers, one of whom was my new colonel and the other his adjutant. I felt strangely insignificant as I saluted.

Without comment the colonel, pointing to a mud wall jump about thirty yards away, suggested that I drop my rein, fold my arms, grip with my knees and demonstrate my riding and jumping abilities. I can frankly say that this was one of the worst moments of my life, but worse was soon to follow. My ears and neck must have been the color of beets, for I was conscious of the poor figure I cut, as striving desperately to keep my balance, and gripping frantically with my knees. I made for the wall. I do not know to this day whether I or my horse reached the other side first. Suffice it to say we landed separately, and I dragged my head out of the dust to find my steed a dozen yards ahead of me, his neck craned round in my direction and a pitying look in his eye which seemed to say "we all expected that."

At my second attempt, as we rose for the jump, I learned the undoubted use of a horse's neck in an emergency. I must have been a pitiable sight for a cavalry officer, with my arms tightly clasped around my animal's neck and my legs dangling aimlessly in midair. The colonel and his adjutant had remained to watch my lamentable exhibition of horsemanship and appeared to enjoy my mortification. It may be that my horse was touched by the affectionate nature of my embrace, for at the third attempt we surmounted the obstacle without parting company.

Lettering on Bridge to Guide Air Traveler

Using a highway bridge as an airway marker is one of the latest developments in this fast-moving transportation age.

This novel use of a bridge, said to be the first instance of its kind, was brought about by citizens of Napoleon, Ohio. The bridge crosses the Maumee river and the work was done in conformity with instructions from the bureau of aeronautics, Washington.

In laying the brick, the contractor started at the north end of the bridge, using all dark brick, and later light bricks for the marking were inserted. The surplus dark bricks were then used at the south end. Asphalt was used as filler for the dark brick, while the markers were filled with a lean grout filler.

The letters are 20 feet and three inches high, and the name Napoleon is 340 feet in length. The width of the letters run four feet and three inches, thereby insuring easy visibility for the traveler in the air.—Boston Herald.

Russian Humor Tinged by Tone of Cynicism

A sense of humor serves to mitigate an appalling feeling of despair in Soviet Russia, writes Leo M. Glassman in Current History. The new codes of law and social life, the succession of leaders, the GPU, and general economic conditions are caught in satirical songs and irreverent jokes which aid in dispelling the surrounding gloom.

"Why is there such a thick wall around the Kremlin?"

"So that the scoundrels may not look through."

"From within?"

Another slant is revealed in the story of two women meeting on the street. "How are you, Marya?" asked one.

"Better than a month hence."

Or again, a trumpeter in the Red square was asked why he was blowing so hard and continually.

"I am announcing the coming of the world revolution."

"Really? Do you get much money for it?"

"No, there isn't much money in it, but then it is a permanent job."

PROFIT TO FARMER IN COW TEST WORK

Many Benefits to Owner of Dairy Herd From Membership in Association.

The easiest way known for a farm family to make from 25 per cent to 50 per cent more profit on the average dairy herd, according to the De Laval Bureau of Dairying, is to join a cow testing association. These prosperity-building organizations of local dairy farmers, of which there are more than 1,000 in 40 states, have the backing, co-operation and endorsement of the owners of 414,891 cows, every state college of agriculture and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. In these organizations every member is visited every month by the cow tester, who tabulates the month's milk yield, tests the milk and figures out the monthly butterfat production of each cow, works out balanced rations for the herd, tests the skim milk from the cream separator to see that the machine is not losing butterfat, etc.

Every dollar invested by the dairy farmer in cow-test association work usually returns from 15 to 25 times more profit than money invested in the soundest bonds on the market, states the De Laval Bureau. Directly and indirectly the benefits derived from joining a cow testing organization, the practical help and assistance and inspiration they provide makes the small yearly cost of being a member seem a mere trifle. A typical story pointing out one of the benefits of belonging to such an association is found in an item in the monthly report to the Iowa Agricultural college made by Harold Strom, tester for the Montgomery-Mills (Iowa) association.

The cream separator of one of his members broke down one day, so he took the milk over to a neighbor's to have the cream separated. To his surprise he found that the machine left .24 of 1 per cent fat in the skimmilk. The owner of this separator had produced close to 9,000 pounds of skimmilk during the month; therefore, he must have lost in the neighborhood of 20 pounds of butterfat worth nearly $10. How much better off that neighbor would have been had he spent the $10 which he lost in a single month from an inefficient separator, for joining a cow testing association which would check the efficiency of his separator every month!

There are an untold number of poorly constructed and badly worn separators on farms today that are "short-changing" their owners every time they are used. An effective method resorted to by some farmers to check the efficiency of their separators is to have five gallons from their separator reskimmed in a new separator of known standard quality. Like the neighbor in the above story, quite a lot of them are finding that they have been feeding their stock on skimmilk that is entirely too rich for their pocketbooks. Responsible concerns are glad to provide the facilities whereby the farmer may make a test of his separator and to furnish information on how a cow testing association can be organized in a community.

County Auditor Short

Discovery of shortages aggregating $4,619.25 in the game and fish funds entrusted to A. G. Lundgren, veteran Marshall county auditor, resulted in his arrest late last Wednesday afternoon and after entering a plea of guilty before Judge Wm. Watts Crookston Thursday was sentenced to serve not more than 3 years in the Minnesota State Prison at Stillwater.

Peculations in the game and fish accounts have been going on over a period of five years, the first peculations of a negligent sum being made in 1925. However, in the past three years the peculations reached large proportions and finally resulted in the check and the arrest of Mr. Lundgren.

Game and fish funds have been taken care of in separate funds, so county officials had no means of making a check on the auditor on these items. On January 1, the fund was placed under the supervision of the Public Examiner, and discrepancies in the accounts were discovered by E. A. Steenerson, special public examiner in charge of this district.

Local officials in checking over salary accounts have also discovered that Mr. Lundgren had over-drawn his salary $508.33, and this amount together with the game and fish peculations was included in the claim entered by the county to the bonding firm for payment back to the county.

Mr. Lundrgen had served the county as its auditor for nearly 24 years and was a candidate for re-election this fall. As the result of this, Oscar T. Johnson who was second in line will now be first and Levi Johnson who polled third largest vote, will have his name automatically placed on the ballot.

Lundgren who was 62 years old and the father of a family of eight children, was taken to Stillwater by Sheriff Bordewich and started his three year term last Friday.

Henry M. Hanson, official abstractor of Marshall county was appointed by the county board to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Lundgren.

Rev. and Mrs. O. J. Haukeness and family moved here this week from Thief River Falls, where they have been making their home since they came from Wisconsin.

Rev. Haukeness will have charge of the Lutheran Free Church congregations in this call which include the Ringbo and Bethlehem churches. They have rented the Ole Ellingson home and are now all settled.

The people of Holt and community welcome the family to our village.

To Hold Booster Meeting

A meeting of the Farmers and Business med of the 5'th Commessioner's District of Marshall County will be held in Holt on Monday Sept. 8th. The purpose of the meeting will be to form a "Booster Club" for the local Candidate, Geo. Fricker for County Commissioner of the 5th. District. Committees will be apppointed and a general campaign plan be outlined.

All parties interested are requested to be present and help make this a real meeting.

The biggest gathering of the year to be held in this community, is the annual church harvest festival to be held at the Hjalmer Johnson home on Sunday. A full program for the day will be found in another column of the News.

We like to mention this festival to everybody and we urge you to come and enjoy the day. Too much can't be said in appreciation for what has been done by those whom take an active part in the church work and are willing to spend their time in making the festival a success.

It required both time and effort for the ones who lined up the program and the menu for the festival. You can also help by coming out to the grounds on Saturday and fix up seats and stands.

Funeral rites for Andrew Lang of Roseau were conducted here here on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Lang, who was a pioneer of this community before moving to Roseau about 25 years ago, died ot his home there on Saturday, at the age of 62 years.

Interment was made in the local cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs L. Shaver and family who have occupied the Brita Johnson house since they moved to Holt have now purchased the Haarstad place in the south end of town and moved in there on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Udstrand and family from Minneapolis are spending a few weeks here visiting with relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Backlund took their little son to Warren on Saturday to see a doctor. The little fellow was suffering from a bad cold.

T. B. Folden, prominent farmer and secretary of the local creamery has been very sick the past week and is confined to his bed at his farm home here.

John Hagberg who is employed at carpenter work at Thief River Falls, spent Sunday with his family here.

Think This Over!

Out of a good many inquiries of our patrons we have found that the average pump engine will run on about 2.5 cents per hour.

Three or four hours pumping every day will keep your cream sweet, and at a difference between sweet and sour of 2 cents per pound you will save 25c on every 5 gallon can 30% cream you have in your cooler or approximately two thirds.

Try this out and let us know your results.

Still Going Strong

For the first half of the year 1928 the Farmers Co'op Creamery Co., Holt, manufactured 142,468 pounds of butter.

During the same period of 1929 it put out just exactly 10,000 pounds more or 152,486 pounds of butter.

The gain for the same period of 1930; tho not so big, [due to adverse climatical and market conditions; was 4,864 pounds or a total productiod of 157,332 pounds of butter.

Just watch it grow.

Several auto loads of people from here motored out to the Skomedahl park by the river on Sunday where they attended the picnic of the Sunday School children of the Nazareth Lutheran Church. At noon everyone enjoyed a picnic dinner which was followed by a devotional program by the Sunday School and a sermon by Rev. Redal.

After the program the time was spent in playing games and visiting around. The Luther League served ice cream and everyone enjoyed a very fine outing.

Threshing in this community is rapidly coming to an end. The several machines that have been doing this work are now on the home stretch. Only the flax crop remains to be threshed in many places by the end of next week.

The ideal dry weather has enabled the farmers to rush the threshing faster this fall than any other year. Crops are reported to be good all over.

This community received another rain on Sunday evening. It started with a heavy wind and some hail but not hard enough to damage any uncut crops. The two rains we have eap come too late to do any good to the early crops but it will help the pastures and potatoes as well as for the fall plowing.

Miss Lillian Mello of Big Woods came Sunday to stay at the Hans Larson home and attend high school here this year

Finds Tribe That Is Minus Religion

American Woman Spends Ten Months Among Former Cannibals.

New York.—The life and manners of a primitive Melanesian tribe on the island of New Ireland, near New Guinea, in the Pacific ocean, were described recently at the American Museum of Natural History by Dr. Hortense Powdermaker, young American anthropologist, who has just returned after a ten months' stay with the natives.

Doctor Powdermaker is the first white woman ever to visit the island and the first to make a careful study of its people. Her work was done under the auspices of the Australian National Research council, and she is now completing her report under a fellowship of the National Research council of the United States.

"The tribe I studied," said Doctor Powdermaker, "is a branch of the Melanesian race. They are black and have kinky hair, but their features are not negro. Until a short time ago they were cannibalistic. They used to have wars with neighboring tribes and eat the enemies they killed or captured. The practice was stopped a few years ago by the German government, which had made the island part of its colonial possessions. Since the war it has been part of the mandate territory under Australia.

Women and Pigs Cause Wars.

"The causes for these wars generally were women and pigs. If a neighboring tribe would steal a woman or a pig there would be war. The older natives still remember those times and refer to them as the 'good old days.' They smack their lips when they talk about it.

"The tribe has no religion of any kind, no gods nor goddesses, no temples, no heaven, hell or after life, no worship of anything. They have two totems, the eagle and the hawk, and each member of the tribe belong to one of these, technically known as 'moieties,' the totem being inherited through the mother.

"Instead of religion they have many taboos and magic. It is, for instance, a heinous offense to be in the same room with your mother-in-law or to talk to her or even look at her. You cannot talk to your sister except on business. A descendant of the hawk moiety can only marry a descendant of the eagle moiety and vice versa.

May Have Several Wives.

"A man can have several wives and sometimes a woman may have several husbands, but polygamy and polyandry cannot both occur in the same family. On the other hand, it is an accepted social custom that a woman may have lovers and a man mistresses. There is nothing clandestine about it. Some wives or husbands are jealous, while others are not, but nothing much is ever done about it. By temperament they are a gay, jolly, friendly and very simple people. You cannot talk to them in terms of abstraction.

"Their food consists of pigs, fish, roots known as 'taro,' 'yam,' a sort of sweet potato, a fruit called pawpaw, sugar cane, pineapples, bananas and coconuts. There is tobacco on the island, and children smoke at the age of three. There are no alcoholic beverages of any kind, the only drinks being water and coconut milk.

"Births, marriages and deaths are outstanding events and are made the occasion of great rituals and feasts, lasting sometimes for months. The burial ceremonies especially are very impressive.

"Men and women share the work between them. Their occupations are chiefly agricultural."

Stretch Food Dollar by Efficient Buying

Chicago.—American families are as well fed in the present depression period as they ever were in the boom days of 1929, due to efficient buying of food essentials by the nation's housewives, according to a bulletin issued here by the American Research foundation.

"Stretching the food dollar is the problem of millions of American mothers at the present time," the bulletin sets forth. "They are solving the problem by buying with an eye to the real values in the foods which go on the table three times a day."

Loses Leg Under Train, but Suffers No Pain

Fremont, Ohio.—When James Bath, sixty-one, of Bangor, Maine, was discovered lying beside a railroad track here, howling lustily after a rapidly disappearing passenger train, his finders thought him mortally hurt. Instead he was bemoaning the loss of his wooden leg. The member was sliced neatly in two, the lower end lying between the tracks.

Flying Proves Safer Than Motoring in U. S.

Washington.—Transportation by air is safer than by automobile or motorcycle at the Naval Air station, San Diego, Calif., according to statistics compiled there.

In 16 months the record of personnel on duty at the station shows 21 automobile accidents and 16 motorcycle smashes, while only 2 airplane crashes occurred. During the 16 months one death occurred from an automobile wreck and one from flying.

"LUNGS" SAVE LIVES OF 3 MOTION PICTURE "PHOTOGS"

Novel Device of Naval Lieutenant Proves Worth in Mishap on Submarine.

New London, Conn.—Three motion picture photographers, who were taking pictures of the new "lung" used by submarine crews to escape in emergencies, owe their lives to the device and the prompt action of its inventor, Lieut. C. B. Momsen.

The photographers descended with the S-4, the submersible which was salvaged after 40 men were trapped and drowned or suffocated off Provincetown, Mass., in 1927 for lack of a rescue device.

The ship was resting on the bottom. Wearing bathing suits, the men set up their sound equipment on a special platform in the aft hatch, which was partly filled with water for the experiment. The equipment included some storage batteries.

They cranked away while 10 sailors adjusted the lung and escaped through the hatch to the surface.

Then the stern of the submarine suddenly sank in the soft mud on which it was resting, and salt water covered the storage batteries. Immediately they began to generate chlorine gas.

The men began to choke, but Momsen grabbed three "lungs" and handed them out.

"I didn't say a word, nor did they," Momsen said in describing the experience. "I showed them by motions how to adjust the lungs and then we waited while the submarine was brought to the surface."

Find Pneumonia Cure in Electric Treatment

Washington.—A revolutionary medical discovery was made known here recently when authorities at St. Elizabeth's hospital announced an electrical treatment for lobar and bronchial pneumonia, so overwhelmingly positive in 200 tests that it is "virtually a specific."

Medical authorities expressed the opinion that the discovery ranks with that of smallpox vaccination and pointed out that thousands of lives can be saved annually by its use.

In lobar pneumonia cases discovered within twelve hours after infection a cure was effected in virtually every case. In cases discovered after twelve hours the percentage was slightly lower, but still very high.

The treatment, worked out by scientists at the famous government hospital for the insane here, consists in passing through the chest a very high frequency current of about 1,500,000 alternations a second, using as electrodes two tinfoil plates, one on the chest and the other on the back.

The passage of the current through the body heats the interior organs as current heats a resistance wire, and the heat effects the cure.

Drops Bundle With 52 Ears in Railway Car

Warsaw.—A short time ago a railroad conductor found a package, on one of the seats, containing 52 human ears. All Poland was astounded and horrified, thinking that a criminal of the worst type was at large in the country.

Days passed, but no man or woman reported that he or she was missing an ear or two. Crime experts, psychologists, and what not published their theories on the subject.

Then a middle-aged bewhiskered gentleman rushed into the police station and frantically demanded his ears. He acknowledged that the parcel was his, explaining that being an anatomical demonstrator he carried with him specimens of ears—made of rubber.

Robin's Eggs Only Toll in Railroad Collision

Hugoton, Kan.—J. L. Hodges, veteran engineer of the Kansas-Oklahoma railroad which boasts 22 miles and one engine, stopped his train at a station, peered at a robin's nest built on the engine and wondered when the eggs would hatch.

Officials of the road in a motor scooter were unable to see that the train had stopped because of the heavy weeds overhanging the track and hit the engine head-on. The only casualties were the robin's eggs, which were thrown from the engine by the impact.

Deer's First Trip to Civilization Is Last

Troy, N. Y.—A young buck deer's first sojourn into civilization ended in death when it was struck by an automobile here. The deer first was seen in a yard. It jumped over several fences and ran directly in front of the machine. No one knew where the deer came from.

THE HEIRLOOM EMERALD NECKLACE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

THE lazy wind crooned a murmurous tune among Jennie Tolliver's chinaberry trees and in her heart was a wistful song of borrowed happiness. Miss Jennie was living the days of her lost romance in the approaching wedding of her niece. Wouldn't the sleek head tilt and the dark eyes shine when Jennie Wrennie beheld the marvelous wedding gift of the heirloom necklace with its perfectly cut emeralds and the great center stone carved on the under side with the family crest! Why, that stone alone was worth a king's ransom!

Never a day but the necklace circled Miss Jennie's throat—a green band of living light that glowed and deepened with its owner's very pulse beats. Absently Miss Jennie reached a hand to feel it. Her heart skipped a beat. The slim fingers felt higher. The necklace was gone!

Miss Jennie stumbled to the oval mirror in the hall, her eyes round disks with the shock of her discovery. The reflection showed her column-like throat bare of its habitual adornment.

She sank weakly into a chair, ill, inert. How long she sat there Miss Jennie did not know.

A voice roused her. Mrs. Carey, the new boarder next door, stood in the hall. Miss Jennie's smile was strained.

"Excuse me, Mrs. Carey, I have just made a terrible discovery. I did not notice you. Won't you come in?" Rising with difficulty, she led her visitor into the dim parlor.

Mrs. Carey looked sympathetic. "What did you discover?"

"My necklace—I lost it today."

"Not the gorgeous green necklace I've seen on you two or three times?"

"Mrs. Carey," pride of family and tradition were in Miss Jennie's voice, "I have worn that necklace every day since I was eighteen and my mother before me, and hers before her."

Her caller's eyes widened. "It must be—very—valuable."

"Beyond price," lamented its owner, shaking her head.

"Where do you think you lost it?" questioned her visitor.

"It must have been in Atlanta. I matched a green hat to it, for the Tolliver women always dressed in harmony with the necklace. I bought the hat after shopping for my niece's trousseau."

"Well, I certainly hope you find it," sympathized her neighbor. "I'll run in again when you are not so upset."

"One thing is certain," said Miss Jennie as she addressed the portrait of the first Jennie Tolliver on the left wall after her caller had left, "Jennie Wrennie must not know until after the wedding. Not a shadow must mar her happiness."

An hour later Miss Jennie left the telephone in a high state of excitement, nor would she explain to her niece the nature of the mysterious call.

Next morning Jennie Wrennie was mystified to find that her aunt had gone to Atlanta again.

And Miss Jennie, on the mezzanine floor of a certain hotel in Atlanta, was mystified at sight of her neighbor, Mrs. Carey, in conference with a stranger about whom there was something so startlingly familiar that Miss Jennie's heart leaped. He rose at sight of her, and, approaching, asked, "You lost a necklace?"

Apparently he did not know her. It could not be Jack Thornton, after all! Somewhat breathless, her attention more on the figure of the man before her than on the lost heirloom, as he led her to the divan where Mrs. Carey sat, she declared that she had.

"Perhaps I have found it," he told her, "if you will describe it?"

Seated beside her neighbor, while the stranger drew up a chair opposite them, Miss Jennie began:

"It was a very valuable strand of perfectly matched, square emeralds with an oblong clasp set with three small diamonds. An heirloom, in fact, with the large center stone carved on the under side with the family crest, St. George and the Dragon."

Mrs. Carey, her face a study, suddenly rose to go.

"Not so fast," interfered the stranger, drawing a pair of handcuffs out of his pocket. "Since you're so fond of jewelry, you may like these."

Miss Jennie was stupified, while Mrs. Carey's face was suddenly drained of color, and, though she tried to speak, no words came.

"She advertised in an Atlanta paper for the return of your necklace—offered $200 for it, and I happened to see the ad," he explained.

"Mrs. Carey! My neighbor!" exclaimed Miss Jennie, horrified, adding after a moment, "of course, I shall not prosecute. No Tolliver lady would sit in court needlessly. After all, I have the necklace back."

Miss Jennie turned toward the stranger and the guilty woman slipped away.

"How can I thank you, sir! Of course, I shall gladly pay the reward, but even then, when I think of losing it—"

"Thank me, Jennie? Why, your joy is enough for me."

"You—you are Jack! Oh, Jack, and you made believe you didn't know me!"

"I thought I recognized the necklace as soon as I laid eyes on it. There could hardly be two alike, and I didn't want her to suspect I knew you in case she was a fraud. Of course, in her description she did not mention the carving on the under side of the central stone. Besides, Jennie, I could not bear to have a stranger spoil our first meeting after so many years."

Miss Jennie flushed happily, but her curiosity was not satisfied.

"Tell me, Jack, how did you happen to find it?"

"I know how you hate detectives, Jennie, but I happen to be one. I saw the thief as he unfastened it from your neck. You were trying on a little green hat. I almost caught him, but he got away. He dropped the necklace just as he was running out the door."

"To think of all that excitement, and I never missed it until after I got home," exclaimed Miss Jennie. Then, "Jack," she said softly, "I don't hate detectives any more. I am wiser now. How presumptuous I was to try to dictate your career. No wonder we quarreled!"

They rode back to Tennille together. Jennie Wrennie met them at the door, her shining head cocked on one side, like a bird's.

"I have brought company for tea, dear. Have Dinah lay an extra plate," smiled Miss Jennie, serenely.

That evening, when the house was closed up for the night and they were discussing plans for the coming wedding, Jennie Wrennie was brought bolt upright in bed, and then catapulted into her aunt's arms at that lady's announcement:

"I think we shall make it a double wedding, little ladybird."

Mink on Its Travels Leaves Trail of Death

Those who enjoy long hikes while reading trail signs should travel an extensive swamp or along a Michigan river and spend the day following a mink track. The mink is one of the best travelers among the animals, and his sleek coat holds a concentrated package of lean meat, bone and sinew.

Every hollow log and every hole in the ground along the mink's route is inspected by his remorseless nose and his shoebutton eyes. Nature equips him with a neck which as large as his body so he runs no danger of entering any hole from which he can not get out.

Any animal or bird which has taken shelter in a hole or log is meat for Mr. Mink. So is old drag-tail, the muskrat, when he comes into his house for air and finds that a mink has clawed his way in and is waiting for the homecoming of the builder.

Most minks which have escaped traps and hunters long enough to acquire wisdom have a regular route for their travels. They will follow the course of a stream for miles, then cross a portage to another stream, travel up that to its headwaters, and cross back through woods and fields to their starting points.

The mink is not a glutton but a killer. His victims are found usually with a portion of the neck and one shoulder eaten.

The mink's traveling gait is a hop and his trade mark in the snow is a pair of prints spaced from 18 to 24 inches apart. Occasionally he tucks his front feet up and slides down a bank, often making a slide on the creek or river bank. A little spring brook along his route makes the easiest place to entice him into a trap. A waterset in a narrow, swift flowing riffle will often pinch the toes of the smartest traveler.—Detroit News.

Typical Feminine Strategy

Dial telephones, the kind that enable you to ring up anybody you want directly without asking "Central" for the number, have brought new problems and possibilities. Leaving the receiver off the hook gives the "busy" signal to anyone trying to ring that number. Thus Walter Winchell discovers that certain girls who wish to dodge their regular boy friend for an evening, while going out with a new one for variety, simply leave their phone receiver off the hook. When the boy friend calls up he gets the "busy" signal no matter how often he tries. And she can alibi next day that she was at home all the time as evidenced by the busy telephone. The little slickers.—Capper's Weekly.

Home Run

President George L. Omwake of Ursinus college remarked at the Pennsylvania Society of New England dinner that last fall he celebrated the golden anniversary of the first day he went to school. He said that the strange part of this, however, was that he had been at school every year since. A short time ago he cited this to a member of his family, now a freshman in college, to clinch an argument.

"Huh," retorted the student, with the usual disregard of the young for parental feelings, "I don't know how anyone could be in school so long and still be so dumb."

Standing His Ground

"You have conducted several investigations?"

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, "and in every instance I am holding my own. I still know just about as much as when I started."—Washington Star.

CHAPTER X

—16—

Will Has a Vision

The firm of Poole and Todd found itself at the end of two years established beyond question. It owed its success to Will's terrific efforts. He had met and overcome one after another of their natural foes: Mr. Poole's idleness and intemperance. By a kind of fierce affection he had dominated and controlled the old man and kept him working. The profits were divided, after he had his fifty a week, and Poole his hundred. And out of his share of the profits, Will repaid his partner for the loan for Ernestine's hospital bill. He repaid him the exact half of the amount Poole had sunk into the business at the beginning.

And after two years he found himself face to face with the one enemy he could not conquer. Ernestine noticed that he grew thin and pale, that fall that the baby, Elaine, was two.

"What is it, Will?" she asked him. "I thought everything was fine now."

"It's Poole," said Will. "He's not drawing—he's boozing, but, of course, that's not new. Only—he's lost interest."

"What do you mean, Will?"

He seemed reluctant to put his thought into crude words.

"He's failing—his health. His eyes are bad."

"You mean—he's old?"

"Yes," said Will. "That's what I mean. He can't help it—poor devil—he struggles against it—but it's showing on him."

"But, Will, what are you doing?"

"Why, I'm managing—but that's all. When I can get him to help, we work together. We've got the strip all planned out for another year, the general sequence of things. But I don't feel that I can do Poole's stuff. My own ideas would be different. I can do the drawings well enough—nobody would notice, probably—but—"

"You don't want to go on—without him?"

"The stuff is his, Ernestine. I don't want to—there's something fundamentally wrong—even when I'm his partner, and all. For a while, as a makeshift, I can go ahead, and take care of the mechanics of it, and do the conversation—but actually, we haven't any business at all. We only have him—and when he's gone—"

Will sighed, and then squared his shoulders.

"Well—here's hoping," he said, and grinned at her. "I guess the old boat will sail another season. You see—it's hard for me to crowd him, Ernestine. He is old, and his eyes are about gone, and he hangs on me—it's like making a sick old horse pull in the harness—for us. Of course, it's for him, too, but it is really for us. We are the ones that will enjoy the money—not him. I find myself soft with him."

"I know." She understood this exactly, and her young face was troubled.

She was blooming again with beauty and vitality. She had been a lovely bud but now she was in flower—in her middle twenties—young with beauty and grace, but with poise now, too, and a strong sense of accomplishment. She had background now of a new kind—not the background of parents and school and a fine home, but the background of effort and self-control.

"I'll take Peter," she said. "You can look after Elaine."

She was going to Lillian's, to see mamma who was home from New York for another visit.

Will watched the family away, Elaine perched on his arm. Elaine was happy with her father, and they made a game of supper. Now, at two, she was beginning to be a bonny baby. They had had a long struggle with her. But at last her heart was beginning to beat a rhythmic tune—a healthy organ instead of an undeveloped heart in an undeveloped body. It almost seemed that they could breathe again.

After the little girl was sleeping Will sat beside her, smoking and watching her—dreaming those things a father dreams for his little daughter. The daylight was going, and the last of the light seemed to gather in an iridescence about the baby's face. Suddenly Will was shot through with an emotion more powerful than anything he had ever felt. For just an instant the baby face seemed the only thing in the world—the lashes down in a smudge against her cheek—he saw not flesh, but color—not bony structure, but pure line—idea—

He stared at her, and saw not the child but her picture. In that moment he sensed the true identity of her being, as one hears in astonishment clear tone and harmony where there is no sound. He was profoundly disturbed. Why, he could paint her—this was new—this feeling; he had not felt like this before, not even when he daubed so constantly in colors as a child. He had never felt this; he could paint her; he knew that he could.

* * * * * * *

During the whole month of January Mr. Poole did not draw a line. He came to the office and sat there, but Will could not get him to work, and found himself incapable of much arguing.

Early in February he said to Will one day, "This is my birthday."

"It is?"

"Yes—I'm sixty-five—but I feel ninety-five. Will, I'm through."

"You're through?"

"Yes; I'll never draw another line. I can't work any more."

There was no questioning the sincerity of his tone. Will found himself accepting this statement as true. Mr. Poole was through. It would be idle to argue or to cajole him.

"Well," he said after a little, "this is the end of Poole and Todd, then."

"Yes," answered his partner heavily, "it's the end."

After a few minutes of silence, Will got up and began to pack away the drawing boards, to sort out pencils, rack up the stiff cardboard sketches and set the office in order.

"I'd like to go to Florida—where it's warm," said Poole dreamily. "I've been cold for months."

Will looked at him queerly. He felt sad. The old man was, in his own eyes, a failure. He did not feel, nor was he warmed by, the praise or the recognition of others. Long afterward Will felt that in that moment he had known the cold and clammy breath of death. The death of activity, of hope; the yielding of some long-loved and never-forgotten dream.

"Let's have a party at Pastano's tonight. Mostane's in town—and McDermott would come. Do you think Ernestine would be my guest—at Pastano's?"

"I think so, John. She'd do most anything for you."

"Ernestine"—the old man seemed to wander—he paused a long time, and looked at Will with a faint shining of the old intelligence in his face. "Will, put those d—d pasteboards down and come here—I want to tell you something. It was Loring Hamilton that had you fired from the Sun. He had Wiston's affairs in his hands—they were thicker than anyone knew, and Wiston had reason to please Loring. Wiston got tight one night and told it. And lost his job for it. McDermott will be friendly to you, if you take any work to him."

"Don't worry about me, John."

"I'm not worrying, you young devil. I want to tell you, though, about Loring. Watch out for him. He's got power now, in a way. He's going to London next year for Pastano. He's the prince of the bootleggers now. Pastano is using him recklessly. He doesn't give a d—n for Loring—will probably ruin him in the end. But Pastano does care about you—and about Ernestine."

"What Loring does is nothing to me. Like most mean things, it worked out for the best. I mean—you can't do a dirty trick as easily as you think. I've come farther this way than if I had stayed on the Sun."

The old man left to go and make arrangements for his party, and Will, after a brief telephone conversation with Ernestine, pitched into the files. It was late afternoon when he went home and as he went he was turning over in his mind the possibilities for the future. His enthusiasm had gripped a new idea. Ernestine would not like this. But he could do well for himself. He could!

"After all," he said to himself, swinging along among the small tidy houses, "after all, I was in danger of becoming a copyist. I've learned all that Poole can teach me. It's time for me to work alone—to develop my own ideas."

Ernestine was dressing, and giving instructions to the neighbor girl who was to stay with the children.

"What do you think, Will? Shall I wear my red dress? I thought I would never go to Pastano's again. It's years, though, since we went, and I don't mind going a bit. Will, you aren't listening to me. I've been so vexed with Peter. He's had two whippings, and needed a third. He's getting too big for me to spank any more. I wish you'd take a little paddle to him."

Will stood in amazement in the middle of the bedroom, his tie in his hands, looking back at the bright reel of memory—himself and Ernestine walking on Clark street in a late snow—going into Pastano's. How his heart had burned that night at Loring and Lillian—at all of them stirring Ernestine against him. Why had he cared? He didn't care now. He was singularly unmoved by the pronouncement that Loring had forced Wiston's hand, and Wiston had seized the first excuse to dismiss him. He realized with a shock that his resentment against Loring had always been personal—from the time he had been a little boy dragging a brace, and Loring had been a big boy, strong and robust and always teasing Ernestine and pulling at her hair. It was because Loring had despised him—not because of Ernestine. It had been Loring's strength and hardness that he had hated, not Loring's attention to his wife. How strange to think that his jealousy had been for himself and not for her. His self-esteem had suffered, not his love.

He became conscious of Ernestine's voice, querulous with Peter who protested against being put to bed. Ernestine ought not take that annoyed, vexed tone with the boy. He realized that he had heard her speak so to Peter frequently, of late. If Peter were naughty he should be punished, not hectored. Will took the boy from his mother.

"Go and get dressed," he said to her in a tone of command which astonished her. "You're always scolding the kid about something. Ever since Elaine came he's in trouble. You can't expect a healthy boy to go on tiptoe all his life because he has a sick sister. Go on and dress, and I'll take care of him. Be quiet, Peter, or I'll punish you. Not another word."

"He's just like you, and your family," Will told Ernestine. "He is willful and energetic and intelligent and strong. He wants his own way. Instead of dealing with him firmly you quarrel with him. You should not permit him the equality of an argument, and I want you to stop it, Ernestine."

Recollections of a dozen times when Will had been high-handed with her rushed over Ernestine.

"So you don't allow the Bricelands equality?" she asked in a cold rage, finding it difficult to take correction from him.

"It's just as well for us to understand one thing at a time without going into another," answered Will calmly. "If I think you are taking the wrong tone with Peter, I'll say so. It's my right."

They left the house and walked to the car line in silence. They sat beside each other in the car, they walked toward Pastano's, together in flesh, remote in spirit. The strong satisfaction of inner activity shone on Will's face, and it was like a declaration of war to Ernestine. Her anger grew until she could not remember when she had burned with such resentment.

She was excessively courteous to every one at the dinner party. John Poole told her of his plans for Florida, of the end of his agreement with Will. Ernestine was astonished.

"Why didn't you tell me?" she demanded, turning to Will, and he answered her:

"We didn't have a chance to talk."

Ernestine felt that Pastano's was bad medicine for her. She was unhappy again.

At home, later, she spoke to Will somewhat timidly.

"Are we going to be enemies, Will? So many married people are foes—bitter, unforgiving. Lillian and Loring are in continual conflict. He must dominate her every move. He's the one to say where they will go, what they will eat, whether or not they will have children. I'm willing to accept what you said about Peter—only, let's keep our unity."

"You know I will never love anyone but you, Ernestine," he said impatiently, "but I've got a big job on my hands now. Don't be neurotic. I've got to swing this thing, and you mustn't be emotional if my mind is on my job instead of on sentimentalities. Anyhow, what are you talking about? Nothing's changed."

She was silent. As he sat on the edge of the bed smoking, she finally closed her eyes against his immobility, turned her head on her pillow and tried to sleep, but burning tears slid underneath the lids.

How Term "Thirty" Came to Symbolize Ending

Charles Payne Smith gave the following information in the Typographical Journal regarding the origin of "30" as used by newspaper men and telegraphers: "The first press association organized in Civil war times was composed largely of morning papers published near the eastern seaboard. Each paper sent into the central office items of local interest, which were there edited and telegraphed to all members. It happened that the first message sent to the association totaled 30 words and this figure, with the words 'Good night' and the signature of the sender, was placed at the bottom of the sheet by the operator. At that time piecework was the rule on all papers. The daily grist was usually set up, corrected and in the forms by 10 o'clock, but the compositors were compelled to wait around at their own expense until the foreman announced that '30' was in. So '30' became a byword among printers, symbolizing the end."

INDIA AND ITS PEOPLES

By Capt. L. R. Claud Robinson

A NARROW ESCAPE

THE day the riots broke out in Amritza, in 1918, I happened to be making an inspection of a government fodder factory, one of the many I was responsible for in the Punjab which were engaged in pressing up hay into bales for dispatch to the armies in Mesopotamia and Palestine. As ill luck would have it, the first place visited by the mob of several thousand Indians who gathered intent on the destruction of the white man or his property, was this particular factory.

Fortunately a wall eight or more feet high surrounded the place, and my friendly Indian contractor, as the first sounds of the approaching babel reached our ears, quickly locked and bolted the double entrance gates. Then, greatly agitated, he informed me of the likelihood of attack and the probability of my rapidly approaching doom. Calling one of his coolie laborers, he instructed him to place a ladder against the wall opposite the entrance, and pointed this out to me as my only means of escape and begged me to avail myself of it immediately. I was thankful enough for the precautions he was taking for my welfare, as it prevented the necessity of having to make my own arrangements for possible flight and thus displaying an uneasiness which I was certainly beginning to feel.

I did not at this time know the fanaticism or ruthlessness of an Indian mob, or it is likely I might have decided to leave there and then. I was armed, however, and a good runner, and I felt sure that if my six-shooter proved of no avail, I could easily make my escape. Meanwhile the uproar of the approaching mob had increased until we could hardly hear ourselves speak. There was something inhuman and unearthly in those thousands of wildly clamoring voices in which passion and lack of all restraint were given free play. I instructed my loyal contractor, Gopal Das, that if any effort was made to force an entrance, he was to attempt to make himself heard and tell them that the property was his and not the government's.

It was probably only a matter of seconds, though it seemed at the time minutes, after my giving these instructions, that the tumult reached a deafening roar, followed by loud clattering on the gates and demands for entrance. For fully ten minutes Gopal Das attempted to make himself heard. I stood beside him and heard his appeals and his repeated cries of "Byee-Byee, kai apke byee ki bola"—Brothers, brothers, it is your brother who speaks. At length the din subsided sufficiently for his voice to be heard. He told them that the property was his own, that no Sahib was within the walls, and implored them to leave him in peace. So eventually they moved on.

I have in my possession letters from my good friend Gopal Das. I believe if necessary he would have given his life for me that day.

WHAT SHALL WE EAT?

IN SOME parts of India the game is so plentiful that one is rarely reduced to experimenting with strange diet. I once dined off young monkey, which is something like rabbit but immeasurably superior to it.

My regiment was stationed in Baluchistan for six months. The whole country is outside the monsoon area, making it arid and unproductive, consequently little game is to be met with. We lived for the most part on a monotonous diet of goat's meat, and I remember what a luxury it seemed, when one of the colonel's polo ponies broke a leg and had to be destroyed, to have something on the menu which proved a reasonable substitute for roast beef. Hunting in the region of the Himalaya mountains I have lived for some time on bear meat.

I have always entertained the greatest respect for the French chef, who is indeed without an equal in the exercise of culinary skill. It requires a little practice to recognize at once the difference between commonly edible animals and those which one eats in emergency, if they are all prepared with equal care and delicacy. I knew a man in Ceylon, camping out with his dogs, and depending solely upon their exertion, who succeeded, thanks to the ingenuity of his French cook, in giving some American tourists who paid him a visit a most varied menu. There was ris de veau, filet de boeuf, poulet saute and I don't know what else besides. It was some time before his guests discovered that under these high sounding names they were eating various preparations of elk.

In India, where pea-fowl are sacred, they are perpetually offering the most tantalizing shots to the sportsman, which out of respect to the feelings of the natives he rarely avails himself of. I once, however, took a chance shot with a rifle at a distant flock of them on the wing, and much to my surprise brought down a splendid bird—at least he was to look at, but proved rather tough to eat, for he was an old cock. I suppose this was just retribution, and I never shot another.

Gifted Chinese Artist Scorns Use of Brushes

We sometimes see an artist with long, tapering fingers, and we are reminded of the expression "artistic hands." In China there is a man who not only possesses artistic fingers, but who actually uses these fingers in the paintings he does.

Kwei Teng, a Chinese artist, scorns brushes and ordinary drawing tools—his hands provide him with everything he needs. With his nails he draws his pictures, and then with his sensitive fingertips he puts on the required colors!

The work of this strange artist was recently exhibited in New York, and met with great admiration—tempered with a goodly amount of curiosity! People found it difficult to believe that good results could be obtained by such primitive methods, but they came away from the exhibition entirely converted.—Montreal Family Herald.

Pictures for Public

While the French government is endeavoring to arouse interest in the natural features and beauties of the country by printing views of the more interesting sights, the tramway companies are trying to improve the mental equipment of their passengers by printing the portraits of celebrated characters of French history upon the tickets which are issued to riders. The faces of Turgot, Lamartine, Michelet and Victor Hugo are among those appearing upon the tickets, and it is supposed that the passenger will be spurred on to improving his mental equipment by contemplating the portraits.

Government Films Abroad

Uncle Sam's own official movie industry seems to be reaching considerable proportions. The Department of Agriculture films now cover 250 subjects, and are beginning to be in fairly strong demand from foreign governments. The government of Uruguay, for instance, recently ordered 136 copies of official films, while other countries buying the films included Mexico, Cuba, Nicaragua, Haiti, Colombia, Peru, Argentina, Brazil, Dominion of Canada, South Africa, New South Wales, Belgium, Holland, Japan, Turkey, Germany and Soviet Union.

Mirrors on Golf Club

Sir James Henderson, British scientist, faced with the usual troubles of the golfer, invented a club whose head contained two mirrors to aid him in perfecting his form, and the device has proved so successful that it is being placed on the market in England, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. When the head is placed against the ball the mirrors reflect the light from a lamp set beside the ball. Unless the club is in correct position the light is not reflected from both mirrors.

Manganese Boon to Steel

The steel industry takes approximately 95 per cent of all the manganese consumed in this country. The percentage of the metal which goes into the steel varies from around 1 per cent to as high as 12 per cent in steels in which particular hardness is desired. Manganese has long been used in removing oxygen from molten steel, but it is only of late years that its value as a hardening agent has been realized.—Washington Star.

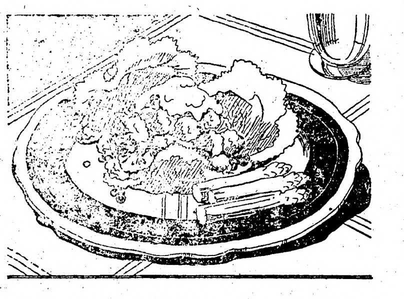
Perennial Peas



PEAS are a most attractive food at any season of the year, but when they don their summer dresses they are irresistible. Do you know some of the new ways to dress up peas so that they will be flavorful as well as fashionable? In salads or meatless roasts they are an excellent combination and very much in vogue. Here are some summer style suggestions:

You'll Like These

Pea, Cheese and Nut Salad: Drain two cups of peas and marinate in one-fourth cup of French dressing for at least one hour. Drain. Add one-half cup of diced American cheese and one-half cup of chopped nuts; mix with the mayonnaise and serve on lettuce.

Pea and Walnut Roast: Mix lightly together one and one-half cups of pea pulp, one cup of soft bread crumbs, one-half cup of chopped walnuts, one-fourth cup of butter, two-thirds cup of canned tomato soup, one beaten egg, and season with salt, pepper and onion juice. Place in a buttered baking dish, or loaf pan, and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 30 to 45 minutes, or until set and brown. Serve with hot canned tomato soup, undiluted.

Cauliflower and Pea Salad: Boil two cups of cooked cauliflowerlets until tender but not mushy. Keep the flowerlets whole and distinct. Marinate separately the cauliflowerlets, one cup of canned peas and one can of asparagus tips. Do this thoroughly. Then toss lightly together the peas and cauliflower, and pile on lettuce. Arrange the asparagus tips around the edge and garnish with mayonnaise.*

Harry Barhals Dead

Funeral services were conducted at the Rindal church and cemetery last Sunday afternoon for Harry Barhals, a young man who has been making his home on the farm of his grandmother Mrs. Molly Barhals four miles north of Rosewood, since last April when he arrived here from Montana in failing health. Death was caused by internal complications and a failing heart. He has been sickly for a long time and at a sudden turn to the worse a week ago last Sunday he was taken to the Warren hospital where he lingered until 7 o'clock on Tuesday evening, the 2nd of September.

Deceased was born on the same farm where he has this summer been making his home on Aug. 6 1902, his mother now Mrs. Fred Johnson being a resident of Glasgow, Montana, and where Harry has been making his home for several years and part of the time serving as a janitor at a hospital there. He grew to manhood at this place, received a common school education at the Busy Bee district and was confirmed before Rev. Aug. Bredeson at the Rindal church. In the summer of 1927 he was married to Fern Brace of Winger, who survives together with a little two year old son Rolland. The funeral was one of saddest in the community. His mother was present from Montana and a large gathering of other friends and relatives. Friends in the community thru popular subscription presented Mrs. Barhals with a sum of money just previous to the funeral.

Booster Club Organized

The business men of Holt and several farmers from this community met here on Monday evening with Geo. Fricker, candidate for county commissioner from the 5th district and discussed politics and other matters of the day.

They formed a "Fricker for County Commisioner Booster Club," with John P. Augustine, prominent dairy farmer from Excell Twp., as chairman of the Club, and H. Moberg and H. O. Hanson as vice-chairman.

Mr. Fricker has not been asked by the "Booster Club" to work for any certain project in this end of the district but, if elected, he will work for the best interest of the taxpayers throughout the whole district.

Mr. Fricker is well qualified for the job he seeks, and he assured all those who attended the meeting that he would work for what was right as a county commissioner. At the June primaries he polled the largest vote of the four candidates in the field.

T. H. 32 Patrolled

Headquarters of the Northwestern Minnesota Highway patrol is now established in the city auditorium at Thief River Falls.

Two members of the motorized state police force arrived there the 1st of September. The territory covered by the local patrol will extend from East Grand Forks east to Bagley and will include all highways to the north from the Dakota line as far east as Baudette.

We understand that these men have already visited our community and jerked up a few fellows whom were careless about their license and lights.

Harvest Festival Was Big Success

The Nazareth Lutheran Church Harvest Festival held at the Hjalmer Johnson home on Sunday was a big success. The big program rendered by local and out of town people was enjoyed very mnch by all who attended the Festival.

Not only local folks come to enjoy the program and dinner at these annual festivals but also several people from our neighboring villages and cities.

In behalf of those who sponsored the festival we wish to thank you one and all for coming here Sunday and invite you to come back next year. We also wish to thank those who made cash donations, those who helped to haul material and those who otherwise made the day a success

The net proceeds of the day were $84.62 which was sent to apply on the church budget for this year, for which purpose it was raised.

Illiterates Inefficient

That there is a direct connection between illiteracy and the inefficiency of laborers has been revealed by recent research. Illiterates often are incapable of being taught to operate labor-saving machinery, it was found.

Oil Station Looted

Two men slugged David Evenson, attendant, with a wrench, and robbed the Standaad Oil Co. filling station at Thief River Falls of $250 and escaped before Evenson could regain consciousness.

The attendant had just opened the station, located opposite the municipal auditorium in the heart of the city's business section, for the day when the pair drove up to purchase gasoline at about 6:30 A. M.

Opening a safe within the station to obtain change for a large bill given him by the bandits, Evenson who is about 25 years old, turned his back toward the customers and after he had opened the vault was struck a heavy blow on the head with a wrench.

When he regained consciousness, the men had fled but he did not know in what direction. After estimating the loss, he notified authorities, but was unable to give any description of the robbers. The drove a Model T Ford touring car.

Recently robbers have pulled off jobs like the one mentioned above, at the Standard Oil Co. stations in Fargo and Crookston.

Duck Season Opens

Duck and goose season in the state of Minnesota opens next Tuesday, September 16th and all hunters should now acquaint themselves with the laws regarding same. Game Wardens in this district are giving hunters timely advice and asks that each hunter give the Game and Fish Department some cooperation.

The Warden states that first each hunter should procure proper hunting license and that this must be carried on hunter's person, that law provides that all protected birds must be taken in the day time with a gun not larger than a ten gauge fired from the shoulder. Ducks and geese may be shot one half hour before sunrise but not after sundown, and guns carried in cars should be unloaded and taken apart and put in a case.

Permanent blinds may be constructed and used on land to conceal hunter, but no artificial blinds or sink boxes shall be used in water, except that it is permissible where there is a natural growth of grass or weeds to construct a stationery temporary blind to further conceal a boat or canoe, however no shooting shall be done from power or sailboat and no ducks or geese shall be shot from open water, except that it is permissible to shoot crippled birds from a rowboat or canoe.

Daily limit of ducks is 12 and limit on geese is 5, and not more than 36 ducks may be had in possession at any one time, and season limit on ducks is 120.

Any number of artificial decoys may be used, but not more than six live decoys may be used at any one blind. Owing to the dryness of the season each hunter is asked to be exceptionally careful of camp fires, cigarettes, and matches, to extinguish any small fire found and to report any others to nearest Forest officer.

THE FIRST CORN HARVEST OF 1930

Down in South Texas, the corn is ripe. South Texas farmers are flocking to fields where a new machine, a corn combine, is working.

Hundreds of farmers have viewed the machine, a new development in corn harvesting equipment. After completing 200 acres on the Henry W. Keller farm, near LaCosta, Tex., where the first demonstration was held, the machine was moved to the Emil Mangold farm a few miles away.

The cost on the Keller farm was a little less than 3 cents a bushel. On the Mangold farm, close account was kept on the first two and one-half acres. It showed a cost of 2.68 cents a bushel or $1.11 an acre.

The Mangold corn was six to ten feet high, and heavy.

The corn combine, a product of the Gleaner Combine Harvester Corporation, Independence, Mo., goes into a field of standing corn, cuts the stalks, shells the ears and cleans the corn all in one operation. It moves through the field at about 2½ miles an hour, doing twenty acres of corn in a normal day's work. It accomplishes in days what requires weeks or even months by the old method.

The manufacturer plans to stage a series of demonstrations throughout the corn belt this fall.

Will was only slightly aware of her weeping. He seemed to have entered into a new and stimulating plane of existence. He had passed out of the role of adorer and slave for Ernestine, he thought, with some indefinable vexation at her in his heart. He felt himself a man grown now, and full of sap. A wife was only one part of the complex and fascinating business of living.

He was late at the office in the morning, as they had overslept. There was something heavy against the door, so that he could scarcely open it, and, on entering, he almost fell over the lifeless form of John Poole.

He had come back to the office after his birthday party, and had been at work. The light still shone over his drawing board. He had died here, alone, and Will, even in that first shock, was full of the knowledge that his death had come, not alone in the night but with the loss of his gift.

Yet on the drawing board was a picture—his last. It was different from his other work. It was a bend in the stream with a great tree overhanging the water and the meadow beyond and the figures of half a dozen small boys naked and white in the sunshine, playing about the tree and on a springboard caught beneath a great root. There was in it no mockery, no satire, no clowning. It was simple, kind. Staring at it, before he went to give the alarm, Will felt sure that this work of the skilled pencil was the externalization after half a century of some remembered scene of his boyhood.

Will grieved honestly for John Poole and thought often and mysteriously about that last picture. If John Poole could draw like that, why had he never done so? The answer to this was disturbing.

Will established his rights to Poole's cartoon ideas only to find them worthless. Contracts ran out, strips piled up unused, and he found himself working against a vast indifference, more crushing, more impenetrable than that which he had fought for a place for Poole's strip. But his new inner activity carried with it such personal joy that he could not be sufficiently chagrined by the collapse of his business enterprise and the danger to his income.

CHAPTER XI

The Rift in the Lute

"I think you'd better go to Pastano's, don't you, Ernestine?" Will asked one night in June. The children sat at the supper table with them, and the heat, turning more sultry with dusk, was already stifling.

"It's one way of getting rid of us," said Ernestine, a quality of familiar bitterness in her voice.

Will made no answer for a moment, then he said, with more gentleness than had become his wont, "I think perhaps it'll be a good thing for all of us. It will give me a chance to work out some ideas here in the house alone, and it will be a rest and change for you. Anyhow, kitten, don't you think you could dispense with a little of the heavy irony? If I want you to stay in Chicago it's in the hope that you will die of the heat, and if I want you to go away, it's to rid myself of you. Let's think about only the children."

"Wrong again," said Ernestine, and laughed unhappily.

They were poor again now, and it was so hot. It was necessary for them to go either to Pastano's or to mamma's, and this fact spoiled the prospect of a summer at the lake. She wondered why she was reluctant to leave Will when they rubbed each other so raw!

It was not like it had been, that other hard time, when they were close—heart against heart, sharing every thought and feeling. For now, she was poor, but he was not. She was looking upon the face of poverty that John Poole had depicted for her years ago when she was a careless bride. But Will, either because of longer and closer acquaintance with Lack, or, more probably, because of his own secret happiness, was not dismayed—was, in fact, unfeeling.

All day long, with the front bedroom door shut, he worked in there on drawings which he would not let her see, but which he could not seem to sell. Their difficulties, her fears for the future, did not pierce him. He was intolerably good-natured and happy. Ernestine was filled with a deep despair and vexation with him that he could be so casual.

As she sat, trying to swallow a little of the food she had prepared so carefully, Ernestine saw ahead of her a long vista of the years in which she washed and ironed Will's clothes, tended to his bodily needs, for food, for comfort, for sex, and was for ever outside the circle of his reality, a person whom he saw only to forget when his glance left her. She could bear any hardship, and pain. But to do without love—this she could not bear.

"I really don't see why I shouldn't go to mamma's," she said. "All those silly old quarrels with Loring—what do they amount to? But mamma is going to have guests all summer—and you don't want me to go there."

"I don't care what you do," he said stiffly. "Only I'll never go to Lake Haven again."

"I'll go to Pastano's," she said listlessly. "I'll write tomorrow."

The day came when Pastano's big limousine with the swarthy chauffeur stood at the door for them, to take them to the train. Ernestine was admonishing the children about keeping clean, and Will put his arms about her, so practical and stern in her motherhood.

"Why are you always so sore at me?" he asked, and kissed her averted cheek. "You're so strange, and so difficult. I know it's hard for you, but I'm doing all I can."

"Are you?" she asked, and smiled in a secret annoying way.

Will's temper rose within him. "You think I'm not?"

"Did I say that?"

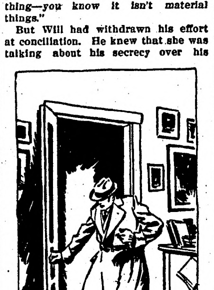
"Yes — practically — yes, you did. Your tone—"

"Oh, then I must be careful even of my tones?"

He flung his hands up in a gesture of despair, and made no further effort to woo her. After a moment she turned to him with her great tragic eyes.

"You know that I don't care how poor we are. I can do without everything—you know it isn't material things."

But Will had withdrawn his effort at conciliation. He knew that she was talking about his secrecy over his drawings. Well, he could not share with her what was so ephemeral that a stray thought in his own head destroyed it. He couldn't talk about it. All the strong instinct of self-preservation for the gift that was developing within him forbade it utterly. The processes he was trying to put upon paper were nebulous. He was acutely fearful for them. If Ernestine did not like them, they would be destroyed.



He Almost Fell Over the Lifeless Form of John Poole.

"Don't open that suitcase, Peter," said Ernestine, and they went out and got into the car, bags and all.

They met Madame Pastano and her tall, silent, handsome husband, whose expressive eyes glanced at once into Ernestine's with a penetrating look. Will went into the coach with them, kissed them all goodby, and went away.

The children waved to him from the windows, but he did not look back, hastening off through the gate, his very back eager and relieved.

Ernestine leaned back against the cushion and closed her eyes against Madame Pastano's friendly curiosity. Through everything that had happened to them they had been in love, until these last few months. Would she ever have Will again as she had had him once—his tender love, his gentle passion, his strength? Not if she kept on striking and wounding him, common sense told her. But she sighed with helplessness. In the face of her knowledge the starvation at her heart for the old love, the old confidence and affection between herself and Will, she could not control her pride, her desire for revenge. The word brought her up short. Revenge? What had she to revenge? Will had not harmed her. Bewildered, she could not understand by what steps they had come into this impasse. Yet there they were. The condition, however unreal its beginnings, was now real enough. It was beyond her knowledge, or his either, that the rift in the lute had been simultaneous with the awakening to activity in Will of a true creative gift.

CHAPTER XII

The Death Car

"If you came home again your father would make a settlement upon you. He thinks you fear that the money would destroy your marriage. But if you came home, he would do it for you."

"I wouldn't leave Will. I'm still of the same mind that money doesn't solve problems."

"But, Ernestine, think how nice it would be for you to be home again. It isn't as though you were happy. We can see that you aren't. We can all see such a change in you this summer. And another baby! Of course, it's your own affair, but Lillian and your mother would be so delighted. It's impossible for us to be friends with Will. We've tried—"

Ernestine smiled scornfully and glanced at Loring with such disdain that he flushed.

"Never mind," he said, "you don't know how we have tried. You don't know. Will doesn't appreciate you at all. I don't care what you say."

They were lying in the sand on the beach at Langley lake. Mrs. Pastano's gaudy white and green summer house reared its red roof back of them. The water was very shallow at this point so that the children could run in and out of it.

"Oh, Ernestine, if you would come home, we would be so good to you." Loring's voice implored her.

"We?" she asked, turning to look at him. "Is it that you want me back in the family circle or that you want to break up Will's home?"

"I think he is by way of breaking up his own home," he said slowly, weighing his words, moving cautiously against her loyalty to Will. "I understand that he hasn't written to you since you came down here four weeks ago. Maybe he wouldn't be sorry to be free."

Ernestine laughed at this, and he said solemnly:

"At this time such neglect must seem cruel to you."

"I wish," she exclaimed impatiently, "that people were able to ignore my so-called 'delicate condition.' After all, Will has his own problems. Let's not talk about it. Probably he hasn't written because he has no news to write about."

Loring was persistent and presently he took up the matter again from a different point of attack.

"It's wonderful what a little money can do for children. I've noticed Elaine every time I've been down this summer. She's so happy here—by the cool water—"

Ernestine wondered why she listened to him. Certainly the child had responded to the opportunities of the lake shore, the sleeping porch, the cool nights and sunny days. But not even for Elaine would she go back on Will—on her marriage.

If only Will would write to her! Her longing for some word from him was intolerable. She felt that if she did not hear from him she would leave the children behind and go to Chicago. Twice she had made all her arrangements for such a trip, but both times pride had held her back. If anything happened to him, the neighbors would know. She wrote to Mrs. Pryor once a week or so. Will wanted to be alone. He wanted the tie between them to be in abeyance. She could not go after him. Not now.

"Oh, Ernestine, my dear little sister," Loring pleaded with her, seeing her tears, being unable to suppress his feelings. "Why do you keep yourself tied to him, when he has brought you only unhappiness? You have done everything for him—everything. What have you had from your marriage but poverty and child-bearing and distress? He needs to be wakened—he doesn't realize what you have meant to him.

She was listening to him now, for the first time, and her heart trembled under the dark suggestions of his words. If she could hurt Will, as he had hurt her!

INDIA AND ITS PEOPLES

ALLIGATORS

IN CEYLON many of the rivers abound in alligators which come ashore to bask in the sun, all with their heads turned toward the water except one of them who acts as a watchman and whose snout is turned toward land. When he gives the signal of danger there is a general stampede into the river. They are so numerous that one hardly thinks them worth powder and ball, and their horny sides make it more trouble to kill them than they are worth. A friend of mine, when patrolling one of these rivers, had a very narrow escape. His companion, who was walking on the opposite bank, took a shot at an alligator right in front of him; and instantly the ball crashed into the branches of a tree under which my friend was walking. It had been deflected from the reptile's back.

There is a method of catching alligators which affords some sport to those who are indifferent to the suffering it entails. You take a live puppy and strap him on to a raft formed of two pieces of tough wood lashed in the form of a cross. You sharpen all the four points of this cross and fasten to it a hank of twine a yard long to which you attach a rope. You then float your puppy, who is of course yelping loudly, on a still pool or backwater of the stream, and tie the end of the rope to a tree. You then see that your revolver is handy, and with a half a dozen or more natives you sit under the tree and watch.

In a few minutes a pair of enormous jaws appears above the surface of the water; the puppy disappears into them, but they do not close with the facility with which they open, for the cross has stuck in the brute's throat and the strands of the hank of twine have got between his teeth. You now lay onto the rope with a will, and slowly draw the reluctant monster ashore, while he lashes the water with his tail in impotent rage. When you have got him on shore, you keep at a respectful distance and take pot shots with your revolver at his eye. If you keep on doing this long enough you will finally kill him. Those who have tried this "sport" say that the life of the unfortunate puppy can be saved more often than not.

The alligators in some of the rivers of Ceylon are so voracious and numerous that the natives, who are very fond of bathing, stake off their bathing places. From these strongholds you can safely taunt an alligator should he come and poke his nose between the bars and sniff your tempting flavor—even jabbing at him with a knife. Near the mouths of the rivers the natives think it is safe to bathe without the protection of any such device, as they believe the water is too salt for the alligators and too fresh for the sharks.

BOMBAY—A COSTLY EXPERIENCE

WHEN I first set foot in Bombay, ignorant of the East and naturally unable to speak a word of Hindustanee, I was confronted with the usual problem for the newcomer—that of selecting a "bearer" or personal servant. From among the many applicants who pestered me for employment, I chose a man who I afterwards learned was probably one of those "untouchables" or low caste Hindus, who are so much despised by the castes above them. My reasons for selecting this man were threefold: his knowledge of English seemed tolerably good, he was a convert to the Christian faith and his testimonials appeared to be highly flattering.

At that time I was ignorant of two very important facts, namely, that as a rule only low caste Hindus forsake their own religion—usually, I regret to say, with the ulterior motive of securing employment with a white man which they might not otherwise obtain, and also that testimonials are commonly bought and sold in the Indian bazaars. This fraudulent disposal of recommendations does not appear to be prevalent among men of the real servant class, Hindu or Mohammedan, who are usually unable to speak English owing to the custom of British officials of almost invariably addressing them in Hindustanee. In the circumstances it was not surprising that my newly acquired treasure should vanish on the second day after my arrival, taking with him as souvenirs of myself a gold watch which had belonged to my grandfather, an expensive outfit of tropical clothing purchased in London prior to sailing, and other items of lesser value.

Warned by this experience, I carefully selected a Mohammedan of the name of Delouah, who was unable to speak English, and despite the difficulties of communication between us, I never had cause to regret the choice, for he proved to be an admirable and loyal servant.

First impressions of India are usually formed at Bombay; and no more lovely gateway to the wonderful land to which it gives entrance could be wished for than this verdant city which encircles the blue water of its splendor harbor.

The "Principal" of the Thing

By GENEVRA COOK

(Copyright.)

WILMA DAILEY gazed pensively out of the window. Before her on her writing table lay the unanswered letter of the family. "What is the matter with Brantwood High?" they wanted to know. "Don't you like teaching? Isn't it a good school?"

With a sigh born of long hours of unaccustomed dignity, Wilma ran her fingers rebelliously through her bright hair, seized her pen, and scrawled flippantly across the white sheet, making an impudent little face as she wrote:

Dear Family:

It's not the school. It's the principal of the thing.

……

She looked again out at the elm-shaded drive which curved past this house where she had a room, past the Brantwood Arms, where he lived—Clyde Archer Rutherford, principal of Brantwood high—and circled the hill up to the high school itself. Yesterday he had walked up to school with her. Her face burned as she remembered the frozen expression on his face as she had come almost running up the street, breathing deep of the crisp October air, and had called out to him: "Hello!" And then he had come into her room after school and found her sitting on one of the front desks, singing the peppiest football song of her own college to a couple of boys on the Brantwood team!

"Miss Dailey! Some one wants you on the 'phone," called the pleasant, smooth voice of Mrs. Barker, with whom she lived.

Wilma ran eagerly down the stairs. "Yes? . . . Oh, Zip! Hello, Zip! . . . Tonight? I'd love it. . . . Purple Hills, and dancing! . . . Mhm . . . And Ann and Cricky? . . . 'Bout half an hour . . . All right . . . . Goo'-bye."

She ran singing up the stairs, two steps at a time. Anyway, tonight she wouldn't have to be a "school teacher."

At Purple Hills there was dinner and dancing. The boys seemed to know everyone, especially in the orchestra. Between the four of them, she and Zip and Ann and Cricky, they kept the "Musical Morons" busy with requests. Wilma and Zip had a new step—a clever, tricky one that Zip had got from a cousin who was on the stage—and toward the end of the evening Zip asked the orchestra to play the music for it.

Absorbed in dancing it, caught by the spell of the music, Wilma did not notice that one by one the other couples stopped dancing to watch, till there was no one else left on the floor. With the last dying note of the music, she lifted her drooped lashes, stood for a moment smiling a little, up at Zip—and suddenly aware of the breathless hush in the air—turned to see the charmed circle standing there. Her eyes wide, she drew a deep breath. Over the heads of the spell-bound crowd, she met the intent, disapproving blue eyes of Clyde Archer Rutherford, principal of Brantwood high.

All winter Wilma worked hard to live down that look in the eyes of her principal. "Of course," he had said, "it is not just the personal loss of dignity. It's the principle of the thing."

It was the night of the predress rehearsal for the May-day play. Everyone was excited, tired, merry. As the curtain fell for the last act, the senior lead slid over the footlights and began strumming on the piano. At once the cast, the strain over, were dancing hilariously across the stage. Wilma made no effort to stop them; they had worked hard; let them have a little fun now. From backstage she pulled the curtain to give them more room. Amazed and indignant came the stentorian voice of the principal from the dark of the auditorium: "Stop that dancing!" There was a petrified silence on the stage.

Clothed in a new dignity Wilma Dalley stepped from behind the scenes. She looked straight into the eyes of Clyde Archer Rutherford. "Mr. Rutherford," she said softly but clearly, "I allowed them to dance. If there is any blame, I should have it."

The principal became very red. He said sternly to the breathless cast: "You are dismissed for tonight." Most hastily they went.

It was very quiet in the auditorium. Clyde Archer Rutherford came up onto the stage and held out both his hands. "Miss Dalley—Wilma—" he said. "I—I hate to see you so—so dignified, like that. It's just a crime. You—you're so lovely just as you are!"

* * *

Wilma Dalley gazed dreamily out of the window. Before her on her writing table lay an unanswered letter of the family. "So you're going back to Brantwood!" they said. "We hoped you'd come home this year to teach. You must have changed your opinion about Brantwood, and like the school after all."

With a happy sigh Wilma picked up her pen, and wrote:

Dear Family:

It's not the school. It's the principal of the thing.

Divers Close to Sunken Millions

Working 385 Feet Deep on Ship Sunk Off Alaska in 1900.

Seattle.—Three million dollars in gold—possibly four millions—are almost within the grasp of a little band of adventurous men toiling in a salvage expedition which, if successful, will set a new record in marine annals.

Three hundred and eighty-five feet down in the sea they are working. Only the strong room of the steamship Islander, sunk 30 years ago in Stevens passage, just south of Juneau, Alaska, remains to be torn open before the salvers reach their goal.

They hope to break through the steel-plated wall within the next few weeks and lift the treasure to the surface in the triumph of man's ingenuity and perseverance over Neptune.

Working Period Brief.

The work, conducted by more than a dozen Seattle and Olympia men, has been going on since the summer of 1929, but the working period last year was brief, and the job could not be resumed until late in June this year, because of adverse weather. Their expectation is that the next month will see their job virtually completed, for they are toiling day and night at their task.

The hull of the Islander, about 235 feet long, has been explored thoroughly by the divers, pieces of baggage and the like have been brought up and the preparations for the last assault on the treasure store have been completed.

Something new in diving equipment is being used. Instead of the old-fashioned diving suits, the men are employing an ingenious device contrived and patented by two Olympia divers, Carl and Albert Wiley, after years of experimenting, thanks to which the diver has a mechanical arm to do his work while he sits comfortably in a little barrel-like cage.

He has a telephone headpiece clamped to his ear, and a mouthpiece hanging before him, so that he can communicate with his fellow workers on the scow anchored above the sunken hull. Thus instructed, the men above can swing the contraption about on the sea bottom or in the hull's interior, as the diver directs.

Seventy Lost When Ship Sank.

The incessant wash of the tides, and the voracious toredo, the tiny marine bivalve that is the plague of ship and dock, have eaten away the decks so much that access to the interior is easy, but the steel sides, though rusted and incrusted with marine growth, still hold together, except where the ship's back was broken when it hit a reef in a storm early in the morning of August 15, 1900.

Seventy lives were lost. A few were saved. The divers, prowling through the skeleton of the ship, have come upon whitened reminders of the human toll. Perhaps a score of skeletons have been found. More, doubtless, will be discovered when the ruins of the storerooms are opened.

Madrid.—The site of a prehistoric village has been uncovered outside this capital, on land purchased by the state for building a university city. Students have been intrusted with the exploration of the prehistoric site said to date from 2,000 B. C.

Kaiser's Wife Makes Trip to Homeland

Berlin, Germany.—Princess Hermina, wife of the ex-kaiser, still enjoys the freedom of republican Germany, and now and then makes pleasure trips to various resorts, visiting friends from the old monarchistic regime.

In the various Bavarian spas she holds a small court and accepts the title of "kaiserin" from her attendants as though no change had taken place. She meets few republicans.

The princess, therefore, received a slight surprise recently when she attended a production of Wedekind's "Bismark" in Berlin, in which Paul Wegener played the leading role. Wegener's performance pleased the princess greatly and she sent word back stage between acts that she would like to come back and congratulate him in person. The "courier" returned with Wegener's brief refusal, saying that he never received ladies in his dressing room during a performance, and "as a confirmed republican" he asked to be excused from receiving the princess after the performance as well.

Ruling Strikes Gyp Car Sale; Protects Buyer

Washington.—Even though the purchaser of a used automobile enters into a contract which states that the car is purchased "as is," he may recover damages in an action for deceit, according to a decision by the Massachusetts State Supreme court reported by the legal department of the American Motorists association.

Thomos J. Keefe, general manager of the motorists association, said the decision was of great importance because more than three and a half million used cars are sold annually.

The court ruled that the purchaser could recover damages if it was shown that the sale was made through misrepresentations as to the condition of the car.

Uncle Sam's New Embassy in Havana

Standing proudly in the broad Avenida de la Misiones, Havana's new "International Street," this structure now houses the United States embassy in Cuba, formerly quartered in a dark, cramped ancient section of the capital. The house is leased from the Marques de la Real Proclamacion, Spanish nobleman.

INHERITS $50,000; WILL SPEND IT ON THE GIRLS

Youth Plans Great Things After Being Named Beneficiary of Dad's Will.

Memphis, Tenn.—A nine-year-old heir to the $50,000 estate of his father claims 15 girl admirers and is "going to spend lots of money on them."

The youth, Miller Jameson, Memphis, is planning great things after being named principal beneficiary in the will of his father, Wylie Miller Jameson, literary writer, who died in New York City recently.

The will, filed for probate in New York, provided that young Jameson should receive the major portion of the $50,000 estate, but if he had died before execution of the paper Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Gene Tunney, former heavyweight boxing champion, would have received the money to "use as they see fit,' according to the stipulations of the will.

The Jameson lad was reluctant in permitting newspapers here to publish his announcement about the girl friends, for "I don't want to get in Dutch with 'em," he explained.

Likewise he plans to be independent in business. "I'd go down to the drug store and buy six boxes of torpedoes to make plenty of noise. Then I'd buy three boxes of soda water and a refrigerator and go into the soft drink business," he speculated from his bed at his home here.

Miller was sick when the joyous news reached him. He had closed his drink stand the day before because, as his mother explained it, "he was sick from drinking the excess stock."

He will enter the fourth grade when school opens this fall. "Between now and then," Miller said, "I'm gonna spend some of my time riding my bicycle, going to parties and dancing."

Reveals Ingenuity in Killing Self

Vienna.—His first six attempts to commit suicide having been foiled by friends, police and doctors, a Vienna carpenter finally succeeded in ending his life. He saturated his clothes with naphtha, set fire to his house, and then threw himself on a bayonet.

Here's an Indian Who Trusts the Paleface

Phoenix, Ariz.—At least one Indian still has faith in the honesty of the paleface.

A collection of Indian pottery, unattended by a salesman, was spread before the doors of a downtown department store here recently. A sign above the collection attested that it was genuine Hopi pottery.

"Gone to lunch. Will be back."

Suicide Note Asks Care for Pet Dog

New Orleans.—Fred H. Reese, forty-three, drug salesman of Wichita Falls, Texas, took his life with a pistol in his room at a hotel here.

He left a note to a brother, Harry, in Wichita Falls, asking him to look after his pet dog.

ALIMONY CHECK FROM RIVAL IRKS

Deserted Wife Demands Husband Pay Himself.

New York.—She doesn't like to receive her "alimony" from the woman who has supplanted her, Mrs. Helena Van Hagen, of Mt. Vernon, told Supreme Court Justice Joseph Morschauer in White Plains recently.

"Only last week my husband sent me a check for $30, and it was signed by that woman," she says in her separation suit.

The woman refered to is Ada Belle Bacon, of 49 North Eighth avenue, Mt. Vernon. Mrs. Van Hagen says her husband, Warren E. Van Hagen, chemical firm executive, is living with Mrs. Bacon and that they have been more than friendly for about ten years.

So now Mrs. Van Hagen not only wants "reasonable alimony and counsel fees," but she wants the payments to be made preferably by her husband directly and certainly not "through" Mrs. Bacon.

The Van Hagens have three children, a daughter, eighteen, and two boys, fifteen and six.

Mrs. Van Hagen submitted a letter written by her husband. It reads:

"Dear Helena: I am willing to begin over again with some one else, throw my heart and soul into my work and send you such money as I can earn, provided you are willing to give me a divorce.

"Whether we go forward or are completely ruined is up to you. I have told you what I am willing to do. If you are willing to go along in this desultory way, just doing circles, I am not, and the very best thing you can do if you wish to continue this way is to take me into court and have me put in jail and then go out and earn your own living, because I am through. WARREN."

Heart Pierced, But Man Lives for Five Months

Ansonia, Conn.—Doctors here were amazed by the case of James Bryant, husky negro brass foundry worker, who lived five months after he was shot through the heart in a street brawl.

Although he recovered apparently and returned to his grueling foundry employment, Bryant finally died of heart failure.

After he had been shot, the bullet piercing the edge of the heart, Bryant lifted his assailant over his head and dashed him to the ground. He walked three blocks before collapsing. The other man received a prison term.

Iowan Stung on Vein by Bee Dies of Poison

Sioux City, Iowa.—Stung on the wrist by a bee as he assisted carpenters with some work about his home, H. J. Dagle, forty-nine years old, died within 20 minutes and before a physician could be called.

Examination by physicians showed that the sting was directly over a vein and poison penetrated the vein and was carried directly to the heart.

Dagle some months ago fell down an elevator shaft where he was employed and his back was broken. He was still in a plaster cast at the time of his death.

Rodent Life Doesn't Like Air of Montana

Bozeman, Mont.—Due to its peculiar climate, Montana is one state in the Union that is free from rats, according to O. E. Stephl, head of the rodent control bureau at Montana State college.

Butte, he said, enjoyed the record of being the largest city in the world without a rat population.

The state nearly lost its record in 1923 and 1924, Stephl said, when a number of the rodents became sufficiently acclimated to breed and reproduce. They were quickly exterminated, however.

Goiter Is Germ Malady, Doctor Tells Conference

Paris.—The theory that goiter is a germ disease and not caused by deficiency of iodine, as asserted by physicians during the last fifty years, was advanced by Dr. E. O. Houba of Tacoma, Wash., in a speech before the first international microbiology congress here.

Doctor Houba said he had succeeded in isolating the goiter germ during experiments conducted over five years, and that he had proved that it was possible to cure cases with vaccine if caught in their early stages.

Old Short Circuit

New York.—A vacuum bottle, dropped from a subway train in the busy Times Square section, fell on a third rail and short circuited the Southbend Express system for 10 minutes.

Vets Recall Memories of Ban on "Blackjack"

Veterans who knew General Pershing when he first was called "Black Jack," back in the days of the Philippine insurrection, answered to roll call in the Baltimore War memorial recently and organized the Maryland branch of the Eighth Army Corps association.

While all of those present did not serve under the man who was to become the commander of the American troops in the World war, they recall General Pershing's famous order prohibiting the playing of the game of blackjack in his troop of the Fifth cavalry.

They told how news of the order, which was posted on the company bulletin board, spread throughout the island army and was laughed at by such men as Harbord, Summerall, Ligget and others who a few years later were to become famous in their own right.—Baltimore Sun.

Crop Rotation Ancient

The principles of soil cultivation, which are included under the term "scientific farming," were known to the farmers of the most ancient times, according to H. W. Warner, writing in the Farm Journal.

"The principle of crop rotation was known and practiced to some extent more than three thousand years ago," he says. "We find application of lime to the soil mentioned in writings dating well before the Christian era. The early white settlers of New England found the Indians fertilizing corn, and artificial fertilization with guano was practiced by the Incas in South America 20 centuries ago."

Pilots Shot From Planes

Airplane pilots and their parachutes are hurled 30 feet clear of a falling plane by a new German compressed-air gun. The device is intended to save the danger that when a pilot jumps to save himself he may foul the parachute on the 'plane. Now he simply pulls a hand-trigger, and is shot free.

The inspiration for this safety gun is said to have been obtained from a pneumatic cannon used in a Berlin stage act that hurled performers from eight to a hundred feet in the air.

Use for Old Stockings

Hundreds of American women tourists visiting Kyoto, Japan, from tourist ships in Kobe are buying back their discarded silk stockings in the form of gorgeous brocades. Brocade manufacturers recently found they could buy worn silk stockings in the United States, ship them to Japan, unravel and recondition the thread and get good silk at a cost of 22 yen a pound instead of 80 yen a pound for thread from new silk.

Added Fame to Old Device

The Lorraine cross was adopted as a shoulder-sleeve insignia of the Seventy-ninth division of the A. E. F. during the World war. The cross is described as the device which was originally the symbol of the triumph of the house of Anjou of France, through Charles the Bold, duke of Normandy, in the Fifteenth century.

She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts is carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

A LOTTERY WITHOUT A WINNER

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

(There is presented herewith the first of a series of articles exposing the wiles of sharpers who are after your money.)

W R MOREHOUSE

ALMOST unbelievable amounts are lost to the American people annually from unwise ventures. This loss, estimated at nearly one billion dollars a year, is accounted for when you take into consideration that practically all of the money "invested" in numerous fake schemes and half-baked projects is forfeited by the investors. In presenting this series of articles regarding sharp practices and various kinds of swindles we hope to prevent thousands of people from falling into the traps already set for them by irresponsible and unscrupulous promoters.

Through the use of only actual cases selected from several thousand, it is hoped to prove conclusively the futility of taking a "gambler's chance" with your savings, for as in a lottery without a winner you are bound to lose. Much of the material here used has been supplied by the Better Business Bureaus throughout the United States which are non-profit organizations serving the investor without charge and acting wholly in the public interest. Read these cases and then file them away for future reference, for sooner or later you may find yourself on the verge of "taking a leap in the dark",—of speculating with your savings as the people here told about were inveigled into doing.

A "good front" has put over more crooked deals than any other one thing. Every irresponsible promoter specializes in putting on a "good front" in his dealings with those whom he fleeces out of their savings. Whether or not he is successful is due to a large degree on how good a front he is able to put on. In motion pictures, the sets, or "props" as they are called, supply the setting for the scenes. They are used to portray things that seem large, things that seem grand and beautiful. Peer behind those sets and what do you see there? You see that the attractive fronts are supported by braces made of the cheapest, knottiest and poorest timber imaginable.

They serve their purpose in the world of make-believe, but in real life you cannot afford to buy only good fronts. Your house must have real rooms behind it, your purchases and investments real values. In the field of wild-cat financing if you peer behind the "good front" which the promoter puts on you will find that it is supported only by deception, dishonesty and fraud.

Unscrupulous persons of the "good front" type are expert actors in the role of "big brother" to inexperienced investors with money at their command. As protector and advisor to the widow and the inexperienced, which they claim to be, they are in reality wolves in sheep's clothing.

Gaining the Victim's Confidence

In personal appearance they are impressive. As conversationalists they are convincing. As students of the traits of human nature they rate high. In short, they know how to stalk their prey successfully. With Satanic cunning they fall in line with their intended victim's likes and dislikes, his viewpoint and his hobby, and when they have gained his favor and trust they grow more and more confidential, presently taking a great interest in his welfare and happiness. Before long they are offering advice and pointing out how he can better his own interests by making a new disposition of his available cash or by selling his present good securities and buying others recommended by them.

Your promoter will draw upon your imagination and paint a picture of a scheme by which you can make thousands of dollars without effort or risk,—he may describe some invention selling for an astounding sum, or depict the prospects of a fabulous mine or oil company that is going to double and treble in value over night. As a climax he may paint the picture of a vine-covered cottage which is to be yours in your old age, with its radiantly burning fire on the hearth and with all the luxuries that go with a happy home. And finally, he may paint you sitting before this fire, happy and contented—independent for life, as the result of an investment made according to his advice.

But there is a great difference between what you get and what the wild-cat promoter paints in the imagination of his victims. By the lure of easy money he leads them over the precipice of financial ruin. Instead of old-age ease and comforts there usually results poverty and privation.

The Lure of Easy Money

(The next article in this series will tell of a clever scheme practiced in many parts of the country by which the unwary are robbed of their money.)

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

New Raspberry

Plants of the new Minnesota red raspberry, developed by the fruit breeding farm of Minnesota Agriculture Experiment Station and recently christened "Chief," may be obtained in moderate quatities from a number of nurseries in the state, says W. H. Alderman, chief of the division of horticulture. A list of nurseries handling these plants may be had free by just writing the horticulture division at University Farm.

For the benefit of folks who may not be familiar with the new variety, Mr. Alderman offers the following discription: "The plants of Chief are very hardy, vigorous, productive, and excellent plant makers; canes are distinctly reddish, not quite so tall but stockier than Latham; foliage is luxuriant, leaves large of the Sunbeam type, very resistant, if not immune, to mildew, and very little affected by mosaic. The fruit is medium in size, roundish to slightly conic, bright attractive red; drupelets medium to below in size, adhering well so that berries do not crumble; flesh firm, juicy, medium sweet; quality high; season early.

"As compared to Latham, the new variety is hardier, more resistant to disease, about a week earlier in ripening, at least as productive, better in quality, but the berries are slightly smaller.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Sandberg and family and Mrs. A. E. Anderson spent Sunday visiting at the Emil Larson home near St. Hilaire.

A few more good showers of rain have visited this community the past week. Farmers claim that it is improving their fall pasture as well as plowing. Only a little flax remains to be threshed in the vicinity and this was not hurt any by the rains.

Thorval Kolden and family have moved onto the old M. T. Strom place which they have rented. Some time ago Mr. Altwood, a real estate man of Fargo purchased the Strom place and added it to other land he has joining it, which Mr. Kolden also rented.

Cows' Production Near 1929 Average in State

The average production per cow in July was practically equal to that in the same month in 1929, despite adverse pasture and weather conditions this year, Minnesota dairy herd improvement associations announced today.

The average butterfat production for all cows on test was 23.52 pounds which is about .94 of a pound below the average of 24.46 pounds for July a year ago. The 87,086 as compared with 88,110 for the corresponding period in 1929.

"Considering the adverse pasture and weather conditions this year, the slight decrease in average production per cow is evidence that testing association members know how to make up for adverse conditions thruout additional feeding and care," Ramer Leighton, in charge of dairy herd improvement associations in the state with headquarters at University farm, said. "Having the knowledge of what each cow needs as shown by the records kept, these dairymen are able to supplement poor pasture by grain feeding, according to the known production of each animal," Mr. Leighton said.

TAKING THE GUESS OUT OF BUSINESS

By JOHN G. LONSDALE
President American Bankers Association

John G. Lonsdale

BANKERS and business men err in not adopting more universally the tactics of the scientist. When the scientist wishes to fathom the mysteries of the universe or resolve things into their component parts he calls to his assistance the magnifying power of the microscope. There before him, like an open book, lie the secrets of nature which unaided eyes cannot observe.

The uncanny power of the microscope's all-seeing eye has revealed countless secrets for the material and intellectual progress of humanity. It has enabled us to study the processes of growing cells in plant and animal life, trace the causes of disease and successfully combat the ills of mankind; it has aided the engineer in his search for stronger and more serviceable materials, giving us taller, lighter and more sanitary structures, and better highways; it has disclosed the defects in steel rails and brought us an era of safer railway travel; it has added to the food supply of the nation; in fact, it has affected favorably nearly every activity of the human race, whether it apply to production, distribution or consumption, in time of peace or in time of war.

In the business and banking world, economic research and analysis serve as the microscope through which we are enabled to see basic factors more clearly and thus determine the causes of success and failure. Only recently have we begun to realize the full value of research and analysis and apply them in such a way as to eliminate the guesswork that was characteristic of industry a few years ago. "Eliminate the guess and reach success," might well be a motto for all of us.

Banking Conducting Continual Research

The American Bankers Association is daily submitting every phase and every department of banking to searching scrutiny and study, says John G. Lonsdale, president of this the world's greatest financial association. The findings of these investigations are made available to the 20,000 members of the organization for their guidance.

"It is a fine tribute to the spirit of cooperation among bankers that it is able to carry on this work," he says. "Bankers from one end of the country to the other are constantly giving freely and unselfishly of their skill and experience so that the association may produce the truly great results that are being accomplished."

Statistical information on national and state banks, savings institutions, trust companies and trust departments, clearing house groups and general banking is prepared after exhaustive inquiry and distributed for the use of all bankers. The organization's investigations have resulted in the passage of beneficial legislation, revision of banking practices and innumerable changes for a stronger and more efficient banking structure. It has set up an educational system through its affiliated American Institute of Banking, where 45,000 ambitious young bank men and women are now availing themselves of the opportunity to advance in the banking field.

"It has been well said that the American Bankers Association, exclusive of the Federal Reserve System, has been the greatest single nationwide source of stability and improved conditions for banking in the United States," Mr. Lonsdale says.

Banking Grows More Complicated

DENVER, Colo.—The increase in the technicalities of the banking business in the past dozen years was shown by a speaker before the American Institute of Banking which held its annual convention here recently when he pointed out that in 1918, when the institute last met in this city, it gave only three courses, while today it gives 10, with more subjects in preparation. At the earlier date, he said, the curriculum of the institute consisted of elementary banking, commercial and banking law, and money and banking, whereas today it consists of banking fundamentals, commercial law, negotiable instruments, standard economics, standard banking, credits, investments, trust functions, analyzing financial statements, and public speaking, while the two new subjects of bank operation and organization, and bank management are to be added.

N. S. A. News

Approximately three hundred students from fifteen Northwestern Minnesota counties have reserved rooms in the dormitories and will register for the fall term at the Norchwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, according to an announcement made by Registrar J. W. Mliner. The fall term opens September 29 and closes for the Christmas Holidays December 19, with the winter term opening January 6, and closing March 27, 1931. This makes a convenient time for the farm boys and girls to be in school, for they are at home to assist with the farm work during the spring, summer, and fall months.

Parents also appreciate the homelike dormitory supervision, and the many worth while outside activities, such as the Y. M. C. A., and Y. W. C. A., literary societies, public speaking, debate plays, glee clubs, choruses, orchestra, football, basketball, as well as the inter-school livestock and crops judging contests.

The school is equiped with three dormitories, a dining hall, three class and laboratory buildings, a fully equipped health service building, administration building, animal products building, greenhouse, and farm buildings, in addition to a new fine Physical Education building now nearing completion. To keep pace with the steady increase in enrollment, Kiehle building is being completely remodelled to provide additional library, auditorium, post office and administrative facilities.

About twenty-five students from Marshall county will take courses at the school this winter, among them is Myrtle King from Holt.

The Game and Fish Commission has sent out a circular letter to all game wardens in the state to the effect that the limit of ducks in possession this year will be only 30 instead of 36 as provided by our state laws. CHAPTER XII—Continued

—18—

The desire to wound him filled her with a burning fever. At least then he would not be able to go for weeks without remembering her. He would think of her. His attention, his desire would be hers. For an intolerable moment she yielded to the pain of this desire, then rose, wrapped her faded cotton kimono over her bathing suit and turned to face Loring. For a moment she was struck with a bright memory. His composure, his self-assurance were broken by the upthrust of some powerful emotion. She was a girl again, at her mother's house, running up the front steps, he stood at the top in her way, looking at her eagerly, his face so—alive, disturbing.

They stared at each other, remembering, caught and held together. But Ernestine thrust this clamoring thought away from her. This man was Lillian's husband. This was Jonathan Hamilton's son, her father's son-in-law and adviser. He was one of her own people.

"You haven't been kind to Will, any of you," she stammered, trying to bring the talk back to commonplace.

"He hasn't accepted our kindness," Loring answered slowly.

"It isn't only that he's proud," said Ernestine. "He's vain as well. He's different. He's entitled to his vanity."

"At any cost?" asked Loring in a low voice. "I think there are men who would consider pride too dear—for your happiness."

Ernestine's thoughts were in confusion. Loring's words came back to her, nothing but poverty and childbearing and distress. Oh, she had had more than that from Will. She had had life! But was there to be for her no permanent peace and security with Will? She doubted it. And this doubt brought another: Has my whole instinct concerning Will been false? Is the family's judgment of him correct and my own mistaken? They think him erratic, trivial, unsteady, a failure—O God in Heaven, help me—

She turned away from Loring and took the path up through the shrubs toward the lawn about the house. She stumbled along as though to get away from the weakness, the tears, the fearful doubts that assailed her.

A motor had been humming along the lake road as she advanced from the water's edge, and now abruptly the car had entered the inlet road and swung about before the house. At this instant when she became conscious of it and its arrival, the air was still filled with the grinding of brakes, while the doors of the car spilled open and it disgorged three of four men who were carrying others. One of the two men lifted from the car was either dead or dying, for a thin bright stream ran from him as they laid him on the grass.

Bright red dripped from the running board. The other man was being carried indoors, while two tied their coats together to make a stretcher for the first man lifted out. A shout brought Madame Pastano from the house. The gardener, the houseman appeared on the run.

The whole household was instantly concentrated with skilled, practiced efficiency, so quiet, so quick that Ernestine was still gaping while it was all accomplished. The hose was running furiously across the lawn. The rug was brought from the floor of the car, and thrown into the lake, with rocks on top of it. The gardener put the hose inside the car and washed the floor and the running board. Another came from the garage with a different car rug, with a different license plate which he changed in a moment, and the driver of the car moved it up a little, so that the gravel could be picked up in a shovel, and carried and thrown into the lake, the fresh spot raked together.

Now old Grandmother Pastano, an ancient dame who spoke not a word of English, came from the porch, her head wrapped in a shawl, and got into the car and sat by the window, her thick jeweled hand resting on the edge of the glass. The car turned about and, with a different driver, moved sedately back along the lake road, whence it had come—as innocent appearing a vehicle as ever rode the highway.

No one had noticed her, there at the end of the lake walk, among the carefully cut shrubs. Ernestine moved back and came to the little summer house and sat down in it, for her limbs would carry her no farther.

The dreadful efficiencies of the Pastanos had all this time increased her wrath with Will. She could not bear it for him to be in a daze, to go about with the air which had exasperated Lillian the night Elaine was born—helpless, hopeless and confused. She couldn't stand the thought that he was a failure while these foreigners were thick with success.

Ruby Pastano had power. He loved money. He had it. He was dramatic and generous with it. He wanted it to show. He loved to empty his pockets—knowing well where he might refill them. And all summer she had compared this man's magic with Will's fumbling. Deliberately she had shut her ears against stories of political corruption, against tales of graft and bribery, of Ruby Pastano who was generous with policemen. Growing strong and well again, with the children blooming under the benevolence of this man whose kindness had been more acceptable to her than the kindness of her own people, because he was Will's friend and they were not, she had nevertheless been influenced to vexation beyond measure that Pastano should be so capable and Will so futile.

Now her tears fell from her eyes in great scalding drops.

What was she, Ernestine Briceland, doing in this band of cutthroats and thieves? All of Ruby Pastano's efficiency was to her nothing now but filthy rags. All her relationship with him and his family, from the beginning, had been built on misunderstanding. They were too far apart. Not even affection and liking, not even respect could bridge the gap, the difference in ideals, in standards, in purposes. This generous, unscrupulous man, bringing the victims of rapine so unfalteringly into the heart of his own home was Will's friend—not hers. She had nothing in common with these people, and she would never have. And she had shut the door of her heart against her own flesh and blood, because of Will's pride, and had opened it to these—these— She choked and her throat turned bitter with gall at them.

Abruptly the Car Had Entered the Inlet Road.

Abruptly she was conscious of an upsurging of patriotism. Her own people—her own kind! Americans, strong, decent, successful, ardent and clean. Kind—kind. Incapable of murder and plotting. These foreigners looked upon them all as fat geese to be plucked and did not understand the courage, the cleanness, the strength of kindness. She hated them with a furious hatred. The compulsion to be rid of them—of all of them, and Will as well—came upon her.

She was crying terribly. She ran back down the beach path and came to Loring playing in the water with Elaine and Peter.

"Get the boat," she said sobbingly, "I will go with you."

* * * * * * *

It was wonderful to relax in the comfort and security of home again. The children went off happily with old Annie, who had cared for Lillian and Ernestine when they were small, and who had always stayed with mamma, a privileged member of the household. Lillian scarcely left Ernestine's side a moment.

Papa planned softly about going into Chicago in the morning, to set through to a finish the details of the trust funds for his two girls. Loring kept his distance, reading and smoking by the table at the far end of the long porch.

Ernestine was almost asleep, relaxed and comfortable in her body for the first time in many weeks, and she was almost inattentive to papa's voice going gently on with plans.

"I will deed the Sheridan road house over to you, darling. Mamma and I will be in New York most of the time, but when we are in Chicago we will stay there with you. Loring told us that you would come back sooner if I withheld your settlement."

Something clicked in Ernestine's mind—a small sound, as though a lock had been unbolted. But she went on to sleep calmly enough, carrying down with her into unconsciousness her trouble and her pain. Loring said she would come back—papa had been so willing to obey her wish about not having her money, because Loring said she would come back the sooner.

She slept deeply, all through the long evening, all through the night. It was the first clear flush of dawn when she awoke, sat up under the light cover that mamma had thrown over her there on the porch swing and looked out across the water.

She awoke with a conviction. She could not do this. She could not leave Will. It was impossible. By what route she had come to this conclusion she could not have told. But in her sleep her true nature had asserted itself and her mind was fixed.

She had done what she had resolved never to do. She had denied her marriage.

"Oh, not I—not my true self—not my heart!" she whispered. "I never did deny Will nor my love. I'll go back today—to be his wife for ever—no matter what comes."

She felt calm and strong now and could look with impersonal horror upon her defection. In the clear light of morning, filled as she was with the conviction that she must for ever choose Will against all the world, further understanding came to her.

All these months that she had been hating Will and loving him and reviling him and saying such cruel things, it had been a deep unknown desire for her mother's home which goaded her. It had been rebellion against the continued humiliation of poverty and disappointment that their hopes and plans had not matured this time into success.

All her mental processes seemed loosened, open. Now from some canny instinct she was presented with a new enlightenment. She was—she had been—worse than the "gimme" women. She had been for months under the domination of a bitter jealousy of his work. She had been wounded because his activity was secret from her. She had loathed the mistress that he followed—his own career. So, wanting him to succeed and to earn money, she had not wanted him possessed with the preoccupation of such processes. She had seen in his gaze that inward adoration which is more obnoxious to a woman's greedy pride than another woman's lure can ever be—that love for what he was doing, that excluded interest in his own mind.

All her own mind clear at last in the limpid humility born of having failed Will, in intention, if not in conclusive act, she could reach a place on which to plant her feet for ever, as far as he and she were concerned.

"What have I to do with his work?" The answer to this question in the clear logic of her mind released her for ever from the petty jealousies of the artist's wife. The answer was "Nothing." She had nothing to do with his work at all. It was his own, and she must know it. The old unity she had wanted to preserve was possible only as a kind of over-unity, not going into details. It was the ground on which love placed its feet, the sky above love's head, but not the secret of the habitations of the soul.

He could not bear a child for her, though his love conceived it. And was not the business of bringing forth something new and bright, even if it were but a comic strip for the daily papers, as secret and silent a process as that in which she was now again engaged? They all knew she was to bear another child. But no one intruded upon her privacy save by the most discreet and apologetic kindness. And might not the creative processes of artistry be as secret, as involuntary?

She had been resentful as petty men were sometimes resentful of a woman's preoccupation and distress in maternity. Will had been natural with her, casual and kind, and she could accord him the same courtesy. She wept afresh, but not the dreadful scalding tears of the day before. These were unselfish thanking tears distilled from a heart grown calm and good again.

"O God, help me to be a good wife—help me to be a good wife to Will, O God. Help me to understand him, to grow and change when life demands it of me. Help me to be a good wife."

She went to the desk in the corner and wrote a telegram:

"I have left Pastano's, and am at mamma's cottage with the children. Please come and get us today.—Ernestine."

Mock Spirits in Daytime, but Fear Them at Night

Night has great terrors for the inhabitants of the island of Bali, in the Dutch East Indies, because of the great number of demons (butas) prowling about in the dark. To appease these evil spirits, the mother of each home places on the doorstep, or shrine, a plaited tray filled with fruit and rice, often with a small lamp to show the way. When the demons find what they want they are supposed not to molest the people of the home. If a man has to go about by night he always carries a lighted torch and sings to keep the spirits away, as they do not like either light or music.

In the daylight, however, the natives can make fun of these spirits without coming to harm. On feast days they dress up and imitate the demons, mocking them. But as soon as the shadows lengthen, the clothes are returned to the temple and those who have worn them pray a little longer than usual and offer a little more food than regularly to the spirits who may come to their doorsteps.—New York Magazine.

Alumni Associations

The organization of those who have been students is characteristic of American schools. The first alumni association was established at Williams college in 1821. For many years alumni organizations were chiefly social, affording opportunity for the reunion of friends. As these associations developed, however, they proved to be useful not only in welding former students together in friendship, but in maintaining interest in an[illegible] in cases, supplying funds for schools and colleges.

Two Saved as Auto Lands in Treetop

Porterville, Calif.—Dr. G. B. Wells and L. P. Ford were saved from death only when an automobile in which they were driving perched in a tree after a brief career as a bird.

Doctor Wells was driving the car on the Camp Nelson road when the machine went off the road toward a gully 200 feet below. The car landed in a tree and was lodged above the gully bottom. Neither of the men was seriously hurt.

REFUSED TO SHAKE HANDS; KILLS HIM

Young Man Gets Penitentiary Sentence.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—A refusal to shake hands has resulted in the slaying of one man and the lodging of the man who killed him in the state penitentiary in Sioux Falls to serve a life term.

The murdered man was William E. Lewis, connected with the state highway department of South Dakota and father of Don Lewis, state fire insurance commissioner, while the slayer was Jose Lopez, a Mexican, who had been employed on ranches in western South Dakota. The slayer gave his age as 21. His victim was 70.

On the morning of the slaying Mr. Lewis was in his car about a half mile from a state highway ten miles east of Newell, northeast of the Black Hills. He was acting as checker for road building crews working on the highway. Lopez, according to his own statement after he was captured, went to the car and asked Mr. Lewis for a drink of water. The old man gave him the water as requested.

Then the Mexican, who was in a half crazed condition from drinking marijuana, a strong intoxicating drink made from certain roots, requested Mr. Lewis to shake hands with him. This the latter refused to do, and started getting into his car, having stepped from the car to give the Mexican the drink of water.

The Mexican grasped him and pulled him from the car, and as he was doing this Mr. Lewis pulled a knife from his pocket with which to defend himself. A scuffle resulted and the Mexican was cut slightly on one hand. This caused him to "see red," and, drawing his own knife and with that snatched from Mr. Lewis in the other hand, he commenced cutting and slashing the old man with both knives. The blade of one of the knives penetrated the brain of the victim, death resulting instantly.

Lopez then went to Newell and reported he had killed a man and the body of his victim was found after a search on a side hill where the battle to the death had taken place.

Solve Slaying Mystery by Motor Car's Squeak

St. Anthony, Idaho.—A peculiar squeak in an automobile resulted in one suicide and the arrest of a man and woman in connection with a murder.

When David R. Jenkins disappeared the night of November 18 no trace of his movements was discovered. His body, bullet-riddled, was found in an irrigation ditch nearly a month later. On the night of his disappearance his automobile had been mysteriously returned to its garage.

During the course of investigation several persons reported that they heard a car with a peculiar squeak pass down toward the river the night of November 18. Officers combed garages and used car markets of this section, hunting for a "car with a peculiar squeak."

They finally found it in a Pocatello garage. It had been owned by Glen Jenkins, a nephew of the murdered man.

John Jenkins, brother of the slain man, was questioned. He committed suicide the following day.

Glen Jenkins was arrested and he implicated Jennie Bishop, a spinster, and the two are being held for trial.

Official Takes Law in Fist, Man Takes Count

Mountainside, N. J.—Police Recorder William F. Winkler took the law in his own hands—or fists—here when a man arraigned for disturbing the peace spat in the official's face. Winkler's right landed flush on the chin of the expectorator and the usual count of "ten" was unnecessary.

Wasted Effort

Yonkers, N. Y.—The burglar who tore down the side of the Highland Dairy store to rob the place, groping in the darkness inside the building, found only a half dollar in the cash register. He departed with it. The coin was counterfeit, according to the store manager.

Hooks Two at Once

Selma, Ala.—Two fish on the same hook with the same minnow at the same time is the feat claimed by Fred Hammon, who produced witnesses. The two trout weighed five and two pounds, respectively.

Roscrea, Tipperary.—Mrs. Susan Walsh collapsed and died as she was about to enter the confessional box at St. Cronan's church

The student thought long and carefully before writing the answer, and when he handed in his paper, this is what the examiner read: "The field having been reaped by the 20 men could not be reaped by the 15!"—Toronto Globe.

Unenviable Status of Jackaroo in Australia

The name "jackaroo" was given to a youth sent by his parents to an Australian sheep or cattle station to learn stock and bush work. As he resided and had his meals with the manager, overseer and storekeeper, but had to work with the station hands, he was generally looked upon as a useless nuisance until he learned things. Having no special job and no status, he was given any job of work, hence a "jack of all work."

The old joke was, he was expected to "jump" to the call of the manager or overseer like a kangaroo. Most jackaroos, if they showed character or pluck, etc., became popular and after four or five years became overseers; or, if they or their relatives had money, they bought a sheep or cattle station or took up a section.—Lieut. Col. K. C. Brazier-Creagh, in the London Times.

There May be Poison in YOUR Bowels!

STEP out tomorrow morning with the fresh buoyancy and briskness that comes from a clean intestinal tract. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription for the bowels—will help you do this. This compound of fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other pure ingredients will clean you out thoroughly—without griping, sickening or discomfort.

Poisons absorbed into the system form souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drug stores sell.

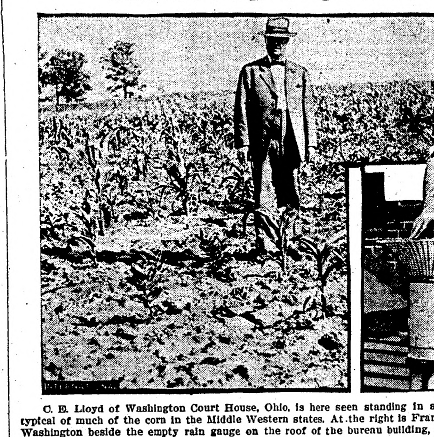
What the Long Drought Did to Ohio Corn



C. E. Lloyd of Washington Court House, Ohio, is here seen standing in a field of his corn whose condition is typical of much of the corn in the Middle Western states. At the right is Francis Dashiele of the weather bureau in Washington beside the empty rain gauge on the roof of the bureau building, looking in vain for clouds.

Says Woman Is Losing Beauty

French Expert Blames Cosmetics, Smoking, Drink and Late Hours.

Paris.—The days of beautiful women are numbered. Modern life, with its cigarettes, cocktails, cosmetics, and late hours, is slowly exterminating feminine beauty, according to Dr. Marcelle Peillon, one of the foremost woman beauty doctors and specialists of France.

Madame Peillon says: "Unless there is an immediate reaction to all these tendencies which destroy not only beauty but health in general, women who have beautiful skin, bright eyes, red lips and vivacious temperament, will live only in novels.

"The beauties of histories were real. France was a nation of handsome women, the most beautiful being in the Frankish and Gallic tribes when cosmetics were unknown, but when the salutary effects of bathing springs were known even to animals. Medicinal baths, hot springs, and the natural curative waters are the best aids to beauty, along with the simple regime of living that goes with the so-called cure."

Women are rarely deceived about their beauty, says Madame Peillon. They apply paint and powder and have their faces lifted; they massage and bind and pull themselves out of shape, when they really know that the only aid to beauty is good blood circulation, which makes clear skin, and skin is the natural indicator and mirror of health and beauty.

Nature Knows Best.

No cosmetic, no cream will ever do what the sun can do. And no face-lifting physician will ever provide pliant muscles like physical exercise, early sleep, early rising will do. Falling features, swollen veins, saggy cheeks, are due mainly to the life that was lived for 30 or 40 years away from the air, away from springs and sunlight.

The great enemy of beauty, says Madam Peillon, is alcohol. After alcohol comes the cigarette. The greatest aid to beauty, on the other hand, is exercise, which induces a good appetite, then comes bathing, and Madam Peillon asserts, like most physicians, that it is all important for women to have children. Few great beauties in history have been childless. Woman's beauty increases as she bears children, providing adequate care is taken.

Not Too Late, Sisters.

The woman of today, painted and powdered, sallow eyed, dulled by late hours, lacking in spirit and deficient in blood, can overtake her beautiful sisters of the past if she commences now, but Mme. Peillon fears that modern life will prevent women from growing in the natural way that the women of the past developed.

If any women are skeptical, asserts Mme. Peillon, let them not go to a beauty doctor, but let them for the sake of their own curiosity and desire to be beautiful, simply try living naturally for two weeks, stop smoking, drinking, in case they do drink, rise early, walk bareheaded in the open air, begin to love deeply, and Mme. Peillon adds, since beauty is more essential than anything, let them embrace motherhood, and their mirrors will soon show a different face, a keener eye, brighter tresses, a brow that is serene, respected, and loved.

Octogenarians Warned to Avoid Bridge Table

Paris.—Bridge, not old age or automobiles, is taking the heaviest toll among octogenarians and even septuagenarians, according to Dr. Maurice Lebon, French heart specialist. Writing in L'Oeuvre, Doctor Lebon pleads with Frenchmen who have reached or passed their alloted three-score-and-ten to abandon the card table and take a walk after every meal, or something approximately like that.

Duncan, Okla.—The city of Duncan lays claim to the only "honey tree" in the world. The tree is a hollow oak in which bees belonging to L. A. Morton have been storing honey. This year the tree is covered with small beads of honey. When the temperature rises the honey drips to the ground.

KNIFE, PLIERS AND GIN USED IN AN OPERATION

Clever Work of a Los Angeles Surgeon That Saved Sailor on Shipboard.

Los Angeles.—A cook's carving knife, a pair of pliers borrowed from the carpenter, a bottle of Holland gin and a needle and linen thread saved the life of a seaman stricken with appendicitis, and as a result, Dr. David R. Robbins, Los Angeles surgeon, recently was presented with a huge silver loving cup by the Planet Steamship company.

A little more than a year ago Dr. Robbins and his wife left Los Angeles on the steamship Noorderdyk for Germany, where the doctor was going to study for a year. He left all his surgical instruments at home, intending to buy new ones in Germany.

Three days out of Panama the Noorderdyk received an S O S from the steamship Corvus, saying that Henry Lohse, a twenty-one-year-old sailor, was stricken with appendicitis.

The Noorderdyk steamed to the Corvus, and when they met, Lohse was transferred to the Noorderdyk. Doctor Robbins was asked to save the man's life.

Doctor Robbins borrowed a carving knife from the cook, made the incision and with the pliers removed the appendix. He then sewed up the incision with a needle and thread borrowed from his wife and disinfected the wound with Holland gin. A piece of rubber tubing from a shower bath was used for drainage. As a result of the operation, Lohse is hale and hearty, hauls on the main brace and with full lungs sings, "Blow the Man Down."

Because he used such strange instruments, Doctor Robbins refused to accept any pay for the operation, stating that the operation under such strange conditions might not prove successful.

However, the steamship company did not forget Doctor Robbins' deed on the high seas, and when he returned to Los Angeles from his year of study in Germany he was presented with the silver loving cup.

Timber Problem Solution?

It is recognized, says the American Tree association, that the forest resources of tropical America may be a very important factor in our domestic timber problem. Some believe that those forests will be called upon to bridge the hiatus that is bound to exist between the exhaustion of our wild timber crop, and the harvest time of our man-managed forests. Others believe that they will form a permanent source of timber to replace some of our own special purpose hardwoods.

All are agreed that, in any case, we cannot fully and completely outline our own forestry problem without taking into consideration all the factors that may influence the outcome.

Gull Crosses Atlantic

A black-headed gull from Europe has been found among the native gulls of Newburyport, near Boston. It is the first of its species ever recorded in North America, and the only explanation for its appearance there is that it must have flown across the Atlantic. The suggestion has been advanced that the gull was driven out to sea by a gale, and then, being unable to return to land, flew right across the ocean. It has now been captured and placed on exhibition at the Museum of Natural History in Boston.

An unspoiled sense of decency is the noblest trait in man.

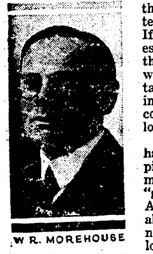
A CASE WHERE YOU LOSE IF YOU WIN

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

(This is one of a series of articles exposing the wiles of sharpers who are after your money.)

EVERY person who takes part in one of the many fake real estate raffles that are going on wins because there are no losers, regardless of the numbers they hold. The numbers, in fact, are only the bait to entice people into the scheme. The raffles are what might be termed "come-on" traps to catch investors. If you have ever tried your luck with a real estate raffle you doubtless felt like giving three cheers when advised that you had won, not knowing that in winning you had taken your first step toward being caught in the trap. You were momentarily overcome with joy over your success which looked to you like the "luck of a lifetime."



W R. MOREHOUSE

Puffed over your good fortune, you hastened out to inspect your newly acquired piece of property. A high-pressure salesman representing the syndicate that was "giving" you the lot walked by your side. After a tiresome trip through an undesirable district the salesman pointed out your new real estate holdings,—a narrow, shallow lot, unimproved, uneven, and with no conveniences such as water, sewer, gas and electricity. Not even graded streets or sidewalks. Not worth its taxes!

Before you were fully awake to the fact that you had been tricked your attention was directed away from the unattractive landscape before you to another picture. You were shown another lot, ideal in its location with all modern conveniences soon to be installed, and told that if the lot you drew in the raffle was not entirely satisfactory you would be allowed a credit of $250 for it on one of the more desirable lots being sold "to a few selected people as a special inducement and for a short time only," at the bed-rock price of $950. You were urged to take advantage of your further good fortune at being thus selected and to seize the chance to buy one of these specially priced lots.

"I've won a building lot."

"Think of it!" exclaimed the high-pressure salesman. "It will take only $700 cash as we are willing to allow you a credit of $250."

Where You Begin to Lose

Perhaps, as you stood there, you began to suspect that other "winners" had come to view the same lot you had won. If you reached the conclusion that it was being repeatedly used as "bait" you were right. You realized that after all there is nothing free about so-called free things. But others, unfortunately less suspicious than you, would be impressed by the glowing statements of the high-pressure salesman as to the value of the $950 lot and his assurance that it must double and treble in value, and would pay over the additional $700—to secure lots worth less than half the price they paid for them! The few who would insist on receiving title to the lot won in the fake raffle would soon be silenced by the statement that it would be delivered to them upon payment of certain expenses in connection with the transfer, which, however, would exceed the actual value of the prize lot.

There is nothing to be gained in participating in fake real estate raffles. There are plenty of legitimate sales. Raffles usually are only bait used to trap you. Of course, you win, but in winning you lose if you go through with it. Before drawing your money out of your savings account to go into a real estate scheme consult your banker or a Better Business Bureau to find out whether it is a bona fide plan. Spend time to save money!

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

Tariff Beneficial?

Frank W. Murphy of Wheaton, Minn., champion of the McNary-Haugen bill, has looked up the comparative prices of some leading farm products, in July, 1914, and in July, 1930. In the table of prices, as given by Mr. Murphy, we also give the tariff protection as of the different dates.

Prices given are Minneapolis prices.

1930.
Wheat, 87¾.	Tariff, 42 cents.
Durum, 83⅝.	Tariff, 42 cents.
Oats, 34¼.	Tariff, 16 cents.
Lambs, 9.00.	Tariff, $3 pr head
Hogs, 8.21	Tariff, 2 cents
Poultry, .14.	Tariff, 10 cents.
1914.
Wheat, 88⅛.	Tariff, Free List.
Durum, 75.	Tariff, Free List.
Oats, 31⅛.	Tariff, 6 cents.
Lambs, 9.60.	Tariff, Free List.
Hogs, 8.15.	Tariff, Free List.
Poultry, .14.	Tariff, 2 cents.

The comparative prices of these farm products and the tariff protection on these products, on the different dates, ought to open the eyes of everybody as to the claims that are made that the farmer benefits by a high protective tariff on farm products.—Normanden.

Is tariff necessary?

Democrats have said No since the early days of our country.

Tariff is not a price-fixer. It is merely a wall to keep out foreign competition. In the past, tariff kept the home market for home growers, and it still does.

But prices are regulated in the world market, where products from all nations meet in competition. There the lowest-priced product sells first, and if there is a limited demand, the holders of the higher-priced goods are left out in the cold.

So exporting countries like Canada and the United States in order to get in on the market at all, are forced to sell at a lower price, or keep their produce.

Now, tariff walls have been raised in almost all European countries, as a measure of protection against American tariff. This means that our "tariff wall" loses some of its power. Raising the tariff does not help — for the more we put on, the more they put on. This is reciprocity.

Tariff does not work for farmers. It works wonderfully for industrialists, who are few and well organized. They can control production and distribution with ease, and can command a steady price for their goods. With a strong tariff wall, they can raise their prices to the limit, and get away with it.

The crime of tariff is that it raises the price on what the farmer must buy, while it has not the slightest control over the prices on what he has to sell.

Is this 'parity for agriculture'?

As far as we're concerned, we would like to see Free Trade given a tryout once. Prices on everything would sink to a world level, each country producing what it was best fitted for. We have an idea that the farmer would be benefited by free trade, for the things he had to BUY would be thrown on the world market, and would consequently be lower in price. Other countries besides the United States have industries, so the competition would be merry—almost as merry as that which the farmer faces all the time.

—B. C. HAGGLUND.

Humboldt Bank Robbed

The First State Bank of Humboldt, Minn., was robbed Monday of last week by three bandits who got away with a loot estimated at $2,700. At first it was thought that they had escaped into Canada, but were seen in East Grand Forks that night, where they shot their way to freedom after being confronted outside a restaurant by two policemen. The bandits have not been heard of since, but officers believe they are still in the vicinity of Grand Forks.

Watch For Feed Flavors

At this time of the year, when the cows are being changed from pasture to feed and hay, it is very easy to get feed flavors in the cream, and that causes a second grade cream.

An easy way to avoid this, is, never to feed just before milking and then to feed only small amounts to begin with.

Stir your cream while cooling as it will also help.

Mrs. Marie Sandberg

Mrs. Marie Sandberg died at the Guy Anderson home Sunday, after a lingering illness brought about by old age. She was 96 years, 10 months and 4 years at the time of her death.

Mrs. Marie Sandberg was born at Varmland, Sweden, Nov. 17, 1833. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jens Person. Her early years were spent in Sweden, she being both baptised and confirmed in Ostermark and finally married to Jens Sandberg in the year 1853. After 34 years of married life the family emigrated from Norway and arrived in this country in June, 1887. They came directly to Holt township, which was her home until death.

Mrs. Sandberg leaves four children to mourn her loss. They are, Mrs. Christine Ellefson of Holt, Mrs. Mathilda Crowley of St. Paul, Mrs. Marie Heerin of Milwaukee, and Mrs. Ingeborg Person of Mora, Sweden. We are also sure that Mr. and Mrs. Guy Anderson will cherish a memory of the one whom they have so faithfully taken care of and watched over and whom they had learned to love.

Funeral services were held from the home Wednesday, Rev. L. M. Redal officiating.

The NEWS extends the deepest sympathy to the relatives of the deceased in their time of sorrow.

The Fire Hazard

The past week has been a hot one for the farmers living in the vicinity of Elm Lake and Mud Lake. A bad grass fire started near Ditch 20 north of Mavie cut loose and started out on its annual tour of destruction of hay stacks and farm buildings. Fanned by a strong changing wind the fire almost gained the upper hand before enough help arrived to check it.

According to reports reaching the News office yesterday, the fire is still running and has destroyed a lot of hay and property in the community.

Several men are at work both day and night trying to keep the fire under control.

First and Second Grades

Vernice Tollefsrud was promoted to third grade last week.

The first grade pupils have been busy making a Little Red Hen Sand Table, which they have now completed. They have also painted their hand instruments.

Both the first and second grade pupils have memorized a poem. The first grade has learned "The Moon Is the North Wind's Cookie" and the second grade has learned "Come Little Leaves."

The second grade people are interestingly watching the progress of their spelling graph.

Each month the children weigh themselves. They have made a little booklet in which they keep a record of their weight.

The primary pupils also have brought flower slips to school and have planted them in flower boxes.

Third and Fourth Grades

The fourth graders are studying the "Early Days of America" which includes a study of the Indians.

Nature Study booklets have just been finished by the third and fourth grades. They collected leaves and pasted them in booklets, then they wrote about Nature.

"The Weekly Reader" is new to the third graders, but we are sure they will all learn to like their little newspaper soon.

Welding Explosion

Elmer Engstrom, mechanic at the Engen Garage, had a very narrow escape from death on Tuesday while working in the repair shop at the garage.

Mr. Engstrom was doing some welding and had taken an empty gas barrel to use for welding table. The heat from the torch generated the gas in the barrel which exploded and tried to go out thru the roof. All the windows in the shop were broken and a partition wall was moved an inch out of place.

Mr. Engstrom received several cuts about the face and also had his hands burned quite badly.

N. S. A. News

The campus of the Northwest School of Agriculture is a regular bee hive of activity this week in preparation for the opening of the fall term next Monday. Contractors are rushing completion of the new Physical Education building and the remodeling of Kiehle building, both of which will add greatly to the facilities and efficiency of the school. The most noticeable improvements in the administration building include an enlarged library, auditorium, and post office facilities. Hundreds of new volumes have been added to the library, which now occupies one-half of the ground floor of this building. In planning the new auditorium, every effort has also been made to provide for the future growth of the institution, for all activities center around the assembly hall.

A. M. Foker, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, states that all dormitories and class rooms are now ready for occupancy. The library and administrative offices are also being moved back into their enlarged quarters in Kiehle building this week.

According to Superintendent A. A. Dowell, the first faculty meeting of the year will be held Saturday. Registration takes place next Monday, with the first classes scheduled for Tuesday morning, September 30.

PRESCRIPTION
in use over 47 Years
Really Helps Bowels

Don't you want this way of making the bowels behave? A doctor's way to make the bowels move so well that you feel better all over! Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin doesn't turn everything to water, but cleans out all that hard waste clogging your system. It cleans you out without any shock, for it's only fresh laxative herbs a famous doctor found so good for the bowels, combined with pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

A doctor should know what is best for the bowels. Let Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin show you how soon you can train the bowels to move freely, every day, the way they should. It's wonderful the way this prescription works, but it's perfectly harmless; so you can use it whenever a coated tongue or sick headache tells you that you're bilious. Fine for children, too (it tastes so nice) and they ought to have a spoonful the minute they seem fretful, feverish, or sluggish, or have a sallow look.

You can get the original prescription Dr. Caldwell wrote so many years ago; your druggist keeps it all ready in big bottles. Just ask for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and use it always for constipation.

Brought Business to Life

At Hickory Flat, Miss., crepe hanging on the door of the J. C. Simpson grocery store attracted pedestrians and window shoppers to enter the store and inquire as to the death in the grocer's family. "Who's dead?" they asked. "Oh, just business, that's all," said Simpson. Thereupon the shoppers undertook to revive business by making purchases. Simpson later removed the crepe.

Freak in Rose Growing

Mrs. Ruby Martin, Roanoke, Va., has grown two roses of distinctly different colors in bloom on the same twig of the same rosebush. Roanoke Rose society representatives found the stem was of abnormal size and described the phenomenon as a bud mutation or "sport." The bush is of the "Frau Karl Druschki" variety, sometimes known as the American White Beauty. The two blooms grew on a nine-inch stem and had individual stems of three inches each.

Restless
CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A coated tongue calls for just a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed.

—19—

She wakened old Annie, gave her money and sent her over to the hotel with the message.

* * * * * * *

They had a long talk on the beach that afternoon. Ernestine told Will everything, all that she had thought and felt, all that had happened the day before—Loring's talk with her, the murder car at Pastano's, her revulsion of feeling, how she had come home, and how, in the night, while she slept, everything had straightened out for her. Will lay beside her in silence, her hand in his, and again and again as she talked her fingers were pressed against his lips. They were back again in the cradle of love—rocked in magic which overcame all difficulties and healed all misunderstandings.

He told her then about himself and about what he had been through.

"I've made ten or eleven different developments of Poole's cartoon, altering them all, and I've made each one up for about six weeks, and planned the continuity out beyond that time, but I can't sell them. When I sat down to write to you what was there to say? I would resolve to try again, hoping to have some wonderful news for you. I've not been eating or sleeping—I missed you so, and I repented so my selfishness with you, and my attitude toward your family. I've not been reasonable, or fair—or generous. I felt that you were slipping away from me, because I couldn't hold you—because I didn't rate you."

These pictures moved Ernestine profoundly. Weeks of work, and nothing sold. The fear of losing her and the children, and the need to stick at the thing he was trying to do until he did it. She could feel in him a sharp pain of restlessness and discouragement, and her love poured out on him.

"Darling—it doesn't matter. I can stay here with mamma all summer. She understands. I can stay here until you get your comic strip right. They understand that it's you and I together always, Will."

"Don't cry, darling."

"It doesn't mean a thing," she told him and added with some whimsicality, "it's my condition, darling. I am simply weepy, and when I think how near I came to doing something that would have ruined all my life and yours—"

"You couldn't—you didn't—not even nearly, Ernestine."

Peter had come up to them, and, seeing his mother's tears, he began to wail loudly, and Elaine crowded close and thrust out a trembling lip. Will drew their attention from Ernestine, and gravely, abstractedly, he began to amuse them. He marked out the old familiar squares.

"Make a cat, Daddy—make a cat," commanded Peter, and Will, listening to Ernestine, but only half attentive, began to put down the cats that Peter loved so, the squares for a drawing board, a bit of stick for a pencil, the firm wet sand making a good plaque.

The child screamed with joyous mirth, and Elaine, beside him, clapped her hands with delight.

"Tabby cat's got his head stuck in a tin can. Look, Mamma!"

Will's attention swerved from Ernestine. He sat staring at what he had drawn, as though at a stranger's work. His face wore a startled look. The small squares, in which two ridiculous cats went through a ridiculous adventure. Suddenly he leaped to his feet and gave a whoop which a Comanche Indian might have envied.

"Don't worry—our fortune is made. Can't you see—there it is. Not Mr. Poole's old comic strip in any way, shape or form, but my own darned old cats? Even the children can see it. Trust me a few days longer."

* * * * * * *

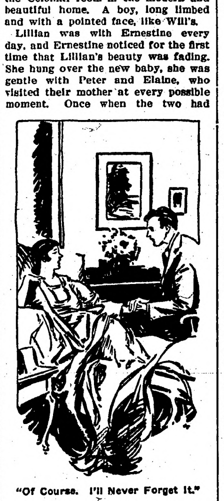
The cats were a great success. When fall came Will was working on the Sun again, in Mr. Poole's old office, under a three-year contract. The cat drawings were valued at sixty dollars a strip the first year, and more the second and third. Six days a week at sixty dollars a day. A full page for the Sunday supplement, in colors, at a special price. The tide of money and prestige poured in on them in a startling way. The movie people made attractive offers. Will knew how to make animated movies.

The Todds moved into a Colonial home only about a mile from mamma's. They had rented the house "to see how they liked it" with the possibility of buying it in their minds. Will offered the West side house in on a trade, but Ernestine would not sell the little house.

"You never can tell," she insisted, and though Will laughed at this, he did not resist her tenderness toward the house.

Papa established the trust funds. Money poured in upon them in the ridiculous and unreasonable way in which money behaves. It seemed now that nothing was too nice for the Todds. The new baby was born under the most promising conditions, in the Colonial room in the modern and beautiful home. A boy, long limbed and with a pointed face, like Will's.

Lillian was with Ernestine every day, and Ernestine noticed for the first time that Lillian's beauty was fading. She hung over the new baby, she was gentle with Peter and Elaine, who visited their mother at every possible moment. Once when the two had been watching the nurse bathe the newcomer and wrap him deftly in binder and cloth, turning him about in her hands while he gave soft grunts and sighs of satisfaction, and then at last tucked him in snowy flannelette into the curve of Ernestine's arm, with a little spank and tender scolding, Lillian looked at Ernestine with tears in her eyes.



"Of Course. I'll Never Forget It."

"I wish," she said, "that it had been this baby's birth that Loring knew about." Her voice trailed away and Ernestine tingled with a sense of guilt. So that was why Lillian had no children!

"It's hard for people who haven't children to understand how quickly all the woes of bearing them are forgotten. I never think of that old time any more, and I'm sure Will doesn't. Anyhow—if it had been worse, don't you think Elaine was worth it?"

"Yes," said Lillian, "of course she is. But it was a dreadful time, Ernestine. I don't believe you have ever known how near you came to dying. It was a terrible time for all of us."

"After all," smiled the younger sister, "in such a case an inch is as good as a mile. That whole dark time—it was all so wrong, apparently, for me to have that second baby, and now wild horses couldn't tear her from us. You can't always plan things out."

Later, Will came in, and found Ernestine alone.

"Remember that murder car you saw at Pastano's last summer?"

"Of course. I'll never forget it."

"Well, the new district attorney has arrested six of Pastano's relatives. It seems those men were killed in a fight with another bunch of gangsters. But these fellows were Pastano's men, and the next night they got the others with a machine gun, and now they're all locked up—both gangs. Loring has undertaken to get bail for them and get them off. Of course, it's quite respectable in Chicago to defend the most notorious criminal before the bar, but mamma doesn't like this. It was too close to home."

Ernestine could not help but smile at the twist Will could give to that word "mamma." Yet strangely, her mother and her husband had arrived at a basis of mutual understanding and liking since Will had been making his comic strip. Will said mamma was right about things. "Of course she wanted her daughter to marry a good provider," exclaimed Will, "just as you will want Elaine to marry a man who can take care of her. Mamma Briceland is too good a mother to be satisfied with less. And besides, she's pragmatic. She's got something to be proud of now, and delighted to have it. I tell you, Ernestine, I think Loring has worn it a bit thin, with his greediness and bossiness and always reminding them that he made papa rich."

Ernestine wondered if she would want Elaine to marry a good provider, and suddenly she felt in her heart a strong loyalty to the difficulties that had beset their ways.

"I don't care whether the children are rich or poor," she told Will. "But I want them to love and suffer, and to have hardships—I want them to live—and value life. I do, Will. I don't want it to be easy for them. Having things too easy is one form of poverty when you think about it."

CHAPTER XIII

Hankerings

Prosperity was good for Will. He worked regular hours. He looked fresh and well. He adored the children and enjoyed them more than he ever had, and no woman ever had a more loverlike husband than Ernestine. Two or three times a week they went to the theater, or to concerts, satisfying a long-starved hunger for beauty of sight and sound, for movement and color. Ernestine had picked up easily the old threads of social contact, as though she had been living in another city all this while. The old friends closed around her as naturally as though she had never been far from them, and in a little while the jargon, the familiar jokes, the odd intimacies were back with her again.

The money flowed in uncontrollably. They bought a second car, and there were beautiful clothes, new jewels and furs for Ernestine, charge accounts, a pony stabled at an expensive riding academy for the children. They talked of buying the house they were in, but already it seemed small. Will thought he would like to be nearer the lake and farther north. He felt that they needed more room.

One day in the fall when "Billy the Baby" was two years old, Ernestine entertained her bridge club and that afternoon seemed to her a perfect example of what life might be for a woman. She was proud of her home, proud of her thin china, her beautiful silver, her gracious friends. The new maid was well trained. The cook, stimulated by flattery, had outdone herself. The children came in and spoke to the guests who all exclaimed over them. They went out with their nurse to walk to the lake. Even Lillian, who had become silent and remote since her last trip to New York, displayed some of her old gay spirits. The talk fell into happy reminiscence of their childhood and girlhood.

After the guests were gone and Ernestine was helping the maid to tidy the living room, putting cushions in place, folding the card table covers, as the girl set the furniture back, Lillian stayed on, lying back in a chair of red velvet, her fair head pressed against the fabric, her arm hanging laxly over the side of the chair, smoking a cigarette, watching Ernestine. As the maid went out with the tables and covers and a tray of ash boxes, Ernestine flung herself down with an exclamation of weariness. Lillian astonished her.

"What's the matter with Will, kitten?"

"Why—he's all right. He's a little thin, but he'll pick up. He always loses weight in hot weather."

"But it's October now. It hasn't been really hot for weeks. I saw him on North Clark street today while I was waiting in the car for Loring, who was visiting one of his Greeks. He came and talked to me. He looked very white and thin, I thought—and his eyes were too bright—feverish. You must give him milk and eggs. Will is the type, linear I think you call it, that runs easily into T. B. He's indoors too much."

Ernestine was silent, thinking swiftly. "Will's all right, I think," she said a little shortly, but she looked grave. Lillian arched her brows in disbelief, but said no more. After a while she left in her own car, while Ernestine sat on the big couch, the silk and satin pillows, the wide low room with its charming furniture and carved fireplace forgotten in an instant.

What was Will doing on North Clark street? He and Mr. Poole had had an office there long ago. Will had been strange of late.

Silver Hoard Put Away by Romans Unearthed

At Caerleon in Monmouthshire, where a Roman legionary fortress stood to keep the Welsh marches for the Caesars in the Third century, excavators digging there unearthed some interesting secrets.

The one that is the oddest is that of the three centurions of the Second Augustan legion whose names, Quintinus Aquila, Vibius Proculus, and Vibius Severus, have been newly found. One of them must have been a hard-faced man who had done very well out of the war (like some men of a later day).

Whether it was hidden by Quintinius Aquila or by one of the two named Vibius we may never know; but beneath the floor of the quarters of one of these three centurions was a hoard of 280 silver coins. They may have been wrung from the neighboring Britons. Perhaps they were part of the military chest of the soldiers.

Some of the companies of the legion about that time appear to have been given marching orders for the north, where they were to take part in the work on Hadrian's wall.

Irish Finds Prehistoric

Discovery of a prehistoric cemetery in County Meath, Irish Free State, is believed to prove that there are still many interesting finds in this former seat of the ancient kings of Ireland. Antiquarians declare that the rich pasture lands cover valuable relics of the time when all roads led to Tara and great gatherings were held on the plains of Meath.

MOTHER PROBLEMS

By Mrs. Dorothy Coffeen

Spirit of Mutual Co-Operation

THE garden is growing under the diligence of Father. Son Henry, aged eight, delights in being present to witness the labor of his parent. He plays with the dog, throws a ball against the wall, dams water in the gutter or digs a passage to China. In fact, he does everything he can think of except one.

Father suggests that Henry could pull up some weeds and be of assistance. "Oh, dad, have a heart! I hate to work in gardens and anyway I have to practice catch over at Jim's." Here Henry makes a graceful and hasty retreat and Father goes on weeding the garden.

"Oh, well," he replied to an onlooker's remark that Henry is about old enough to offer a little help, "oh, well, he's busy playing. Naturally he'd rather play ball than dig weeds."

Naturally he would, but so would most all of us in all probability. Work is something Henry is asked to do and play is something he chooses for himself. Meanwhile discipline is a bit drowsy. Perhaps it spent itself in Puritanical days and is now suffering from somnolence. There are some in a certain school of thought who would slay it while it sleeps, and, as in this case of Henry and Father and the garden, would assure Father that when Henry reached the proper stage in his development he would voluntarily offer his assistance. Nine times out of ten, however, Henry would develop normally like the rest of us and would continue to regard unchosen occupations as irritations to be avoided whenever possible. The chances are that Father would continue to pull the weeds if they were to be pulled.

Now, of course, he could force Henry to leave his play, and work with him in the garden, would, no doubt, if he felt it worth the trouble, but if he did the coercion would make Henry no more willing to be of assistance the next time. Father would go right on coercing and Henry would become more and more clever about keeping out of the way. One remedy, however, suggests itself as being easily comprehended by Henry, in fact by all Henrys, and as an almost sure cure for the non-co-operative attitude natural to children. It may have been used by the ancients but so was water for washing and drinking; it may sound a little tit-for-tat but so is the game Mother Nature plays with us. If Henry finds no time to help Father, Father is quite logically excused from finding time to help Henry. If Henry has other better things to do than to lend a helping hand, then (for Henry's own good) so should Father. If he did have, on one or two occasions of supreme importance to Henry, there is little doubt that the lesson of the benefit of mutual co-operation, which is incidentally one of the most fundamental of life, would be driven home—and in time.

Conquering the Instinct of Cruelty

TWO boys were seen to be playing on a vacant lot. One had a baseball bat, the other was throwing something for this one to strike. A teacher happened to cross the field where the boys were playing. She stopped a minute to watch the boy's skill and was amazed to find that it was not a ball with which they were playing but a live toad. She succeeded in shaming the boys sufficiently so that they put the toad down and discontinued their brutal sport, but she went on her way and promptly forgot the incident. That afternoon in her classroom she gave a lesson in history citing some of the far removed examples of human error and battle. She completely ignored the opportunity which had come to her to teach a never-to-be-forgotten lesson in human kindness.

The instinct of cruelty is one which we are to think will be outgrown. It is rarely outgrown. Instead it develops the boy or girl into a hard, unfeeling individual who cares not even for his human associates and still less for animals. It is the most dangerous instinct a child can possess for it is the beginning of many crimes. Cruelty, ruthlessness and lawlessness are all of the same family and the first is the worst of them all. I have seen children stick their fingers in dogs' eyes, pull kittens' tails, and do other similar things to pets just to see what they would do. Parents or other grown-ups standing near make no remonstrance, ignore the act as if it were not important. These little things are important. "Do unto others as you would be done by" is still the best lesson to give little children. It is easily understood. It is personal and direct and it is at least a guide for them in their relations with other world creatures.

Boys who play baseball with a live toad, or who kick a pet dog when he is chained do not do so for the sake of curiosity. They do it for the definite purpose of hurting and the only cure for them is to be equally hurt in return and to be taught that such acts are not and will not be tolerated. It is cruel of parents to allow children to develop cruelty for they can prevent it by being watchful of little indications.

Future Fighting Planes Marvels of Efficiency

Airplanes are now able to climb to greater heights than ever before, and the air battle of the future—if there is one—will be fought eight or ten miles above land, out of range of anti-aircraft guns. Designers have been compelled to revolutionize the airplane to enable pilots to live at such a height, and the cockpit of these machines will be totally enclosed. The cabins will be electrically heated and the pilots will wear specially heated clothing to withstand the cold. Air will be provided from cylinders of oxygen, fed through a small mouthpiece. Great care is being taken over this item, and accurate experiments will have to be made, for should the supply of oxygen fail the pilot would lose consciousness in mid-air.

Love and Letters

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

WHEN a man proposes to a girl he should do it by word of mouth, but Jack Benton wrote his declaration to Arabella Porter and came near dying a bachelor in consequence. If he hadn't had a taste for low company he would have done so. It is only fair to Jack to say, however, that he had a taste for low company because low company was profitable to him.

Jack, you see, was a writer and had developed a knack of writing stories of the underworld which made his stuff saleable to magazines and Sunday newspapers. What he aspired to write was love stories.

"For heaven's sake, Benton, drop lovers and stick to crooks," said Whitmarsh, the editor of the Sunday Trumpet, as he handed Jack back one of his stories dealing with the tender passion. And Jack did stick to crooks, though he was determined that some day he would write a love story that would make the editors sit up and take notice. It was because of his firm belief, in spite of all that had been told him by people who ran magazines and newspapers, that he was able to just "charm the bird off the bush" when he wrote on love, that he put his proposal of marriage to Arabella in written form. He read it over, pronounced it perfect, mailed it and awaited a reply.

A week went by and he was still waiting. He waited confidently at first, then hopelessly. Faith glided into an agonized suspense and suspense into an agonized certainty. The cruel Bella had not even deigned to acknowledge his passionate avowal of love. Now and then a horrible thought would come to him. Was it possible that the editors were right, and that he was not such a crackerjack at writing on love as he thought he was! But he dismissed the thought as unworthy of his keen literary perception. Once or twice he considered going up to Bella's house, and demanding to know what was the matter. But no—he would not humiliate himself so far. He had poured out his heart in that letter of his and if she had not appreciated it—well then life henceforth was to be a dreary waste.

But Jack was doing Arabella an injustice. She had received his letter—and she had answered it. In her reply she had said all that could be said to rejoice the heart of her suitor. She put the letter in the mailbox, calculated just how long it would take for it to reach Jack and then sat down to wait his coming. But he came not. Could it be possible that Jack had been playing a joke on her—toying with her affections?

Meantime Jack went on writing about crooks—he had to live in spite of blasted hopes—and frequenting places where he could meet crooks and get "local color." In the underworld he had made many friends who knew that he was harmless and would never "squeal" on them. Crooks don't mind reading about Crookdom at all; they rather like it—provided nothing is given away that should not be given away.

Jack used to meet his crooked friends in resorts of a perfectly respectable appearance frequented by perfectly respectable-appearing people. Unless you were "in the know" you would never suspect what kind of a place you had got into. He was seated in one of these resorts gloomily eating chop suey one night when Nifty Jim strolled in, faultlessly dressed as usual and wearing upon his face that charming smile which had been the financial undoing of so many confiding persons.

"Hello," said Nifty, taking a seat opposite Jack; "how goes the merry whirl of literature? Speaking of literature; I've got something to show you that's a corker. One of our crowd is now and then able to do a little inside post office work for us. A week ago he brought down a bunch of letters which we went over down at Loftus' place. Pretty poor pickings—but I came across this and have been keeping it for you, as a literary curiosity. Did you ever read such idiotic drivel as that?" And he handed across the table Arabella's reply to Jack's letter. Jack read it through, comprehension of what it was gradually dawning upon him.

"Nifty," said he rising to his feet, "you have been a college man I know; but you must have been rotten in English. That is the most beautiful and touching thing I ever read."

Half an hour later Jack and Bella were discussing bridesmaids and orange blossoms.

Sea Reclaiming Island

The island of Capri offers an unusual example of submergence within historic times. In ancient times a sea cave, now known as Blue grotto, was used by the Romans as a resort from excessive heat. In order to obtain light, an opening was cut in the roof. Since that time the island has sunk so that even the artificial opening is now partially submerged. In some caves of the Bermuda island stalactites hang from the roof and extend into the sea water, which partially fills the cave. Stalactites obviously could not have been formed in water, proving that at one time the island had a greater elevation. These islands seem to be disappearing, but in this case the process is a very slow one.

Hair Tonic Odor in Hat Brings Burglar's Arrest

Columbus, Ohio.—Because a hat and Jack McDowell's head wafted the same pungent scent of hair tonic, Jack was arrested on a house-breaking charge.

Columbus detectives, summoned to the home of James Ellis, discovered a prowler had left his hat behind him in making a hasty departure.

McDowell was arrested several blocks away. Detectives sniffed the hat; then the suspect's head.

"Uh-huh! He's the man," they grunted as they bundled him into the patrol wagon.

YOUNG 'BAD GUYS' GIVE BACK $5 BILL

Pickings From Victim Too Small for Kid Holdups.

Oakland, Calif.—"We're robbers and bad guys—but we ain't no chiselers!"

With these words—stated in a deep bass voice, but ending in the soprano squeak of adolescence—two "baby bandits" handed back a $5 bill to William E. Brown, Letterman hospital, after holding him up at the point of a gun in Oakland.

Brown was waiting for a train back to San Francisco at Fortieth street and Shafter avenue, Oakland, when he was approached by two youngsters, each about fourteen. The boys wore long overcoats several sizes too large for them and caps pulled down well over their eyes.

"Stick 'em up an' fork over yer dough!" growled a deep voice from one.

"An' be quick about it—we're bad guys!" growled the other. But he wasn't quite so successful with the growl, as his voice soared upwards into a womanish treble.

Brown passed over a $5 bill with the information it was all he had. The two surveyed the bill.

"H—l, he's too small a fish for us to bother about," snarled the smaller one. "Throw him back into the water! Take yer jack, mister, and git! This is a tough town, and we're the two toughest guys in it!"

Hater of Felines Tries Odd Scheme; Arrested

Milwaukee, Wis.—Walter Rudolph hates cats. He has hated cats a long time, although not often has he done anything about it. The reason for this bitter hatred may become apparent when it is remembered that in the alley off East Water street, where Rudolph lives, there are many cats and that cats prowl—and fight and yowl—at night, and often prevent honest men from sleeping. Persons at East Kilbourn avenue and East Water street one night saw Rudolph eyeing a black and white cat, one of the strays in the neighborhood. They saw him approach the cat, seize it, rush to a parcel post mail box and deposit the cat in the slot. This done, Rudolph walked away, apparently watching for other cats.

But Policeman George Springman, who observed the capture and imprisonment of the cat, interfered. He arrested Rudolph. To release the cat it was necessary to hail a passing mail wagon and ask the driver to open the box. Rudolph furnished bail and was not in district court to explain when he was fined $5 and costs.

Child Burns to Death as Elders Save Cattle

Berlin.—Because her grandparents first rescued their cattle before saving their grandchild, eight-year-old Erna Langermann burned to death in the farmhouse of her grandparents at Mueggelheim. When the conflagration started the old couple rushed panic stricken out of the house, entirely forgetting their grandchild. They then proceeded to bring their cattle to safety. When they finally thought of the child the house was all ablaze. Only the charred remains of the unfortunate girl were recovered by the fire brigade.

Triumphant Dog Turns Tables and Shoots Man

Fredericksburg, Va.—When a man shoots a dog, it's no story, but when a dog shoots a man . . .

Col. John H. Payne, annoyed by a yelping dog, set out in the dark with a revolver to end the noise.

As he stalked through the back yard he felt sharp teeth lock in his leg, and in his pain he dropped the revolver. The dog stepped on it. Payne is now recovering from a bullet wound in the shoulder.

Wanted to Be Rescued in Official Fashion

Pueblo, Colo.—Tony Mahalich, who had fallen into the water, refused to be rescued by a group of boys nearby. When they attempted to drag him from the water, he yelled for the police, declaring that if he had to be rescued he wanted it done right—by the officers.

Suicide Failure Costs $30

Pueblo, Colo.—It cost John Rebol $30 because he failed to hang himself. He testified in Municipal court that the rope broke when he attempted suicide. He was fined $30.

Took Mankind Long to See Value of Chimney

Stoves are not very old. The three-legged specimen which Mr. Ford has added to his Americana attained antiquity quickly, even though generations have already arisen who only feel heat and never know the joy of watching red coals fade behind the draft or of seeing orange isinglass glow in darkness—that friendly welcome home of the old-time sitting room. There was something benevolent about a portly baseburner, something lively about the reassuring snap and crackle of the little wood stove in the bedroom on mornings when the pitcher on the washstand was half full of ice. They do seem now to belong to a far-off day, and yet it was uncounted ages before the invention of the chimney followed the discovery of fire—before, so far as we know, any solution of the problem of having fire without smoke was even sought. Rome had hot water heating in some baths, but no chimneys in the home.

Electric Rolling Mill

An all-electric rolling mill in western Pennsylvania rolls steel strip at a maximum speed of 2,400 feet per minute, or around 26 to 27 miles per hour. The steel enters the mill with a length of 30 feet, and is rolled to a length of from 1,500 to 1,800 feet, the thickness being greatly reduced during the process. When its final thickness is reached—all in the space of a few seconds—the long strip flashes from the rolls, white hot and at high speed, and is led through serpentine convolutions to conserve space in cooling.

Curious Old Watch

A watch more than a century old, built on the "chain-drive" principle before there was any such thing as "stem-winders" is the property of Arthur Kimball of Augusta, Maine. Mr. Kimball found the watch between the walls of an old house he was tearing down in Ferrisburg, Vt., and found in its case a paper telling the name of the maker. On the back of this paper was the annotation that the watch was sold September 15, 1827.

HAPPY WOMAN TELLS HOW SHE LOST 19 POUNDS OF FAT IN 27 DAYS

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION

To Be Held at Thief River Falls October 29 and 30

Dairymen, creamery operators, and others interested in the dairy industry in the Red River Valley are invited to gather at Thief River Falls October 29 and 30, for the twenty-seventh annual convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's Association. Several outstanding speakers will contribute to a program planned to provide educational features as well as special entertainment, which the Commercial Club of Thief River Falls is sponsoring. The officers are planning several worth-while and interesting features.

Some of the speakers will be John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes, Congressman C. G. Selvig of Crookston, J. H. Hay, Assistant Dairy and Food Commissioner, and Dr. W. E. Peterson, Associate Professor of dairy husbandry at the University Farm, who recently discovered the cause of milk fever, and developed a cure which is proving of untold value to the dairy industry.

Morris Sorenson of Pelican Rapids, president of the Minnesota Creamery Operator's Ass'n., will have something of interest to tell the creamery operators in regard to their salary schedules, according to C. M. Pesek, secretary of the association.

An attendance contest is sponsored by the association this year, conducted on a mileage basis, so that all creameries in the Valley will have an equal chance to win. The awards will be in the form of bronze tablets to the winning creameries, engraved with the names of the directors and operators who have contributed to the success of their creameries and to the convention.

Awards will also be given for high scoring butter, and to the winners in the butter judging contest. The names of the grand prize winners in the boys' and girls' Red River Valley Essay Contest will also be announced.

Several districts of the Minn. Creamery Operator's Ass'n. and the Land O'Lakes District are planning special prizes for high scoring butter.

Another Pioneer Passes

Osvald Holl, pioneer of this community, passed away at his farm home here at 2 p. m. Saturday after an illness of a few weeks' duration. Some time ago Mr. Holl suffered a stroke which he was unable to overcome.

Funeral services were conducted on Tuesday and interment was made in the Humboldt cemetery.

New Dairymen Begin

Leslie Shaver, assistant buttermaker at the local creamery, and R. B. Perry, superintendent of the local school, have gone into the dairy business the past two weeks. They have purchased several head of high grade milch cows from farmers in this community and expect to add to their herd as they go along.

The Golden Sharry Farms, as the home of this new dairy herd will be called, is the place which Mr. Shaver purchased some time ago in the south end of town.

W. W. Club to Meet

The Ladies Club will meet at the Dahl and Oakey home Wednesday evening October 8th.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Ness and Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Ness spent Sunday at Greenbush visiting at the Gust Williamson home.

Watch For Feed Flavors

At this time of the year, when the cows are being changed from pasture to feed and hay, it is very easy to get feed flavors in the cream, and that causes a second grade cream.

An easy way to avoid this, is, never to feed just before milking and then to feed only small amounts to begin with.

Stir your cream while cooling as it will also help.

Luther League Convention at Greenbush Saturday & Sunday

The circuit convention of the Luther League will be held at Greenbush on Saturday and Sunday Oct. 4th and 5th. A very fine program has been outlined for this convention and those who have never taken in one should go and hear Dr. Brown speak and the Choral Union Singing.

Miss Beulah Bennes and Miss Amanda Fosholm from here were elected to go as delegates from the local league.

Faiman-Nygaard

Anna Faiman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Faiman of southeast of Holt, and Theodore Nygaard, son of Mrs. M. Nygaard of this village, were united in marriage at the Nels Johnson home Tuesday evening, Sept. 30th. Rev. O. J. Haukeness performed the ceremony, and Mr. and Mrs. Johnson acted as witnesses.

The NEWS extends the heartiest congratulations to the contracting couple and wishes them good luck on their marital voyage.

Appreciate His Service

W. O. Braggans, county attorney, was a business visitor in the village last Thursday. Mr. Braggans is a candidate for reelection to the office of county attorney and we believe that during the time he has served the people of this county in that capacity he has done more for them than they really know or appreciate.

He has spent his time and effort in looking after the taxpayers interest and has at all times tried to turn the thing to your advantage. Among these are the county's financial and tax problems the most important confronting the voters this fall. With his experience in office and the information acquired on these subjects he is in a position to give you better service in the future.

He has made a close study of the tax burden and is spending his time in relieving that as fast as possible.

There are a lot of hard cases for the county attorney to take hold of at times and we admire his ability for handling some of these to the benefit of the whole county rather than some few individual persons who may not even be taxpayers.

Mr. Braggans is your servant and you should appreciate what he has done and give him your vote and support.

Reception Given

The people of Holt and community gathered at the school house on Friday evening and gave the teachers a reception.

Mrs. Geo. Fricker was the chairman for the entertainment committee, which had made arrangements for a very interesting program.

R. A. Werner, president of the local board of education gave the address of welcome.

Mrs. Alfred Anderson gave a very interesting talk on the way the schools were at the time she started in the early '80's. She spoke in much appreciation of the wonderfull schools that are maintained in our state now.

Mrs. Anderson also mentioned the fact that every boy and girl now attending school should at all times be willing to do what they are told and respect their teachers highly.

E. M. Bennes, president of the board of education at Thief River Falls spoke on the costs of maintaining our schools and the ways in which we may economize without taking away anything that is of any benefit to the students. He stated that it has been figured out that it costs some-one $5,000 for each student to go thru the average school.

Mr. Bennes also stated that a student makes about $9 per day while attending school. While this does not come to them in actual dollars and cent, it comes in the value of an education, a thing which stays by you for life and can never be sold or stolen.

R. B. Perry, superintendent of the local schools gave a short talk on cooperation by the students, parents and teachers.

Mrs. H. O. Hanson sang a solo and Miss Gladys Sanoden played a piano solo.

After the program a lunch was served and the evening was spent in playing games and getting acquainted.

Out of town visitors who attended the reception were: Miss May Eldrich of Two Harbors, a former teacher here, now teaching at Ada, Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson of Crookston.

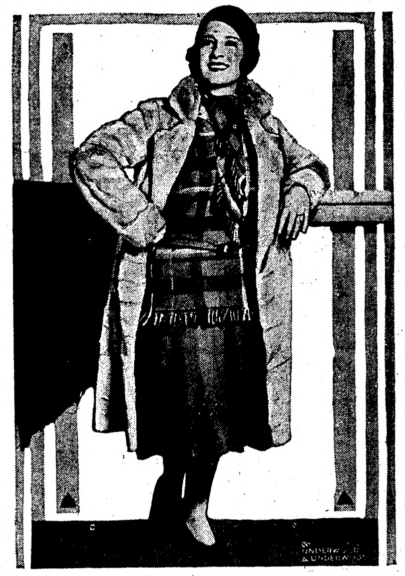
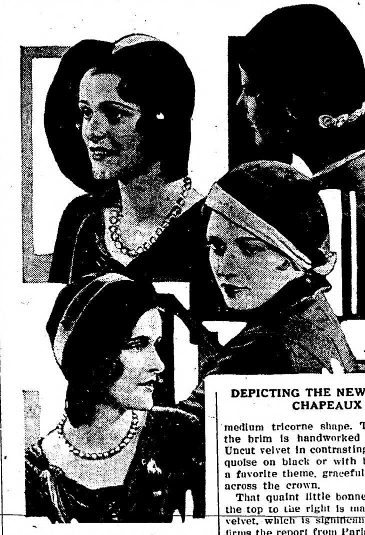
PLAIDS ENLIVEN SPORTS MODE; MILLINERS VELVET CONSCIOUS



STUNNING SPORTS OUTFIT



DEPICTING THE NEW VELVET CHAPEAUX

GAY plaids are scheduled to enliven the sports mode. If you are up on Scottish lore you may choose the plaid of your favorite clan, for native designs and colorings have been faithfully reproduced in many of the new weaves.

This blouse of plaided woolen is style-revealing in several points. Perhaps the most significant thing about it aside from the fact that it is made of modish plaid is the fact of it being an over-blouse instead of a tuck-in. The return of the over-the-skirt blouse is assured for fall and winter.

In fact so insistent is the call for the over-blouse that even the dressiest types to wear with the very elegant velvet suits will be of this sort.

However, we digress, we started out to tell about this very chic sports outfit, and especially about the exploitation by designers of plaid at outdoor events and for travel and town wear. There is much to be said on this subject for Paris is quite plaid inclined for fall. A French model which made an instantaneous hit with every one who caught a glimpse of it, is an ensemble costume. The suspender dress or shirt with shoulder straps, to be more accurate, is of black broadcloth, as is also the blouse, necessarily a tuck-in because of the suspenders and fashioned of handsome quality kind, big bold red, yellow green, blue and white gingham.

Speaking of suspender skirts reminds of the importance of the jumper dress this season. They are coming in for considerable attention, not only in the schoolgirl realm and for children, but the smartest kind of golf costumes are made of bright plaid ratine. These dresses button up the front in the simplest manner. The advantage, besides being good looking, is that the sleeveless dress affords changes in the blouse, thus transforming the appearance. There is a coat to top this dress.

Just a word in regard to the fur sports coat which the young woman is wearing over her nifty plaid blouse in the picture. Coats of this character are the smart thing for sports wear. Every up-to-date wardrobe of the athletic woman includes one.

Milliners Say Velvet.

Milliners have become exceedingly velvet conscious. At every turn in the realm of the hat-beautiful for fall and winter one is reminded of the favor expressed for velvet in black, in colors and in white, for some of the most enchanting little berets the autumn sun, the moon also for that matter, e'er shone upon are styled of white transparent velvet if not of wide white velvet ribbon.

The illustration below tells the story of the picturesque trends and flattering ways of the new velvet chapeaux. You may be assured that these choice models are "real millinery." That wee diamond-shaped trademark which you see printed to the right tells you so. It is a guarantee of these styles being authentic and authoritative, since it bears the letters A. M. F. A.—which being interpreted means American Millinery Fashion Authorities, the membership of which consists of a select few of our "ain countree's" foremost millinery fashionists.

The first lovely velvet creation in the group illustrated is a beguiling affair, with one of the new flattering set-back-from-the-face brims which invites you to show your wavy tresses and look your most fascinating. It has an inset of contrasting velvet. The back brim is shirred.

The hat below which flares from the face with such a nonchalant air is a medium tricorne shape. The edge of the brim is handworked all around. Uncut velvet in contrasting shade, turquoise on black or with brown being a favorite theme, gracefully meanders across the crown.

That quaint little bonnetlike cap at the top to the right is made of Lyons velvet, which is significant, as it confirms the report from Paris that velvet of firm weave will this season share honors with thin-as-chiffon transparent types.

The last hat calls attention to its swanky tip-tilted pose. It is fashioned of wide velvet ribbon and color contrast is emphasized—any color scheme which tunes in with the costume with which it is to be worn.

Girl's Plea for Fast Ride Ends in Death

Princeton, Ind.—A daughter's plea to her mother to drive the auto "fast down the hill" ended in the death of the child and injury to the parent, Mrs. Cora Watkins, Princeton. Mrs. Watkins lost control of the car and it was wrecked. The daughter, Dorothy, thirteen, suffered a fractured skull and abdominal injuries which proved fatal.

GIRL HIKES 3 DAYS TO HELP HUSBAND

Hears He's in Jail and Goes to His Assistance.

Kansas City, Mo.—Hearing that her husband was in trouble here caused Mrs. Gladys Mitchell, seventeen-year-old bride of three months, to walk for three days and nights without food or sleep from Webb City, Mo., to Kansas City.

Mrs. Mitchell heard that her husband had been arrested here for attempting to steal a ride on a freight train.

It was a tired and sleepy young woman who told the story of her trip to the police matron. She hadn't rested except for short periods during the whole of the 160-mile walk between the two cities.

According to her story, her husband, Louis Mitchell, left their home in Joplin several weeks ago to find employment. He reached Kansas City, but was unable to find work and was preparing to go to St. Joseph, Mo. While attempting to steal a ride on a freight train he was arrested, she had been informed.

Word was received three days before she arrived here that he was in trouble. She immediately donned overalls and set out afoot to do what she could to release him.

Until her marriage to Mitchell, three months ago, the girl had been without a home. She had been left an orphan at four and had made her living since that time by housework.

The couple maintained a home in Joplin until the husband lost his job there.

Pays With His Life for Reunion With War Buddy

Wagon Mound, N. M.—Charles Geist lost his life because he recognized the name of his wartime buddy on a sign.

Geist and J. J. Lowenthal, traveling from New Jersey to Los Angeles, drove their automobile up in front of the Wagon Mound garage here recently.

To them Wagon Mound was just another town. They stopped "to stretch their legs."

"Say, I know that fellow," Geist said to his companion, pointing to a sign that bore the name of Fred Crocker. "We were buddies in the war."

Crocker was overjoyed to see Geist. He persuaded the men to stay overnight with him. It was a great reunion.

The next day Geist was in the Wagon Mound garage, supervising work on his automobile. A cyclone struck the town.

Geist, who went through the war unscathed, was killed when the garage walls collapsed under the force of the wind.

His first reunion with his buddy was his last.

Boy Good Investment

A boy baby at birth has an economic value of $9,333 in a family with an income of $2,500 a year, according to figures presented at the White House conference on child health and protection. At eighteen this same theoretical boy is worth $28,654. It has cost only $7,238 to raise him, so he may be regarded as a pretty sound investment. CHAPTER XIII—Continued

—20—

Ernestine rose abruptly and went to her room to change her dress before the children returned to climb upon her. Her mind went reluctantly to Will, as though forced against itself to consider dangers. Perhaps he needed mothering. He was subject to periods of nervous and mental depression because he could not remember that he had a body long enough to take care of it. She wondered if he were worried about money. They were spending it like water, but there seemed so much of it.

The children came in, rosy and laughing from their walk, and crowded upon her. She loved to have them close. They chattered eagerly as she sat down with them to their simple, appetizing supper, the nursemaid smiling and talking to her with a pretty deference. She and Will had dinner together, later, after the children had had half an hour with their father, and gone up to bed. But Will did not come in at their bedtime as he usually did. Disappointed, they finally trailed off up the stairs, and Ernestine wondered if she had missed Will.

"Has Mr. Todd been in, Molly?"

"He's in the garden, ma'am," the maid replied.

Ernestine went out through the dining room windows, across the tiled west porch and paused at the garden steps, to stare. Will stood about fifty feet away from her, leaning against the corner of the garage, his hat off, his head tilted back and his eyes fixed on the one tree that stood on the lot, a tall narrow poplar tree.

Ernestine had never seen him look like this. The slight habitual twist of satire that had become set on his mouth was gone. His lips were relaxed and full, like a child's. His black eyes, always so bright and alert, were soft now and strangely luminous in his pale thin face. And in his countenance was such yearning, such poignant beauty, that Ernestine could scarcely forbear crying out.

He had not noticed her, and silently she turned back to the house and silently closed the door behind her. For what was Will hankering there in the dusk? What did he worship? Something she did not know, see nor feel. Something beyond her. Again, in the absorption of life he had slipped away from her, into some secret path he had to follow alone. Again his mind had escaped while his body only remained by her side. The poplar tree—he was ailing, as he had ailed before.

She gathered herself together with a spiritual gesture. She strengthened herself. Something was imminent, something was to befall them. She realized with horror that they had not saved a cent, in all their new prosperity. She was confronted with the necessity to cease her butterfly whirling and turn squirrel again. For Will's run of luck would inevitably end in disaster of some kind that she could not even forsee.

Thinking of the longing and the sorrow of his face, Ernestine forgot for the moment how but a short time ago she had loved her house and blessed her possessions. Was there nothing she could do for Will? Nothing. She had learned this hard fact once, and let her not forget it now. Was he always to be lonely? Could not her body encompass him, her love enfold him? At times she could be close against his heart. At other times he would be remote from her, from all of them. Her spirit cried out in protest against the sense of alienation that was sweeping down upon her. Her throat ached bitterly.

She shook herself. This was nonsense. Because Will stared at a tree and a star she was invoking disaster. He had come in early and gone out in his garden to enjoy the evening, and the light had made him look wan.

But these thin mental comments died unheeded. Nothing could shake the deep fatalistic conviction that had laid itself upon her heart.

* * * * * * *

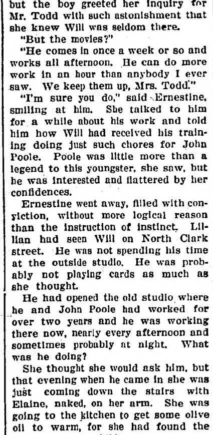
Ernestine watched Will during the winter months that followed without making much headway in her efforts to understand him. His abstraction at times was so intense that he moved like a somnambulist. The children bloomed. Peter was a tall strong boy with a lively mind and body. It was evident that Elaine would be able to start with her lessons in another year. The baby would be three in the summer, and he was every one's darling. Mamma was always sending him things from New York. She could not shop without remembering him.

But none of Ernestine's joy in her children could compensate for Will's strangeness. Sometimes he came out of his absorption and was feverishly bright and active. He was guarded with her, and put on an artificial nonchalance. She accepted this casually, without the irritation that had almost disrupted them before. His whole air and manner were the air and manner of a man who is pursuing a secret love affair, but Ernestine knew that Will's grief was not so simple as that.

Nevertheless, she began in a quiet unobtrusive way to spy upon him, being compelled by the need to know something more. His habits away from home were revealed to her by small patient inquiries.

He spent every morning at the Sun office and kept his strip well ahead, did his work in an orderly, workmanlike manner. In the afternoons it was the common belief that he went to the small outside studio where a youngster named Hobbs worked on the movie cartoons for him. He spent some time there, and then either played bridge at the Press club, or at one or another of the clubs on Michigan boulevard where men had money and leisure to spend around the card tables in the late winter afternoons.

One day, downtown shopping, Ernestine went over to this movie studio, but the boy greeted her inquiry for Mr. Todd with such astonishment that she knew Will was seldom there.



The Office Was Empty and She Entered and Shut the Door Behind Her.

"But the movies?"

"He comes in once a week or so and works all afternoon. He can do more work in an hour than anybody I ever saw. We keep them up, Mrs. Todd."

"I'm sure you do," said Ernestine, smiling at him. She talked to him for a while about his work and told him how Will had received his training doing just such chores for John Poole. Poole was little more than a legend to this youngster, she saw, but he was interested and flattered by her confidences.

Ernestine went away, filled with conviction, without more logical reason than the instruction of instinct. Lillian had seen Will on North Clark street. He was not spending his time at the outside studio. He was probably not playing cards as much as she thought.

He had opened the old studio where he and John Poole had worked for over two years and he was working there now, nearly every afternoon and sometimes probably at night. What was he doing?

She thought she would ask him, but that evening when he came in she was just coming down the stairs with Elaine, naked, on her arm. She was going to the kitchen to get some olive oil to warm, for she had found the skin dry on the child's arms.

Will had come in the front door and stood, drawing his scarf from within the collar of his great coat, staring up at her. His face flashed at her and he said imperiously:

"Stand still."

She stopped, in amazement, and stood poised on the stairs, the child on her arm, her simple house dress falling against her long limbs, and Will looked up at them with concentration, power in his eyes. After a strange interval he began to fold the silk scarf about his throat, to button his coat, to draw his gloves over his fingers, still staring at them, and then without a word, but with a smile of excitement, he turned and left the house.

It was very late when he returned, but Ernestine was awake, waiting for him. He came directly to her in her room, and his face was like a drunkard's, flushed and relaxed and happy. He caught her in his arms and kissed her passionately.

"Will—where have you been? Why are you so strange?" she asked him.

For answer he pressed his lips against her throat, he put her short dark hair back from her brow and stared at her, entranced with what he saw.

"You're so lovely," he said, "so beautiful, Ernestine. Not even the old masters have a face as lovely as yours. Your eyes—your eyes are sad, my sweet. Why are you sad?" He ran his fingers over her face, his strong fingers that could touch lightly, wonderfully.

Ernestine felt as if her heart would break.

"Will—tell me. What ails you?" she implored him. "You haven't noticed me for weeks and weeks—all winter you haven't even seen me, and now—you come in like this."

He moved away from her. He was erect, triumphant, under the impulse of strong excitement.

"I've done it, Ernestine."

"What have you done?"

He made a gesture with his fingers—a stroke in their air, either with brush or pencil.

"I've made something new and different. Something I've wanted a long time. I'll tell you about it some day, when I'm ready. But now, don't question me. Just love me. As you used to, Ernestine. Can't you come to me as you used to come? My love, and mine alone?"

He wooed her, and she yielded to him, finding an instant's hurting joy in his old eagerness—his old flaring enthusiasm. This tide of human love was not new to her. Its sameness was like an enchantment. But after he was sleeping by her side, she wept secretly. He was so strange. Even in his ardor, deep honesty warned her that not her beauty, not her love, not her dearness had allured him—he had been impelled toward her by something within himself. His deep and secret springs of artistry were awakening, stirring. Solitary even in his passion and his love.

The next morning she rose with her heart hardened with determination, and after he had gone downtown, she hunted out among her possessions the old office key he had given her, so long ago. She took the bus and went back to Erie street, walked the old familiar way again and came to the old office, fitted her key in the lock and opened the door. The office was empty, and she entered and shut the door behind her.

The light in the place was fine. A long window crossed the back of the room, and here was a slanted table and stool. Ernestine moved to this and calmly, deliberately, she began to hunt for Will's secret. She had no more scruple about it than she would have had if he had been her son and in some trouble she must learn about.

In the middle of the drawing board, on white rice paper pinned down with tacks at the corners, was a sketch. Only a few strong lines in charcoal. She saw herself, coming down the stairs, the naked baby on her arm, one hand at the balustrade. The long lines of her limbs bore a subtle and flowing exaggeration. It was beautiful. It was alive. It moved and in its motion were poetry and sound. It was new, work of a kind she had never seen before. But she understood it. The outlines were clear and hard—the work had authority, fire, but nobody else had made a picture like this. Understanding filled her. Last night, Will had not loved her. Her heart had told her truly. It was this picture—this bright mental image of womanhood that he had loved, had taken into his arms and caressed.

"No, no," she whispered. "That's morbid. It is I whom Will loves. It is only his way."

On the corner of the sheet, like a signature, were the round hard splotches of tears. Ernestine wept, too, standing there and looking at this new work and thinking of Will—and the Todd cats.

Poland Offers Much to Attract the Traveler

Poland to many travelers is a country unknown. Yet to the tourist it offers much in the great variety of scenery, the richness and color of its native peasantry, and the charm and beauty of its myriad churches and ancient ruins. Its art treasures, its architecture, its numerous museums, compare favorably with those of other European countries.

Warsaw, the capital and largest city, has a population of over 1,000,000 persons and a history which dates back to the Thirteenth century. Since that time it has seen many changes and events which have helped to make the history of Europe. During the latter part of the Eighteenth century the city experienced a period of great splendor. It was then one of the largest cities of Europe and it became the very center of artistic, literary and scientific activity, and had also a brilliant court of life. Gracow, only a few hours' ride from the capital, is really the heart of Poland, although Warsaw is the seat of government.

Beer as a Cosmetic

Gallo-Romans were almost modern in their use of cosmetics. They recognized the value of cold water to refresh the skin. To preserve the complexion, however, they bathed the face in the froth of beer or with chalk dissolved in vinegar. The eyebrows they dyed with a juice taken from the sea pike. Auburn or yellow hair was greatly admired in women and those who were unfortunately and unavoidably brunette either limed the hair, dyed it, or wore wigs.—Detroit News.

Hard Times Affect Jap Temples and Churches

The business depression now prevailing throughout Japan affects not only business but the temples. Three years ago the Kwannon temple, in Asakusa park, Tokyo, which draws the largest number of visitors and pilgrims of any temple in the capital, averaged $500 a day in small coin contributions. People would go and throw pieces of money into the wooden box in front of the temple. Now, due to the slump, the income has dropped to the $125 level. This state of affairs has necessitated a complete revision in the temple's budget. Not only the Asakusa temple, but practically all the shrines, numbering 112,000, and countless Buddhist temples as well as Christian churches in Japan, have felt the sting of the business depression. In many cases temple priests have been finding it extremely difficult to make both ends meet. The number of worshipers has not decreased, figures prepared by the temples show, but more now pay their devotions in hope of making money than in finding a charitable way of spending it.

Lamp That Stops a Train

With the general adoption of the automatic stop system, it is possible that railroad employees may be equipped with a hand lamp that works a secret ray which, when flashed upon an oncoming railway engine, will, by means of a special form of light-cell switch, bring the locomotive's vacuum brakes into action. This device has been invented by Maj. Raymond Phillips, O. M. E., an Englishman, who as far back as 1903 invented a system of automatic train control that was tested successfully on several railways.

Ingenious Autoist

Harvey Truran, a garage employee of Stockbridge, Mass., discovered about 20 stones in the gas tank of a car after spending considerable time endeavoring to find the motor trouble. When questioned, the owner of the car, a resident of Albany, N. Y., said he could not get uphill in New Hampshire a few days before because his gas was low. In order to make a higher gas level he placed the stones in the tank.

After 40
Bowel trouble is Most Dangerous

Constipation may easily become chronic after forty. Continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles—and a host of other disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. When they need help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Next time just take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative. See how good it tastes; how gently and thoroughly it acts. Then you will know why it has become the world's most popular laxative. Big bottles—all drugstores.

Business evolution used to move slowly—it measured off its gradual changes almost invisibly, like the hour hand on the clock. But today its tempo is that of the second hand. Machine Achieves Uniform Milking

Magnetic Milker Seen as Biggest Dairy Development of 1929.

Application of magnetic force, mankind's latest engineering achievement to solving the drudgery of milking, humanity's oldest chore, is probably the outstanding dairy development of the year 1929.

From time immemorial man has dreamed of a better way to milk, a method which would eliminate the necessity of extracting the world's daily supply of milk by millions of laborious tiny hand squeezes. But this continued to be a dream until Dr. Carl G. P. De Laval and others started work upon mechanical milkers as early as 1894 with the result that today an estimated two million out of America's twenty-five million cows are milked by mechanical means.

Achieves Perfect Uniformity.

Doctor De Laval died in 1918 but the experiments and trials carried on by his associates bore fruit early last year with the perfection of the magnetic milker.

The why and how of the magnetic milker are explained by the De Laval Bureau of Dairying, named in honor of the great Swedish inventive genius.

Every good dairyman knows that cows like to be milked the same way every day, that some people are better milkers than others and can get more milk from the same cows, and that a cow's production will fall off for a milking or two when she is milked by a stranger. The mechanical milker did away with a lot of this so-called human element in milking. Neither the hand milker nor the ordinary mechanical milker could milk a cow from start to finish with absolute uniformity. This is accomplished by the magnetic milker.

Perfect, uniform, fast and regular milking is largely dependent upon pulsations. These must be regular and absolutely uniform. Irregular pulsations have the same effect on a cow as a change in hand milkers. To obtain absolutely uniform pulsations that would be true to a split second, a method of applying magnetic force to a milking machine was devised. This is the same force used by industry to perform many important and intricate tasks because of the dependability and the simplicity with which it can be applied. Through a simple arrangement in the pulso-pump of the milker electro-magnetic force was created, controlled and transmitted by wire to the milker units. In the same way that a clock ticks off seconds more accurately than can a human, the magnetic milker draws the milk from each cow exactly the same at each milking with beneficial effects. No matter how many units are used at one time every pulsator moves as one.

The application of magnetic force as a means of doing away with the most tedious of all dairy tasks will likely work a revolution in America's largest industry. Attuned to pulsate in harmony with a living animal of a highly developed nervous temperament the magnetic milker is enabled to get the most milk at the least cost, and to save half the time needed to milk by hand.

EXTRA! World's Series!

The world series came to a close at Philadelphia on Wednesday afternoon when the Athletics clinched the championship in a one-sided game, the score being 7 to 1. This was the sixth game of the series and the Athletics had played some fancy ball thruout the whole season.

The Athletics won the first two games of the series at Philadelphia, lost the next two at St. Louis to the Cardinals, won the fifth game at St. Louis and then returned to Philadelphia for the sixth game which they won, giving them the championship.

The Cardinals seemed to have hard luck most of the time, but nevertheless it was one of the most interesting series in the history of baseball.

R-101 Destroyed

The R-101, England's giant dirigible, largest lighter than air craft in the world, was completely destroyed by fire early Sunday morning while on a trip from Cardington, England to India.

The big airship was passing over Beauvais, France when a storm, passing up the coast overtook it and, strong cross-winds forced it down from the air and it landed in a heavy woods. The ship burst into flames at once and exploded, killing 46 of its crew and passengers.

Only five people of the 53 aboard were saved and some of them were badly burned or maimed.

The R-101, world's largest dirigible and dubbed Great Britain's "Mystery Ship," was a sister ship of the R-100, which made a trip to Canada last summer.

Other air disasters include that of September 3, 1925, when the U. S. dirigible Shenandoah (formerly ZR-1 was wrecked in a storm in Ohio and 14 persons killed.

Dec. 22, 1923—French dirigible Dixmude, presumable struck by lightning over Mediterranean, 52 persons killed.

Feb. 21, 1922—U. S. dirigible Roma, bought by United States from Italy, crashed to earth in Glames near Hampton Roads army base; 34 killed:

August 24, 1921—Dirigible ZR-2, bought in England for the United States, frame buckles over river; 42 were killed.

Watch For Feed Flavors

At this time of the year, when the cows are being changed from pasture to feed and hay, it is very easy to get feed flavors in the cream, and that causes a second grade cream.

An easy way to avoid this, is, never to feed just before milking and then to feed only small amounts to begin with.

Stir your cream while cooling as it will also help.

The 3rd and 4th grades have thought of a scheme in which they can see which grade has the best attendance. The 3d grade is called Yale and the 4th grade Harvard.

The boys of the 3d and 4th grades are attempting to organize a drum corps. All the children are making costumes which they expect to use in singing class.

The 5th and 6th grades have organized a Citizens Club. The slogan for 5th grade is "We are Weekly Reader Workers" and for the 6th grade, "There is nothing like the Weekly Reader."

A Columbus Program will be given in the 5th and 6th grade room on Friday.

The 5th grade Geography class is making relief maps.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The 7th and 8th grades were in the High School assembly and listened to what Mr. Crowell said.

The 7th grade have learned how to read the electric meter.

High School

The party given in honor of the Freshmen, by the Sophomores and Juniors last Friday night, proved to be a big success the greatest attraction being the program, after which games were played and lunch was served.

On Monday of this week Mr. Brictson of the Crowell Publishing Co. offered a plan for making money for the High School and the seventh and eighth grades. He divided us into two groups to sell subscriptions to different magazines. We accepted his plan as being a worthy one. When a subscription is sold the school gets a certain part of the money. The seller also gets a premium for selling the magazines.

Last Thursday Mrs. Sizer of the W. C. T. U. spoke to our school. I am sure we all enjoyed her speech and will remember what she said.

Six weeks tests are being given this week.

A Kitten Ball game is scheduled with Strandquist, for next Tuesday, it is to be played at Strandquist.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

The Financier

The great flurry in Wall street did reach deep, all right. Someone was about to call the operator from a drugstore phone booth in upper Broadway when the bell rang. A clerk came from behind the counter and answered it "I'll see if I can get him," he said, and he went out on the sidewalk and gesticulated. The traffic cop out in the street nodded and came to the phone. "Down to nine, eh?" said the cop. "What would you advise me to do? . . . Huh? . . . Put in an order to sell at market? . . . Okay, go ahead and get me out." He hung up and went back to his intersection.—Boston Globe.

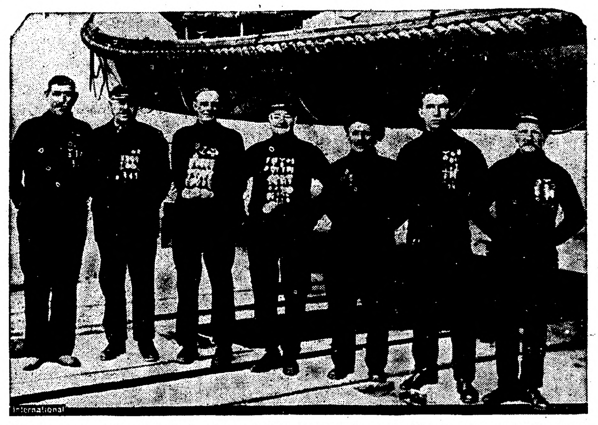
"A WONDERFUL HELP TO ME"

Read What Mrs. Arnold Says About Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Dothan, Ala.—"What a wonderful help Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been to me. I was so nervous and rundown I couldn't be up half the time. When I had taken one bottle of Vegetable Compound I could tell I felt better, so I took seven bottles and I recommend it highly. It helped my nerves and keeps me strong to do my housework and wait on four little children. I hope some other suffering woman will try it."
—Mrs. Porter L. Arnold, 1013 S. St. Andrews St., Dothan, Alabama.

Hero Crew Mans New French Lifeboat



Very few medals and awards for heroism are left for this crew to garner. They have been carefully chosen, not only for their proven courage but also for their seamanship, to man the new electric-powered lifeboat, "Marechal Foch," recently placed in service at Calais, France.

Death Rate in Russia Is High

Natural Increase, However, Fast Because of Greater Number of Births.

Moscow.—The Soviet union has one of the highest death rates in Europe. Nevertheless, its rate of natural increase is extremely fast because of the high birth rate.

In 1928—the latest year for which complete figures are available—there were 42 births per 1,000 population and 18.1 deaths, a population growth of 23.9 per 1,000. This meant a natural increase of about 3,500,000 that year, and the rate, according to estimates for 1929 and 1930, has been growing.

As compared to prerevolutionary Russia, the birth rate has declined somewhat: it was 45.5 in 1911-'13 against the present 42. But the death rate has fallen sharply owing to improved sanitary conditions; 28.8 per thousand in 1911-'13 against the present 18.1. The most startling contrast between the Russians of before and after the revolution has been in the matter of infant mortality. The country is still far behind most of Europe in this respect. It had 155 deaths of infants under one year for every 1,000 born in 1928. But this was an immense improvement when compared with the 265 infants who died out of every 1,000 born in 1911-'13.

Birth Control Legal.

Birth control is legal in the Soviet union. Books on the subject are in every shop. Government clinics provide information and answer questions. Every physician is permitted to instruct patients on the subject.

While making this knowledge legally available to everybody, however, the Soviet government does not encourage birth control. On the contrary, it encourages the production of large families. The official propaganda on the subject makes it clear that birth is primarily a matter for the individuals to decide, but that the duty of the state is to breed new Soviet citizens. Except where economic or physical difficulties—poverty, insufficient housing space, illness, etc.—make additional children burdensome, the government favors more births.

Indeed, the Soviet system provides a good many advantages to mothers which constitute a sort of bonus or subsidy and certainly go far to explain why the birth rate has remained almost steady despite the legality of birth control.

Nurseries in Factories.

For instance, every working class woman receives two months' vacation with full pay before the birth of her child and two months after. In other words, the birth of every child into a trade union home costs the state four months' wages. That isn't all, while the baby is in its nursing age, the working mother is entitled to certain periods of rest every day for feeding the infant, without any loss of wages. The large factories provide day nurseries in the factory building itself, with trained nurses in charge.

A series of special institutions give advice, medical assistance, etc., to new mothers. The care of children is probably the most highly developed social undertaking in the Soviet union. Among the millionfold peasantry primitive methods of child care are still being used, but in the urban centers the state is fast introducing modern ideas.

Soviet population increase eventually may produce a serious problem. The present rate of natural growth, barring war or some other catastrophe, would double Soviet population in 30 years. The increase of about 24 per 1,000, if continued on the "compound interest" basis, would give the Soviet union 300,000,000 population in 1960.

Hospitals for Vets Soon to Get Talkies

Washington, D. C.—War veterans carried on the rolls of government hospitals soon will enjoy talkies instead of the silent moving pictures with which they have been entertained for years.

The first veterans' hospital talkie show was held at Mount Alto Diagnostic center, here. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs, said he expected all hospitals having suitable recreation halls would be equipped by Christmas and eventually all other institutions would be supplied with the modern machines.

ODD CHICKENS ARE RESULT OF EXPERIMENTS WITH EGGS

Influence of Diet on Embryonic Development Studied by Nutrition Experts.

London.—Turkey eggs that produce White Leghorn hens and Rhode Island Red eggs that hatch a "duck-chicken" may be possible as the process of transferring yolks from one egg to another develops.

Poultry experts who deal with nutrition believe that experiments which have been going on for some time will make this possible. Mlle. L. Bouges, a French representative to the World's Poultry congress, has made a survey of such experiments.

She says it is well known that foodstuffs affect organs of the body both by their amount and by their composition. The effect is said to be more noticeable in young than in adults. Little has been known in the past, according to the French nutrition expert, of the influence of diet on embryonic development.

Experiments conducted to influence the embryonic diet of the chicken by modifying the contents of the egg have been done by means of a hypodermic needle during the incubation of the egg.

To perform such experiments the shell is pierced and food materials are added, removed or exchanged. After the egg has been pierced the shell is repaired with plaster of paris. The small amount of air and light which enter the egg seems to do little damage. Mlle. Bouges first recorded success with two eggs of the Leghorn breed. The chickens produced had quite normal appearance and developed into normal, healthy fowls.

Mlle. Bouges says the process has been applied to about 600 eggs, and the operations include the exchanges of yolk between eggs of the same breeds, and also between hen eggs, turkey eggs and duck eggs. "Birds resulting from these experiments have been interesting," she says.

Characteristics of coloring are believed to be modified by the influence of diet and some experiments have led poultry breeders to believe that diet also may play a part as one of the factors determining sex.

Prison Doors Open for Sake of Stork

San Rafael, Calif.—So the baby she expected could be born outside prison walls, Mrs. Mary Kavanaugh, twenty-four, serving a sentence in San Quentin prison for a Los Angeles theater robbery, was removed to the Cottage hospital.

Tots Fall 4 Stories and Escape Unharmed

Albany, N. Y.—Peter and Harry Deble, four and seven years old, respectively, escaped unharmed in a four-story fall from the rear porch of their home. While playing the railing gave way and they plunged to the ground. It was believed their fall was broken by the roof of an extension house near the second floor.

FIDDLE WOOER IS THUMPED IN NOSE

Husband Irritated by Long Musical Flirtation.

Evansville, Ind.—A "fiddle flirtation" that ended in a blow on the nose for the musical wooer was related in Evansville city court by Thomas Connolly, forty, who was cast as the irate husband.

Connolly was charged with assault and battery upon James Oakley, twenty-five, but after Connolly told his side of the story, the charges were dismissed by Special Judge Ollie Reeves.

Oakley, who lives across the street from the Connollys, would sit on his front porch and watch Mrs. Connolly, thirty-six, mother of three children, moving about in her front yard, it was charged.

"Then he would go in the house and get out his fiddle," Connolly said. "He'd play 'I'm Watching You'—until the whole neighborhood could hear.

"Mrs. Connolly would walk down the street. 'Wherever You Go, I'm Following You,' were the strains Oakley would play.

"He'd mix these up with something like 'I'm in Love, So in Love, Love Me.' That's what made me the maddest.

"After about three weeks of this I got good and mad, so I went over and asked him if he was flirting with my wife."

Oakley denied that he was, according to witnesses, but Mrs. Connolly said that he was.

"So I just naturally smacked him a couple," Connolly said. Oakley had Connolly arrested on assault and battery charges.

Special Judge Reeves lectured all parties concerned when he dismissed charges against Connolly and cautioned Oakley to be careful in his selections of violin pieces in the future.

Death Strikes Surgeon Operating on Patient

Birmingham, Ala.—A surgeon, performing a Caesarean operation, was fatally stricken with a heart attack before his task was completed. Colleagues brought the child safely into the world, and also saved the life of the mother.

The dead surgeon was Dr. T. H. Williams of the South Highlands hospital staff. Dr. R. M. Coston and Dr. J. D. Dean finished the operation Williams had begun. Mrs. L. H. Day, twenty-five, the mother, and her eight and three-quarter-pound baby girl were reported in satisfactory condition.

As he collapsed Doctor Williams' first thought was for the safety of his patient and the success of the operation.

"Watch it, doctor," were the last words the stricken surgeon uttered.

A coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from natural causes. Fellow surgeons said undoubtedly Doctor Williams had suffered a heart attack.

Two-Year-Old Child Is Carried Away by Bear

Plattsburgh, N. Y.—A large female black bear made off with the two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Winch of Lake Placid.

The child was carried almost a mile from a field where its parents were berrying before frightened off. Badly bitten about the face, neck and arms and suffering from loss of blood, the infant was taken to a hospital where he is expected to recover.

Winch said he left his son lying in the grass when he was suddenly attracted by his cries. The bear had its teeth in the child's clothing and waddled off at a good lope, with Mr. and Mrs. Winch in pursuit.

Coming to an open field near a railroad crossing the bear dropped the child and disappeared. It is thought it was a mother bear in search of food for her young.

'Hunger Island' Gives Warning of Drought

The "island" is a gravelly reef, about 165 feet long. Ancient tradition declares that its appearance foretells a year of drought and poor harvests.

Daring Aviation Feat of Twenty Years Ago

Hanging like a huge kite 3,000 feet above the Chicago municipal airport, a cabin monoplane, with Howard Stark, airmail pilot, at the stick, recently remained stationary for almost an hour. A mile-a-minute gale was blowing at that altitude, and by throttling down his motor, Stark kept the speed of his plane equal to that of the wind so that it hovered over one spot. The feat recalls the so-called "suicide flight" in 1910 of the daring French airman, Hubert Latham. At an air meet at Blackpool, England, Latham took up his small plane in an 80-mile gale. The frail craft reared and plunged, carried by the force of the wind, in what early air enthusiasts still remember as the most thrilling flight they ever witnessed. Latham, who had been told by doctors that he had only a few months to live and who took up flying to get the most thrills out of his last days, landed safely.

Cheap Ice for City

A natural ice well, 172 feet underground from which crystal clear blocks of ice can be cut in hottest weather, is occasioning much interest at Rapid City, S. D. The well is located at the gypsum plaster mill at Black Hawk, seven miles north of Rapid City. In digging for gypsum at the plant, workmen sunk a shaft at the end of which a large hole was excavated in taking out gypsum. This filled with water to a depth of eight feet which freezes in summer and is coated with thick ice.

Few Insect Fighters Able to Defeat Spider

The wasp and the hornet may be reckoned as formidable foes, but it would appear that the spider, for his size and weight, at least, is equal to anything he may come across. In a recent experiment a spider was pitted against a wasp in an inverted tumbler. The wasp scored the first point, biting off one of its opponent's legs; but in the next round the spider got in an infective bite, and the wasp died in a few minutes. Two other contests followed, and in each the spider came off victorious. The strong feature of the spider is its agility, and even in the uncongenial environment of a tumbler it evades attack with apparent ease. With the added advantage of a web, which provides not only lines of retreat and attack, but also serves to entangle and embarrass the enemy, the spider is a foeman whom even the boldest spirits in the insect world hesitate to attack.

When Ignorance Is Bliss

In the summer a certain family of farm girls always helps with work in the fields, there being no boys to perform the necessary tasks. This summer, however, one of them was missing at hay time. She had been compelled to go to summer school in order to remain with her class in its march through high school.

A neighbor became rather eager for an explanation of the absence of the missing girl. There was no hesitancy on the part of the other girls in reporting the situation.

"Oh," they chirped in chorus, "she flunked last year in Latin so she would have to go to summer school!"

She looked through everything and found material with the dust of a year upon it. In a pile were pictures of the poplar tree. He had made the tree again and again. She caught a hint of desperation. He had been deliberately careless. He had distorted the limbs, but neither the carelessness nor the distortion had given him the quality that lay now on the board with the charcoal sketch of herself on the stairs—a thing called Life. Vitality!

Months of work. Months of struggle. Secret, silent—a new idea, a new stirring pain goading him out of his path.

And every morning he had to go and make the cat cartoons. He had to go from the Sun to the movie studio. When he was longing to experiment with this new conception. He was ready to leave satire for a new form of beauty. He was ready to establish a new and modern school of work.

It was not an unnatural development. Looking back, it seemed to Ernestine that the years had conspired in order to accomplish this. She remembered the little boy with his leg in a brace, who had made the book of bird pictures for her—a book she still loved and possessed, and which she had been showing to Peter only a day or two ago. Will had so loved the color of wings.

She recalled the water colors on his mother's walls; the smudged pictures of John Pryor when he was a baby—crude but warm. She remembered what Mrs. Todd had said—all the neighbors thought Will would be a great artist some day. If he were not subjugated to her biological necessities!

Through the newspaper environment and his hero worship of John Poole he had become a cartoonist. And he had had hard work and desperate struggle to accomplish that. But the very things this success had brought him had been a means of releasing this deeper, more sincere impulse. The comfort, the affluence, the sense of security, all had enabled him to begin to give heed to another voice.

And Will had thought in his simplicity that he could have a secret! He had imagined that he could, in his idle hours, pursue this new and delightful gift of artistry. He had experimented here alone with new tools, new methods, and thought that no one would ever know. Ernestine was wiser. She knew the consequences of activity, secret or open. This studio was going to destroy the cats as certainly as love destroys infatuation.

She stooped and brushed lightly with her lips the charcoal image of herself descending the stairs. She locked the door and went away, her lips firm, her eyes glowing in her lovely face.

"Whenever you are ready, Will, I will be ready, too."

But Will did not seem to be ready. He had changed. He had become silent, morose, irritable. There was no question now as to where he was spending his time, for he played bridge hours every day. He won constantly, Ernestine kept him as clean of money as she could, subverting all that she could lay hands on to her own purposes. She did not know how much money he won at cards, but his mania was a new thing, and she could not understand it. One night at a dance in the club to which he belonged she saw him through the open door of the cardroom, sitting at a heavy round table, his face absolutely set, his dark eyes watchful, playing in an intense absorption.

"How does he play?" she asked her partner, a friend of Will. "I've played with him, of course, but always with women, and he seemed indifferent—careless."

"I wish I could get him at a table when there were women there," the man, a middle-aged illustrator, answered. "He has a great deal of my money. Why, he plays an extraordinarily good game, and every one likes to play with him because he minds his own business. He plays for study, but he doesn't row. He makes no mistakes, but he doesn't jump on the fellow who does. And cards! Oh, boy—he has them. He has an absolutely marvelous memory."

Ernestine knew this. Will's memory was part of his equipment as an artist. He would be able to visualize each trick that had fallen, without error, she knew. But she was troubled. She understood the psychological use of the word "substitution," and it occurred to her in connection with Will at the bridge tables, but she could not get the thing clearly. Will was drugging himself with the mechanical occupation of cards. The cards interested, absorbed, fascinated him. The mesmeric fascination of the game were useful to him as a means of stilling something—she could not quite get it. She could not ask him whether he had ceased going to the little office. She felt balked and wounded.

One day when he telephoned that he would not eat at home, and came in after midnight, he flung down on the table a roll of bills.

"I've been playing for ten cents a point. Won rubber after rubber," he said indifferently.

Ernestine picked up the money and counted it.

"This will pay for—" she began, and Will exclaimed passionately:

"My G—d, Ernestine, what do you do with the money? I never see you that you don't have your hand held out to me."

Her fear gave her sudden fury.

"Am I to account to you for every penny?" she exclaimed. "I did without, long enough. Now that you're earning, are you going to be niggardly with me? Don't you dare ask me what I do with my money!"

He made no answer, his face bored and scornful. She had been thinking that when he came in she would try to talk to him, but now the moment was passed. He undressed and got into bed, and said in his quick irritable way:

"Either turn out the light or go somewhere else. I'm tired."

"From working?" she asked, and then regretted swiftly. That was too much like that other time—that other pain.

Will did not answer, but turned his back and flung his arm, in the blue pajama sleeve, up over his eyes. Ernestine put out the lights except the small lamp at her side of the bed, and sat on the bed for a while, her feet drawn up and her arms clasped around her knees, thinking, her mind turning this way and that, her heart full of pain.

"Will?" she said at last gently, but he did not answer. She went around and stood beside him, looking down at him. He was asleep. His eyes and brow were hidden by the fold of his arm, but his wide mouth, his mobile, sensitive, excited mouth was in repose. Where had she seen that droop before? It was Elaine's. It was the gentle enduring fold of her mouth, when she had been little and sick so much, and had borne it all with such remarkable patience. Will's mouth was like that. Not in cut or form, but in the line of its expression. Will was bearing something. He was sick. He was enduring. Ernestine felt herself lost in a dark wood. Fiercely, passionately, she buried in herself her personal resentment and pain. She must find a way out for all of them. If she could see what to do! If something would show her the way!

Next morning Will ate his breakfast and went out, his manner more normal that it had been of late. He kissed her cheek, and said to her:

"Was I rough last night, kitten? You're pale. Sorry. I left the money in your desk drawer. Use it. It's all for you and the children, anyhow."

"Thanks, Will," she said indifferently, for now she did not care about the money at all. "Do you know anything about Loring and Lillian? We've not seen them for days. I've been spring housecleaning, and haven't even phoned her. I tried to get her just now, and no one answered."

"I think Loring and Pastano are having some trouble," said Will. "I saw Ruby a day or two ago, and he was black in the face about something Loring tried to put over on him. He'll be hard, if he gets turned against your brother-in-law. I'll call Loring at his office today, and see if I can find out what's up. Well, so long. I'm late."

Ernestine was busy with her family and household all morning, but with a sense of troubled foreboding in her heart. She went to the phone two or three times, but could not get Lillian's house nor Loring's office.

"Funny thing Lillian's maid isn't at home," she thought, but no one answered the prolonged ring at the other house. Ernestine went on about her work, and at eleven o'clock, Molly called her to the phone.

"Hello," said Ernestine.

It was a woman's voice, crisp, young and businesslike.

"Mrs. Will Todd?"

"Yes."

"This is the Van Hueten Clark Street Savings bank calling. Could you come down here right away?"

"Why—I don't know. Why should I?"

"I'm afraid I can't tell you that. You're to come here for a private conference. I believe it's important."

"Why, yes," said Ernestine. "I can come. But I don't understand. There's not a run on the bank, is there? I've all my savings—"

"Oh, no," said the cheerful voice. "Nothing like that, I assure you. Can you be here about ten minutes of twelve? The doorman will take you to the private office."

"Well," said Ernestine, "it all seems very mysterious, but I'll come. I'll be there at ten to twelve."

"Thank you, Mrs. Todd. And, please, I was to ask you to come by the Clark street car, and leave the car at Ontario street, instead of coming in your own car."

The crisp voice was disconnected. Ernestine put the receiver in place wonderingly. Well, there was no answer to her questions until she was there.

She left the street car at Ontario street and walked south. The doorman at the bank greeted her with a stiff nod, left his place and walked back through the big downstairs room. Ernestine followed him. He paused at the foot of the wide stairs that led to the balcony.

"The last door, on the left side of the balcony," he said to her in a low voice, and Ernestine went up the stairs, half frightened with this secrecy, walked forward again, toward the street, passed indifferent employees and opened an unmarked door, entered a private office, and closed the door behind her.

Ruby Pastano was standing by the green-curtained windows, looking down into the street through a tiny slit he held open with his finger. He turned to her.

"Ernestine!"

"Mr. Pastano!" She did not know whether she was relieved or more frightened. At least, here was some one familiar.

"Will you shake hands with me?"

He came to her, big, sober, non-committal and offered her his hand. Ernestine laid her hand in his big thick palm and noticed, as she did so, how extraordinarily long his fingers were, as he took her hand in both of his.

"I've been wondering, all the way over here, who it was that had sent for me," she said nervously. "I did not expect to see you—I don't know what I expected. I had a dreadful dream last night, and I've been frightened and nervous all day."

"Sit down, won't you?" the voice, silky, soft, as always, had in it a note of gentleness that went to Ernestine's heart, in spite of her formed and set prejudices against Ruby Pastano.

He drew up for her a chair upholstered in red pigskin, and she sat down, upright, ready for flight, on the edge of it. He seated himself before her on the empty desk.

"I didn't want you to come to my office, and I didn't want to go to your home, but I felt that I had to see you. Ernestine," he said gently, "do you believe that I am Will's friend?"

Ernestine felt that the occasion was momentous. She felt herself thrust back from the ordinary conventional judgments of her class and generation to something more fundamental. She answered naturally, honestly:

"Yes," she said, "yes, I do."

"Good," he said. "I've not done many unselfish things in my life, although I've done plenty that were dangerous—but for my own gain. But I'm going to do something for you now. I'm going to give you a chance to do something for somebody else. All last night I couldn't sleep, knowing that the plans that are coming forward today would hurt you. I knew that I must work some change if it were possible. I wanted to take into account the existence of little Ernestine, knowing that I must at least give her her chance. . . ."

"What do you mean, Ruby?" she asked, her thoughts turning to Will. How could he be involved with this man? He had never had any contact with Pastano except the free contact of friendship. He had never had a favor from him.

"No," he said, reading her thought, "not Will—but Loring—your sister's husband, Loring Hamilton. Did you know that he is ruined?"

"Loring—ruined? But how?"

"He will tell you, if he is fool enough to talk, that I have ruined him. I tell you that he ruined himself. He's in debt, he's in trouble, and he's under the shadow of an indictment—for bribing witnesses, in federal court—serious business, Ernestine."

"You mean—the grand jury? But how did this happen? Tell me, please."

"I cannot tell you everything. It's a long story, and involved, and, besides, it is unwise and unnecessary. I can give you a few facts. A week ago today your brother-in-law was secure. His security was dependent on his obedience. He had placed himself deliberately in a position where he had to do as he was told, in return for all that he had—and wanted. A week ago he decided to take a step that had been in his mind for some time. I knew that it was there. I was expecting it. Loring decided that he would break faith with me, cash in on his knowledge and cut the ties. He was thirsting for the water that he carried, but could not drink."

He paused, and the red of old anger burned in his cheeks.

Early Horseback Riders Disdained the Saddle

Ancient Greeks rode bareback or used a saddlecloth. Even the saddlecloth does not appear to have been used until the Fifth century. Xenophon says that the saddlecloth had been adopted by the Athenian cavalry, and from his advice as to the seat to be adopted pads or rolls seem to have been added. There were no stirrups until the time of the Emperor Maurice, 602. On a funeral monument of the time of Nero, in the museum at Mainz, is the figure of a horseman on a saddlecloth with something resembling the pommel and cantle of a saddle, but the first saddle proper is found in the so-called column of Theodosius at Constantinople, usually ascribed to the end of the Fourth century A. D., though it may be more than 100 years earlier.

In medieval times the saddle was much like that of the oriental saddle of today. In the military saddle of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth centuries the high front parts were armored. The side-saddle is said to date from the end of the Twelfth century.

"Great Britain"

Britannia Major, meaning Great Britain, was the name formerly given to the whole island to distinguish it from Britannia Minor, which was the name given to Brittany. James I used the title king of Great Britain, but without the sanction of parliament. It was not officially adopted until after the union of England with Scotland in 1707. After the union with Ireland in 1800 the country became known as the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1929, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1930 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
HENRY N. BENSON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT.
HENRY N. BENSON,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, February 27, 1930.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the constitution of the state of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1930, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1929 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 429, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3 of article 10 of the constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

"Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations or associations, however organized. Provided every stockholder in a banking or trust corporation or association shall be individually liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by him for all debts of such corporation contracted prior to any transfer of such stock and such individual liability shall continue for one year after any transfer of such stock and the entry thereof on the books of the corporation or association."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The Constitution, as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks or trust companies, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except banking or trust corporations or associations) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as the legislature may see fit.

Stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations will remain, as they now are, liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by them.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

First:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to Section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution authorizing the legislature from time to time to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

YES..........
NO...........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 430, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 2, article 6, of the Constitution, relating to the supreme court. This section now reads as follows:

"The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, but the number of associate justices may be increased to a number not exceeding four, by the legislature, by a two-thirds vote, when it shall be deemed necessary. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

Pursuant to the authority granted by this section the legislature in 1881 increased the number of associate justices to four.

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and six associate justices. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The supreme court, as now organized under the constitution, consists of a chief justice, and four associate justices, all elected by the people. In 1913, in order to take care of the increasing business of the court, the legislature passed a law providing for the appointment of two commissioners to assist the court in the performance of its duties. The act under which these commissioners are appointed provides that each shall receive the same compensation as a justice of the supreme court, and also provides that if, by amendment to the constitution, the number of associate justices shall be increased to six the office of commissioner shall without further act be abolished.

In practice the commissioners sit as members of the court, hear arguments, read briefs, take part in discussions, write opinions, and in general do the same work as the regular justices, but they have no vote in determining the final decisions of the court. The legislature cannot give the commissioners a voice in the decisions of the court, since the organization of the court is governed by the constitution.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to provide for the election of two more associate justices with full authority as members of the court, to take the place of the present two commissioners, who will then cease to hold office.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to provide for the election of two more associate justices of the supreme court with full authority as members of the court, replacing the present two commissioners, without additional expense.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Second:

FIXING NUMBER OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES.

Amendment of Section 2, Article 6, of the Constitution, to make provision for two elective associate justices of the supreme court to take the place of two court commissioners now appointed by legislative authority.

YES..........
NO...........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

By the adoption of Chapter 431, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to article 8 of the Constitution by adding thereto a new section to be known as section 8, and reading as follows:

"Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may be exchanged for lands of the United States as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

By section 2 of article 8 of the Constitution school and swamp lands owned by the state may not be disposed of other than at public sale. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to abrogate this requirement in so far as the disposal of such lands to the federal government is concerned by authorizing the legislature to provide for the making of direct exchange with the United States of such state lands in return for lands owned by the federal government.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate, under such conditions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe and to the extent necessary to effectuate exchanges of state, school and swamp lands for lands owned by the federal government, the rule requiring the disposal of school and swamp lands only by public sale. Such abrogation and the consequent provision for exchange of lands in pursuance of legislative enactment authorized by the proposed amendment will not impair or diminish the trust funds of the state arising from the sale of school and swamp lands, since the proceeds of sales of federal lands so acquired by exchange must, under the proposed amendment, be deposited to the credit of such trust funds.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Third:

EXCHANGE OF STATE AND FEDERAL LANDS.

Amendment of Article 8 of the Constitution, authorizing the exchange of public lands of the State for lands of the United States, as the legislature may provide.

To Voters of Marshall Couuty:

Having received the nomination for the office of County Treasurer, I come before you again for your consideration at the General Election on November 4, 1930.

As I realize that I am not very well known in some parts of the county, I think it is only fair to let you know who I am, and also my qualifications for the office.

I am a graduate of one of the leading Business Colleges in this part of the country, and have several years' experience as an accountant and general office work.

To the voters of the 67th Legislative District comprising Marshall, Roseau and Kittson Counties:

The 67th Legislative District is a large one and during the last several years has probably suffered more during the financial reaction than most of the other districts in the state. The work of getting back to normal is as a result a work in which everyone will have to take part. The work of a legislator will to a large extent have a bearing on this matter and I would like to do my share and as a result would appreciate very much your vote and influence at the coming election.

Prohibition

We read an item in the Bronson Budget for last week in which they made mention of the Lancaster Customs Officers coming to their town and raiding cars on the streets one night. They found two cars with two bottles of beer in each and arrested the parties owning them. One of the owners was fined $160 and $20 costs and 60 days in jail. The other fellow was fined $150 and 30 days in jail.

We consider this a high price to pay per bottle for home brew. Or what do you think?

However, these same officers may soon be down the line to see some other place we know of, and probably they will need a truck to take the loot home.

Under a new ruling of the post-office department, effective October 1, 1930, C. O. D. parcels can be held only fifteen days without demurrage charges.

Please call for C. O. D. parcels at once or they will have to be returned to the shippers.

F. A. GREEN
—for—
Representative in the State Legislature

To the Voters of Marshall County:

I take this opportunity of thanking you for the splendid vote you gave me, in placing me in nomination as one of the candidates for Representative for Marshall County. Having lost our crop of grain by hail, it becomes necessary for me to keep working, in order to earn money with which to buy feed, consequently I will not have the time or money to spare to enable me to make an aggressive campaign. I will have to depend on you to give me your vote and influence.

If elected, I pledge myself to do all I can to bring about a reduction of our heavy tax burden. I have, in the past two sessions, helped pass a bill requiring the state to pay taxes on the foreclosed Rural Credit farms. The Governor saw fit to veto these bills. If elected, I will use my vote and influence to repass that bill.

Once more thanking you for your support in the past, and assuring you that I will appreciate your support at the coming Election, I remain,

Yours truly, F. A. GREEN.

Doctor's 3 RULES
Big Help to Bowels

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork, every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning-out, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. This family doctor's prescription is just fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other helpful ingredients that couldn't hurt a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

Clean up that coated tongue, sweeten that bad breath, and get rid of those bilious headaches. A little Syrup Pepsin will soon free the bowels from all that waste matter that makes the whole system sluggish. You'll eat better, sleep better and feel better.

You'll like the way Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin tastes. The way it works will delight you. Big bottles—all drugstores.

Not Guilty as Charged

Mary's mother had some candy hidden in a drawer of the kitchen cabinet. When she went to get it, the candy was gone. Mary was the first to fall under suspicion.

"Did you take the candy I had hidden in the cabinet?" she asked Mary.

"No, I didn't take it," replied Mary with dignity. "I ate it!"

—22—

"I held notes on him as security for business that he transacted through his office—properties I could not afford to have in my name. He thought I would not dare to sell his notes, he having so much information about me. No use going into the ugly details. He woke up too late to find out that his transactions were with me—the company he was dealing with was mine—he sold my property to me. It was I who bought from him what he had no right to sell. I stopped payment on the checks he held, I had his notes, and he was holding—the bag."

"But how could you? That's not right. You couldn't do that."

"Why not?" asked Pastano. "I was cleverer than he. What could he do? What could he say? I called in his notes. Either he had to pay me, or I would sell them to his bank for discount. He put in his stone stock—sound property—and recovered his notes. Then he found all his debts due on the same day. He lost seventeen accounts in one afternoon—business taken right out of his office. He sold his car and yesterday he mortgaged his house. And today—unless it's stopped—he's going to be indicted."

Ernestine got to her feet.

"But, Ruby—how can you do this to Loring? He does know things about you—"

"Very little," answered Pastano evenly. "Fragments—nothing whole. Part of this deal—part of that. His own activities will shine much worse in court than his connections with me. Do you think I am fool enough to put myself in jeopardy with a man like Loring?"

Ernestine made a little moan, and he began to speak quickly, vehemently, with a strange sternness and justice in his face.

"He came to me—he sought the connection—he was eager for any work. He offered to do things for me that I wouldn't let him do. He was well paid, and he didn't play the game. His fees were big—business was thrown to him from a dozen directions inaccessible to him five years ago. He sat where he wanted to sit—in the lap of city politics, and he grew weary of his mistress. He wished to exploit her—desert her. So he schemed and planned. But you cannot get into the whirlpool and then out again—"

Ernestine, looking at him, felt the sucking breath of the vortex. "But what have I to do with this?" she asked. "What can I do for Loring? You haven't told me this without some purpose."

"First let me show you why I can do nothing for him myself—it is easier to start a landslide than to stop it. It was my intention—no, my determination—to ruin him, to have him debarred, disgraced, sent to the penitentiary, if I could. It seemed necessary. Here, all about me, are these young men—lieutenants—gangsters, if you like the newspaper word better. They are my army. We must have loyalty in any army. We must have obedience. Loyalty and obedience, first, because they have confidence in me, that I am wise, that I will take care of them while they stay with me, that I am competent to meet all situations. But if a man is disloyal, all the rest must see what becomes of him. Loyalty, first, because of confidence; second, because of fear. When admiration fails, fear remains."

"But you are not going to ruin Loring now?" she said eagerly. "You have changed your mind—you have some plan?"

"No," he said slowly, "no, not I. I have no plan to save Loring Hamilton. I have no desire to save him. I would not lift my little finger for Loring Hamilton. It is inevitable that he should fail, should be punished. Even if I wanted to do something for him now, I could not. His treachery is known to others as well as to myself. Money is needed. If I should withdraw money from my own private sources, or if I should withdraw money from funds that are available for gifts, when it is necessary, it would be instantly known. No—in the first place, I don't want to help Loring. If he were my own brother, I would feel that he must follow his course alone. Nor could I help him, even if I liked, but"—he looked at her intently so that for a moment it seemed that she was lost, hypnotized by his great dark eyes—"you can help him, if you like, Ernestine."

"Tell me," she whispered. "What can I do?"

He put his hand in his pocket and took out his big silver watch. Laying the flat of his palm upon it, he twisted it, unscrewed the back of the watch and took from between the outer and inner cases a small piece of paper, folded once across. He sat, his dismembered watch in one hand, and the piece of paper in the other, and said to her:

"I know that you have your own standards of honor—I have exposed myself, in this talk, knowing your code. But now, I must ask you if you are capable of secrecy. No one but Will must know of this. He must know."

"I promise," she said at once.

He put the folded paper in her hand, and kept his finger upon it, so that it remained closed.

"There is a name here. This afternoon, within an hour after this bank is closed—before four o'clock, to be exact, twenty thousand dollars, in cash, must be placed in the hands of this person, and the indictment against Loring will be dropped."

Ernestine was very pale. "A bribe?" she said, her throat dry. "But that's—wrong."

He was very gentle.

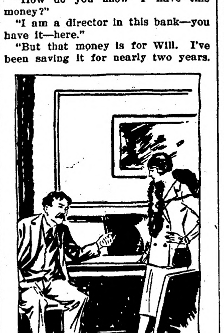
"Wrong, yes—no doubt. But we are at a place now—where it is the lesser evil, which must be chosen—not right or wrong. A bribe—ugly word. Yes, there is a regular scale of prices for indictments. This money must be spread. It will take twenty thousand dollars to do it. You have the money. I take a great risk upon myself—this talk, this name, this opportunity, but I wished you to have it."

He beamed upon her now—pleased as a child who has been good and waits for praise. Ernestine was very agitated.

"How do you know I have this money?"

"I am a director in this bank—you have it—here."

"But that money is for Will. I've been saving it for nearly two years.



"He Was Well Paid, and He Didn't Play the Game."

I can't give that money for Loring. It's Will's."

"I'll not pay for Loring," said Pastano sternly, and he shrugged, his face altered, hard. "Why should I? You can—if you won't, he's sunk—that's all."

"No, no," cried Ernestine, "not that—not Will's money. I won't do it, Ruby. I can't. Loring will have to go down in his own wreckage. Why should I pay a bribe for him? Why should I rob Will of his very chance, for Loring? This isn't just money—this is Will's future—his peace, his happiness—this is my marriage—this money."

He was silent. He stared at her. She could feel in him disappointment. He was disappointed in her! He, monster that he was, dared to judge her!

"You see," she said desperately, "Will isn't always going to be a cartoonist. He's going to do something else. He hasn't any sense about money. I learned about money, when we were poor, but Will has never learned. He's extravagant, foolish. I found out long ago that if he had fifty cents in his pocket, or fifty dollars, it was all the same to him. And then—I discovered that Will wanted to be an artist, that he wanted to work in colors, that he hated the cats. And I began to save. I've kept up a front on a small amount of money. I spent less than twelve thousand dollars last year, and Will earned thirty thousand. But it's been for Will. I'm not naturally economical, or close, but I did it for Will."

"Perhaps Will would want you to do this—ask him."

"Perhaps he would. It would be like him to throw away his chance for Loring. But Will doesn't know I've got this money. Nobody knows, except the bank clerks. I thought a savings account was a private matter. Will has a studio down near here—if he could study—if he could go to Paris."

"I know," said Pastano. "He rents his workroom from me. I've seen some of his stuff. Well—Loring can go to jail then, for all of me, and if you are subpenaed into court, to testify about things that happened at Langley lake three summers ago, don't say I didn't warn you."

He sighed. His eyes were sad and tired. The tears sprang down Ernestine's cheeks.

"Don't think I don't appreciate this—I know that you endanger yourself—your very life—by talking to me. I know enough about all this to know what you are doing—it's generous, but, oh, Ruby, it is Will I love—Will, all the time."

"Your sister—" he objected.

"Why should I sacrifice Will for Loring and Lillian?" she said passionately. "It will take me a long time to accumulate this money again. And simply to give it away—to send it out blindly, and not even know where it goes! Loring has always hated Will—has tried to harm him. And now you ask me to give up Will's chance. He can't wait forever. His gift will die, he'll go stale."

"Loring has loved you, Ernestine."

She stopped her incoherent speech. She looked at him with dark eyes, and her face grew very pale.

"That time," Pastano said, "when you were ill—when Elaine was born, we would not have found you, if it had not been for Loring."

"But Will found me," she quavered.

"Yes—after Loring had torn the town up—had organized a search—had warned me. Will would still be wandering about Sheridan Park. And after Will found you, what did he do? You might have died there, without proper care. It was Loring's practical energy and ability—his decision and his efficiency which saved you."

He got up and moved about restlessly. He seemed almost to plead with her.

"That's why I couldn't sleep last night. It came to me all the time—he loves our Ernestine, fool and traitor that he is. He would give everything he has—for her. It is her sister, her family, her family name. She is mixed in it—she will be hurt by it. So this morning, I came to town. I have seen the bank ledger from time to time. I have watched your private fortune growing with much interest, and known, or thought, that Will was ignorant of it. So this morning I came to town, and carefully I have made this possible. And now, you do not see it."

He was putting his watch together as he spoke, but he left the slip of paper in Ernestine's hand.

"It's one o'clock," he said. "The bank closes at three. Suppose you go and talk to Will. A woman ought not take a step like this, anyhow, without talking to her husband."

"I'm not going to give Will's money to Loring," Ernestine said despairingly.

Mr. Pastano opened the door for her, but did not answer her low "good-by."

Ernestine went swiftly down the stairs and out into the brightness of the street.

"I'm not going to ask Will," she thought stubbornly. "He'll just tell me to do what Pastano wants. I'm not going to do it."

She ran for a car going north and boarded it. She rode as far as Belmont avenue, jumped up suddenly and got out of the street car. A taxi stood before a drug store across the street. Ernestine ran across through the traffic and got into the taxi.

"Please hurry," she said, and gave him the address of the old office building near the river, where Will led his secret life.

She felt that she could not get to Will soon enough, now she was started. She paid the taxi driver at the door and went quickly into the dim and dusty doorway.

Chinese Leaders Split on Educational Plans

China, unlike most nations, has nothing that can really be called a national sport. Japan, in much the same circumstances, adopted baseball; but baseball in China has never caught on to any great extent. Mission schools and Y. M. C. A.'s, however, have done much to teach forms of sport to elementary and middle school students, with the result that basketball, tennis and football are beginning to prove fairly popular, but only among an extremely small percentage of the nation's many millions of youths. As far as the revival of folklore (which is being considered by the social education department of the ministry of education) is concerned, it is expected that the ministry will encounter difficulties. China is rich in folklore, but while with one hand the government is trying to encourage its revival, with the other hand the government is launching a bitter campaign against superstition. Much of China's ancient folklore deals with supernatural beings, and with historical and mythical characters endowed with supernatural powers. What is needed, according to educational leaders, is the development of a critical faculty among students and the populace which will enable them to disassociate themselves entirely from the million and one popular myths which form the basis of their mental texture, if not of their religious beliefs.

Unfounded Popular Belief

That a fire caused by lightning can not be extinguished with water is an old popular belief which still survives in many parts of the country, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. Fire is fire no matter how started, whether by a match, spontaneous combustion, or a flash of lightning. A fire produced by lightning has the same physical properties as other fire and can be extinguished in the same manner.

Divide Hatching Duty

Among the true ostriches of the old world several females lay their eggs in the same nest and the male sits on the eggs during the night while the hens take turns at the job during the day.

Three Sisters Drown With Hands Clasped

Escanaba, Mich.—Bodies of three young sisters, one a sixteen-year-old mother, were found clasped hand-in-hand in McDonald lake, near here.

The victims were Mrs. Lawrence Grenier, sixteen; Genevieve Laberty, eleven, and Leona Laberty, thirteen.

BRAVE BOY FIGHTS FULL-GROWN TIGER

Lad, Practicing Tarzan Stunts, Drops into Cage.

Los Angeles.—If Tarzan of the Apes lived outside of the pages of fiction he would be proud of his little worshiper—twelve-year-old Alfred Hill—who today fought a full grown tiger rather than show cowardice.

He asked surgeons in a whisper as they sought to save his life:

"But was I game—just like Tarzan?"

For weeks Alfred had read of Tarzan's thrilling experiences. Some day when he grew up he would emulate them. Meanwhile the boy swung from trees, climbed bluffs, played strange jungle games to prepare himself for the great adventures that were to be his.

Alfred was prowling about an artificial jungle at Luna Park zoo used by movie companies. He saw a dark inclosure; climbed through a trap door.

An angry growl rumbled through the artificial jungle. He had entered a tiger's cage. It was too late to retreat. Alfred's great adventure had come. He faced it manfully—did not cower or cry.

Alfred drew his pitifully inadequate weapon—a small pocket knife—and met the charge of the beast with slashes.

Attracted to the cage by the roars of the tiger and the battle shouts of the little hero, horrified keepers saw him stabbing the tiger as it clawed him mercilessly.

They tried to beat the large cat off with the staves. Failed. Not until the tiger was killed by a rifle shot was the youngster saved.

Keeper Melvin Koontz told police surgeons:

"He's the bravest kid I've ever heard of. He never whimpered once."

They told Alfred.

The boy smiled wanly, his voice trailing into an inaudible whisper:

"Aw, just wait till I grow up."

But Alfred's first great adventure was his last, for he died in the hospital.

Superstitious Mother Tortures Her Daughter

Los Angeles.—Convicted of beating her eight-year-old daughter, Jennie, in accordance with a superstition, Mrs. Jennie Papeleo, 9423 Compton avenue, was sentenced to serve 40 days in jail by Municipal Judge Sheldon.

Before passing sentence, Judge Sheldon denied a motion for probation filed by the woman's attorneys.

She was charged with inflicting cruel and unnecessary punishment on a child.

Probation Officer Minnie Barton, the court said, recommended that Mrs. Papeleo be not given probation.

Mrs. Barton reported that Jennie, since her birth, had been badly treated by her mother on account of the fact that the latter believed the little girl had brought a curse upon her by being born cross-eyed.

Jennie was forced for a time to live in a chicken coop in the rear of the Papeleo home, Mrs. Barton reported, and was beaten continually and ill-treated, not only by her mother, but by older brothers and sisters.

He Made Wife Take Job; She's Gunning for Him

Kansas City.—It was 100 degrees in the shade when two deputy sheriffs found a gray-haired woman sitting on a porch.

In her lap she cradled a .44 caliber revolver.

"No mystery," she answered officer's inquiries, keeping her eye on a boarding house across the street.

"I'm just waiting to kill my husband, John Madden. I went to a weed patch he was cutting and took a couple of shots at him awhile ago, but he ran away. I'm waiting for him to come home."

Her husband, Mrs. Madden explained, had forced her to take a job cooking.

Wedding Waits as Groom Goes to Watch Blaze

Connersville, Ind.—Garrett Reynolds can get married any day, at any time, but he can't see a fire that often. he decided when he left his bride-to-be shortly before the hour set for the wedding and hurried to a fire.

The plant at which Reynolds works caught on fire and the wedding was stopped until he could check up on the exact extent of the damage.

Dies at Mistress' Grave

Marlboro, Mass.—A yellow mongrel dog was found dead today on the grave of its mistress, Mrs. Alfred W. Strange. The dog had steadfastly refused to leave the grave in Maplewood cemetery since the owner's body was buried ten days ago.

LIVE RIGHT, LOVE RIGHT, FOR A HAPPY MARRIAGE

By ETTA WEBB

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MYRA bore a tray heavy with all the seasonable delicacies the restaurant afforded on that day's luncheon menu—asparagus tips, new potatoes cuddled in cream, chicken, strawberries. The outlay looked tempting even to a girl who handled food all day. The elderly couple who were to receive this fare sat opposite each other at a small table against the mirrored wall. In the light of the pink-shaded candles they glared at each other. They said coldly-stinging things to each other in low voices. Yet they looked so nice, dignified and prosperous. Her violet hat was expensive and she was carefully made up. He had the kind of mouth Bob had. At the thought Myra sighed.

They did not notice Myra as she placed the delicate food before them. They did not even glance at the food. They just went on quarreling in that polite, maddening way that made Myra long to box their ears.

"Your grievance against Raymond isn't a grievance, it is a grouch," the woman said. "You always did make a difference between him and Caroline."

"Caroline's got some common sense."

"Takes after you, I suppose."

"She does. Put Caroline on a desert island and she would manage to feed and clothe herself, or else she would build a raft and float off. But Raymond would starve without making a single effort. When I was Raymond's age I was supporting the whole family. All Raymond knows about money is spending it."

"And when I was Raymond's age I made the mistake of my life. You talk as if I were to blame for our son's extravagance!"

The chicken was getting cold. Myra withdrew. She was sick at heart. Squabbling—she hated it. These married couples made her tired. Yesterday the squabbling pair had been young. The girl had on the spiffiest ensemble suit. Seemed as if they had everything to be pleasant about. But they squabbled because the fellow had, or had not, paid attention to somebody else.

Marriage was fast losing its appeal for Myra. Familiarity with other people's marriages as well as other people's food was fast cloying her sense of the fitness of either. Myra had no home memories to come to her aid. Her father had died when she was six. Since then she and her mother had worked to the limit trying to get the twins up to where they could do for themselves. Pete was now earning a good bit after school hours and Marjory could do most of the work at home. Mom said if Bob and Myra wanted to get married they could go ahead and do so. But Myra hung back. That couple yesterday, and now this one today, one at the beginning of the journey, and the other nearing the end. It didn't take much to start a row, kids or a bit of jealousy, anything. She and Bob might have to live together for thirty years—thirty years was a long time in which to squabble.

"I'm scared to death of the whole business," Myra sighed. "I don't say I'd turn into a nagger. I don't say Bob would ever give me one of those cold, deadly looks. But we might get to hate each other. You can't tell. I guess I will keep right on my job. You can't quarrel with a good paying job."

The elderly couple gave Myra a generous tip for the food they had not enjoyed.

That night Myra went home very tired. She went to bed early. She hoped she would wake up next morning to rain and leaden skies. But when she awoke the sun was shining warm and bright. On bright, warm Sundays Bob always came with the car and took her and Mom and the twins far out into the country. It was a thing to look forward to all the week. But today she was not going. Since she was not going to marry Bob the Sunday trips were all off.

She tried to get Pete to go over and tell Bob not to come, but Pete refused to be bluffed with the story of Myra having a headache. Pete knew that Myra was not subject to headaches.

An hour later Bob came. He had his car washed and it was all shiny blue. Bob looked fine and so happy that Myra quailed. Well, she would go just this once.

They drove to a favorite spot, where there was a meadow, and creek, and clump of graceful, swaying willows. Immediately the twins pulled off shoes and stockings and went wading. Mother withdrew with a blanket for a nap. Myra and Bob were left to one of their long, cozy chats. But, contrary to custom, she produced a magazine.

"Mind if I read, Bob?"

"Go ahead. I'll smoke."

Myra opened the magazine. The story was all about a couple that quarreled over a dog. Disgusting! She peeped over the edge of the magazine at Bob. He was looking straight at her. His blue eyes were deep and peaceful. A streak of sunshine lay on his crisp brown hair.

"You are an awfully sweet-looking girl, Myra," he said.

Myra blushed. She held the magazine up before her face, her hands trembled and the pages of the magazine shook. She hated to say "No" to Bob. But her mind was made up once and for all not to get married.

"Is there room for us here, too?" a pleasant voice inquired.

Myra jumped. Standing close behind her was a tiny old woman. She had a big basket covered with a white cloth on her arm. Behind the smiling old lady was a round, rosy, jolly-looking old man with another basket, an auto robe and two gay-colored pillows. The couple had just stepped from a car that was so old-fashioned that it looked a bit absurd.

"Of course there is room. Help yourself." Bob sprang up, but he was dismayed by the intrusion. Myra, on the contrary, was relieved and insisted upon the old people's sharing the shade with them.

"I'm Sally Betts," the old lady prattled on as Myra and Bob helped the old gentleman spread the blanket and arrange the pillows for the old lady's comfort. "And this is Hiram, my husband. Take a squint at the sky, Hi, and if it's getting time to eat we'll open the baskets."

"It's time to eat all right," said Hiram. "Everything's ready, good company, cool shade and if these young folks have got as good appetites as we have I say eat."

Myra motioned to Bob. They were quietly withdrawing when the old lady stopped them.

"Oh, don't go," she pleaded. "Stay and have a bite with us. We'd enjoy some company, so we would."

"But there are five of us," protested Myra.

"What if there is? I've got a-plenty for everybody. We always come prepared to ask company, and we usually find some one."

"Better stay, young folks. Sally will be disappointed if you don't. That was one reason why we came to this spot; we saw you before we stopped."

Myra called her mother and the twins and the seven gathered round the picnic baskets, which were augmented by the boxes of lunch Myra's mother had brought. Everybody went wild over the fluffy little biscuits Sally Betts served. Everything that came out of the baskets was delicious.

"Sally's a good cook, if I do say it," Hiram Betts said proudly. "But she couldn't boil water without burning it when we were married."

"How long have you been married?" Bob asked.

"Fifty-one years. He was twenty-one and I was eighteen." Aunt Sally laughed softly. "We've had our ups and downs, Hi and I have, but we've had each other."

"That's all that's counted," agreed Hiram solemnly.

"Fifty-one years! A good long time to be happy together," Bob said thoughtfully.

"I bet you've squabbled like all the rest of them," Myra said.

Aunt Sally looked at the dark, vivid young girl thoughtfully.

"Folks that love right don't squabble. Live right, love right, is the recipe for a happy marriage."

"There you are!" Bob reached over and laid his hand on Myra's.

The afternoon shadows were lengthening when Bob and Myra bundled mother and the twins into Bob's car. Myra sat on the front seat with Bob.

"Fifty-one years from now you and I are coming back to this very spot to have a picnic just like those old dears did," Bob declared.

Myra reached out and patted Bob's hand which was guiding the car. The future, and marriage no longer held any dark doubts for her.

Ancients Put Faith in Certain Lucky Numbers

The number 6 enjoyed great prestige with the ancients because it was discovered that the sum of its divisors, 1, 2 and 3, is equal to six. The followers of Pythagoras venerated the number 6 on account, as was said, "of the integrity of its parts and the agreement existing in it," calling it marriage and health and beauty.

According to the early Christians, God created the earth in six days rather than in one, because of the perfection of the number 6. The entire human race sprang from the eight souls in Noah's ark, and as eight is not so perfect as six, we have been living under a disadvantage ever since.

A curious light is thrown by ancient commentators on the account in Genesis of Jacob's gifts to Esau, which included 200 ewes and 20 rams. According to them this number 220 is a hidden secret, being one of a pair of numbers of which the divisors of either add up to the other. Thus the divisors of 220 are 1, 2, 4, 5, 10, 11, 20, 22, 44, 55 and 110, which add up to 284. The divisors of 284, on the other hand, are 1, 2, 4, 71 and 142, which add up to 220.

Such a pair of numbers was called "amicable" and was much employed by ancient peoples in sorcery, particularly in connection with love charms. If one could manage it so that the lady of his choice swallowed one of these numbers, then by swallowing the other himself a long and tedious courtship became unnecessary.

Jacob, anxious to appease the wrath of Esau for certain rather questionable transactions, resorted to this device. It is interesting that his thrifty soul prompted him to use the smaller of the two numbers!—University of California Chronicle.

Sergeant Was Shrewd, but Unlucky Day Came

While in training in France, Sergeant Matthews usually carried a huge pack while on the morning hikes. The wonder was that he bore up so nicely under the heavy burden. When all the rest were jaded at the end of the hike the sergeant appeared fresh and in a jovial mood.

One morning when hiking with packs we were marched to a large field where to our amazement a regimental inspection of equipment was to take place. We proceeded to lay out equipment in an orderly fashion. Our captain walked hurriedly by in a critical mood. He stopped abruptly in front of Sergeant Matthews' pack. "Open up your pack" commanded the captain. Wherewith, the sergeant undid the pack with all eyes focused in his direction, revealing a large stove pipe.—L. A. Kirkpatrick, Indianapolis, Ind., in American Legion Monthly.

Here's Real Honesty

Somewhere off Cox ledge, which is 14 miles southeast of Block Island, there lurks an honest man. Jerry Littlefield, master of the schooner Evan N, is authority for the statement. When he hauled up one of his lobster nets with just three lobsters in it, he found in the pot a tea can that had been wrapped and wrapped in adhesive tape to stand the pressure of 19 fathoms down. When the can was opened Captain Littlefield found five $1 bills in it to pay for the lobsters some one had taken.—Boston Globe.

Ah, but the Prestige!

"Why don't you buy a bicycle, Pat?" said his neighbor. "You would find it useful in going back and forth to your work."

"Faith," said Pat, "I'd as soon walk afoot as ride afoot."—Exchange.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1929, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1930 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
HENRY N. BENSON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT.
HENRY N. BENSON,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, February 27, 1930.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the constitution of the state of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1930, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1929 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 429, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3 of article 10 of the constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

> "Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organised for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

> "The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations or associations, however organised: Provided every stockholder in a banking or trust corporation or association shall be individually liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by him for all debts of such corporation contracted prior to any transfer of such stock and such individual liability shall continue for one year after any transfer of such stock and the entry thereof on the books of the corporation or association."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The Constitution, as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks or trust companies, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except banking or trust corporations or associations) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as the legislature may see fit.

Stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations will remain, as they now are, liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by them.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

First:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to Section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution authorizing the legislature from time to time to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

YES..........
NO..........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 430, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 2, article 6, of the Constitution, relating to the supreme court. This section now reads as follows:

> "The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, but the number of associate justices may be increased to a number not exceeding four, by the legislature, by a two-thirds vote, when it shall be deemed necessary. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

Pursuant to the authority granted by this section the legislature in 1881 increased the number of associate justices to four.

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

> "The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and six associate justices. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The supreme court, as now organized under the constitution, consists of a chief justice, and four associate justices, all elected by the people. In 1913, in order to take care of the increasing business of the court, the legislature passed a law providing for the appointment of two commissioners to assist the court in the performance of its duties. The act under which these commissioners are appointed provides that each shall receive the same compensation as a justice of the supreme court, and also provides that if, by amendment to the constitution, the number of associate justices shall be increased to six the office of commissioner shall without further act be abolished.

In practice the commissioners sit as members of the court, hear arguments, read briefs, take part in discussions, write opinions, and in general do the same work as the regular justices, but they have no vote in determining the final decisions of the court. The legislature cannot give the commissioners a voice in the decisions of the court, since the organization of the court is governed by the constitution.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to provide for the election of two more associate justices with full authority as members of the court, to take the place of the present two commissioners, who will then cease to hold office.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to provide for the election of two more associate justices of the supreme court with full authority as members of the court, replacing the present two commissioners, without additional expense.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Second:

FIXING NUMBER OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES.

Amendment of Section 2, Article 6, of the Constitution, to make provision for two elective associate justices of the supreme court to take the place of two court commissioners now appointed by legislative authority.

YES..........
NO..........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

By the adoption of Chapter 431, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to article 8 of the Constitution by adding thereto a new section to be known as section 8, and reading as follows:

> "Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may be exchanged for lands of the United States as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

By section 2 of article 8 of the Constitution school and swamp lands owned by the state may not be disposed of other than at public sale. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to abrogate this requirement in so far as the disposal of such lands to the federal government is concerned by authorizing the legislature to provide for the making of direct exchange with the United States of such state lands in return for lands owned by the federal government.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate, under such conditions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe and to the extent necessary to effectuate exchanges of state, school and swamp lands for lands owned by the federal government, the rule requiring the disposal of school and swamp lands only by public sale. Such abrogation and the consequent provision for exchange of lands in pursuance of legislative enactment authorized by the proposed amendment will not impair or diminish the trust funds of the state arising from the sale of school and swamp lands, since the proceeds of sales of federal lands so acquired by exchange must, under the proposed amendment, be deposited to the credit of such trust funds.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Third:

EXCHANGE OF STATE AND FEDERAL LANDS.

Amendment of Article 8 of the Constitution, authorizing the exchange of public lands of the State for lands of the United States, as the legislature may provide.

YES..........
NO..........

To Voters of Marshall Couuty:

Having received the nomination for the office of County Treasurer, I come before you again for your consideration at the General Election on November 4, 1930.

To the voters of the 67th Legislative District comprising Marshall, Roseau and Kittson Counties:

The 67th Legislative District is a large one and during the last several years has probably suffered more during the financial reaction than most of the other districts in the state. The work of getting back to normal is as a result a work in which everyone will have to take part. The work of a legislator will to a large extent have a bearing on this matter and I would like to do my share and as a result would appreciate very much your vote and influence at the coming election.

Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT.
HENRY N. BENSON,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, February 27, 1930.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the constitution of the state of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1930, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1929 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 429, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3 of article 10 of the constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

"Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations, or associations, however organized. Provided every stockholder in a banking or trust corporation or association shall be individually liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by him for all debts of such corporation contracted prior to any transfer of such stock and such individual liability shall continue for one year after any transfer of such stock and the entry thereof on the books of the corporation or association."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The Constitution, as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks or trust companies, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except banking or trust corporations or associations) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as the legislature may see fit.

Stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations will remain, as they now are, liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by them.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

First:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to Section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution authorizing the legislature from time to time to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 430, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 2, article 6, of the Constitution, relating to the supreme court. This section now reads as follows:

"The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, but the number of associate justices may be increased to a number not exceeding four, by the legislature, by a two-thirds vote, when it shall be deemed necessary. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

Pursuant to the authority granted by this section the legislature in 1881 increased the number of associate justices to four.

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and six associate justices. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The supreme court, as now organized under the constitution, consists of a chief justice, and four associate justices, all elected by the people. In 1913, in order to take care of the increasing business of the court, the legislature passed a law providing for the appointment of two commissioners to assist the court in the performance of its duties. The act under which these commissioners are appointed provides that each shall receive the same compensation as a justice of the supreme court, and also provides that if, by amendment to the constitution, the number of associate justices shall be increased to six the office of commissioner shall without further act be abolished.

In practice the commissioners sit as members of the court, hear arguments, read briefs, take part in discussions, write opinions, and in general do the same work as the regular justices, but they have no vote in determining the final decisions of the court. The legislature cannot give the commissioners a voice in the decisions of the court, since the organization of the court is governed by the constitution.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to provide for the election of two more associate justices with full authority as members of the court, to take the place of the present two commissioners, who will then cease to hold office.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to provide for the election of two more associate justices of the supreme court with full authority as members of the court, replacing the present two commissioners, without additional expense.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Second:

FIXING NUMBER OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES.

Amendment of Section 2, Article 6, of the Constitution, to make provision for two elective associate justices of the supreme court to take the place of two court commissioners now appointed by legislative authority.

YES..........
NO..........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

By the adoption of Chapter 431, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to article 8 of the Constitution by adding thereto a new section to be known as section 8, and reading as follows:

"Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may be exchanged for lands of the United States as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

By section 2 of article 8 of the Constitution school and swamp lands owned by the state may not be disposed of other than at public sale. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to abrogate this requirement in so far as the disposal of such lands to the federal government is concerned by authorizing the legislature to provide for the making of direct exchange with the United States of such state lands in return for lands owned by the federal government.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate, under such conditions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe and to the extent necessary to effectuate exchanges of state, school and swamp lands for lands owned by the federal government, the rule requiring the disposal of school and swamp lands only by public sale. Such abrogation and the consequent provision for exchange of lands in pursuance of legislative enactment authorized by the proposed amendment will not impair or diminish the trust funds of the state arising from the sale of school and swamp lands, since the proceeds of sales of federal lands so acquired by exchange must, under the proposed amendment, be deposited to the credit of such trust funds.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Third:

EXCHANGE OF STATE AND FEDERAL LANDS.

Amendment of Article 8 of the Constitution, authorizing the exchange of public lands of the State for lands of the United States, as the legislature may provide.

To Voters of Marshall Couuty:

Having received the nomination for the office of County Treasurer, I come before you again for your consideration at the General Election on November 4, 1930.

WM. L. PETERSEN
For State Senator

To the voters of the 67th Legislative District comprising Marshall, Roseau and Kittson Counties:

The 67th Legislative District is a large one and during the last several years has probably suffered more during the financial reaction than most of the other districts in the state. The work of getting back to normal is as a result a work in which everyone will have to take part. The work of a legislator will to a large extent have a bearing on this matter and I would like to do my share and as a result would appreciate very much your vote and influence at the coming election.

Respectfully,
WM. L. PETERSEN.

F. A. GREEN
—for—
Representative in the State Legislature

To the Voters of Marshall County:

I take this opportunity of thanking you for the splendid vote you gave me, in placing me in nomination as one of the candidates for Representative for Marshall County. Having lost our crop of grain by hail, it becomes necessary for me to keep working, in order to earn money with which to buy feed, consequently I will not have the time or money to spare to enable me to make an aggressive campaign. I will have to depend on you to give me your vote and influence.

If elected, I pledge myself to do all I can to bring about a reduction of our heavy tax burden. I have, in the past two sessions, helped pass a bill requiring the state to pay taxes on the foreclosed Rural Credit farms. The Governor saw fit to veto these bills. If elected, I will use my vote and influence to repass that bill.

Once more thanking you for your support in the past, and assuring you that I will appreciate your support at the coming Election, I remain,

Yours truly, F. A. GREEN.
Dated at Stephen, Minn. Oct.7,1930.

THE VANCE MYSTERY SOLVED

By LILLIAN MACDONALD

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

IF YOU don't know Vance you have missed seeing a very pretty corner of the country. It is forest land and one expects red men to part the sumacs and tread the noiseless pathways. The town is small and doesn't speak of itself as a city. There's one movie house—not a talkie.

But the pride of Vance is its Old People's home, a truly beautiful building and (what is more rare) well managed. Few of the old folks grumble, excepting just enough to keep them cheerful. They have to fall back on their rheumatism or their fanciful pasts. They have well cooked food and plenty of it.

They even have (or had, I should say) a beauty. Mrs. Rosie Grant was exactly seventy-seven, had eighteen children, fifty grandchildren and a "great," or so, all alive and all handsome. Her husband had passed on at the trifling age of ninety, some years before. "I married an old man, but a good one," she says, lightly.

At Wayce farm lived the Wayce couple alone, for their children were all married. Then suddenly, without warning, Grandpa Wayce appeared, ex-soldier (in the Civil war), and a fine old fellow for his years.

"I do hope we can take proper care of him," said Susan Wayce. "He looks strong, but you can't be too careful of old folks. We must see he doesn't go out nights and catch cold."

Grandpa liked to be petted. He took the best chair as a matter of course, and was ready to indicate exactly the parts of the chicken he preferred. He told the minister his church was too draughty for old folks. He trotted to the circulating library and found books to occupy his long days.

"He's just a dear, and not a bit of trouble!" exclaimed Susan.

Henry Wayce, who was a shrewd observer of character, said nothing.

It was quite all right until grandpa took to being out nights.

At first poor Susan was terrified. She wanted to call the town marshal and have him sought for. But Farmer Wayce shook his head.

"Don't you do that, Lite. I know the Wayces, and grandpa isn't like any other old man I ever saw. You don't know the Wayces. You know me. I'm not so much a Wayce as a Telfer. Dad said I took entirely after ma, and you ought to be glad of it." He said no more, but looked cryptic.

At the same time Mrs. Mudd, the matron at the Old People's home, was sadly disturbed in her mind. Like every one else, she loved old Rosie Grant, for that aged coquette had managed to hoax all kinds of favors from her, and it is a fact that nothing wins the heart of a trained social worker so surely as to be gently imposed upon.

For four nights Rosie had not appeared at prayers, and when her room was visited she was not there.

"I felt like the summer air would do me good," was all the explanation given.

"You know the rules, Mrs. Grant," said the matron.

Rosie dimpled, and gave a curious suggestion of tossed curls, although her silvery locks were thin and neatly pinned.

"Now, Mrs. Mudd," she said, "you like us real well, and I enjoy this lovely air. Besides, you like us to keep our windows open."

Mrs. Mudd sighed. "I'm glad she's an old lady," she said to herself. "She must have been a handful when she was young."

Down at the Wayce farm Susan questioned grandpa.

"Don't you know you might be killed by a motor car, running around at all hours of the night?"

"So might you," was the testy reply, and Susan forbore to remark she was always safely in bed around ten o'clock, herself.

Then one night grandpa failed to report. Susan telephoned the police station and was told that the marshal already had his hands full because one of the old folks had disappeared from the home.

Poor Susan began to cry. She loved old grandpa, and was sure "something dreadful" had happened.

"Some crazy person is murdering the poor old folks, and they've killed grandpa," she sobbed to Henry.

"You don't know the Wayces," he said when he'd heard the story, and then he whistled.

"I've a theory," was all he would say, however, and he insisted that Susan undress and go to bed, doing that same thing himself.

The next day dawned a shade lovelier than any summer day Susan had seen before. She felt a resentment that nature should ignore human anguishes and set the stage, as it were, for a joyous comedy when poor dear grandpa—but, there! news was coming. Wasn't that motor car stopping right at the gate? She pushed a last hairpin into her hair and smoothed her dress, and ran downstairs. Henry, she saw, was approaching the arriving car with exasperating deliberation.

She nearly fell over with surprise.

For out stepped grandpa in a new suit, and he handed out a woman with what was amazingly like a pre-Civil war flourish—Susan had seen it in the movies.

Susan gasped.

"Well, if it isn't Rosie Grant!" she cried, "but how in the world did you two meet each other? Were you rescued together or what?"

"Rescued, indeed!" Rosie tossed her head, "I should not. Tell her, Brucie," Rosie turned to grandpa, who looked a trifle sheepish.

"This lady isn't Rosie Grant any more. She's Rosie Wayce. Now, don't get peevish, folks. You've treated me fine, and I've liked being with you real well for a visit. But a man likes his own home, after all, and my Rosie, here, finds the same. She can't get the pork and beans she's craving where she's been staying, and she likes going out evenings in summer time the way I do. We have a lot of tastes in common. So we thought we'd get married. Now, I have a nice little bungalow, but there's some work to be done, so suppose we stay with you for a few days, a honeymoon, like, and of course we're prepared to pay you. Only, no restrictions. We're old enough to know when to go in and out and what we can eat."

Henry Wayce looked at his wife. Far too dazed, she was, to speak a word.

"Told you you didn't know the Wayces," he said triumphantly.

Tiny Tropical 'Possum Sought by Scientists

A tiny opossum no bigger than a mouse, with nine little ones clinging to her fur, was found hiding in a bunch of bananas by a grocer in Waco, Texas, and turned over to the zoology department of Baylor university. Dr. G. E. Potter, head of the department, reports the find in the magazine, Science.

These tiny tropical opossums have been reported as banana-bunch immigrants a few times before, but this specimen seems to set a record for the size of the family traveling. Previously discovered specimens have had only two or three young ones. Doctor Potter states that the mother was seen several times to run her sharp snout under one of her offspring on the floor and toss it into the air and on to her back, where it dug its little paws into her fur and wrapped its tail around hers, after the manner of the young of our larger native opossum.

Doctor Potter notes that all these mouse-like opossums thus far found on bunches of bananas have been females, usually with young ones. He suggests that an animal so encumbered tends to hide in the bunch when it is disturbed on the plantation and subsequently in shipping, instead of trying to escape as the males may possibly do.

It is quite likely that more of these interesting little animals arrive in this country than are ever reported. Grocers may mistake them for mice and kill them. It is hoped that whoever finds a tiny opossum-like animal hiding in the fruit section of a grocery store or delicatessen will take the trouble to capture it and send it as quickly as possible to the nearest college biology department or zoological park.

The Simpler Way

Emil Ludwig, the German historian, said on his departure for Germany:

"One thing I don't like about America—you have too many divorces. Why marry at all if you're going to divorce?

"Why not emulate our modern German ways? Two modern German girls, Gretchen and Elsa, were lunching in a restaurant when a waiter brought Elsa a note. Greatchen must have recognized the handwriting, for she said:

"'That's a note from Baron von Wienerwurst.'

"'Yes, dear,' said Elsa. 'I'm engaged to the baron, you know.'

"'Oh, are you?' said Gretchen, 'I was engaged to him myself last month.'

"'The dear!' said Elsa, 'I wonder whom he'll marry eventually?'"

The Hunter

Matthew Luce, Harvard's director of morals, said at a Boston musicale the other day:

"Morals, to the ultra-modern mind, have a wrong, a degraded significance. The ultra-modern idea of morals is like Wash White's idea of hunting.

"'Whar's you' paw?' Mrs. Wash White asked her little son, when she got home from Mrs. Pinckney Dabney's kitchen in the evening and found Wash missing.

"'He gwine huntin',' said Junior. 'He gwine huntin', an' he say ter git de 'taters an' onions ready fo' a fine stew in de mawnin'.'

"'Fine stew—huntin', huh? Did he teck de shotgun wiv him?'

"'Nome; de dark lantern.'"

Voracious

A voracious trout with a pair of false teeth he had picked up in the river, bit the bait of Lester Green and put up a terrific battle that dragged Green seven miles down the river, according to the correspondent of the Waterbury (Conn.) Republican's Prospect. The battle occurred in Roaring brook near Bethany, Conn. The fish bit, and after the seven-mile trek down stream, Lester braced himself against a rock and pulled the line with all his strength. Suddenly something gave way and Lester fell back in the water and the trout disappeared. Examining the line, Lester found he had hooked a perfect set of false teeth. It is thought the fish was using the false teeth to augment his own.

Bull Fights Plane; Tosses It on Horns

Dover, Del.—Just how resentful a bull can be toward an airplane was demonstrated when a plane landed in the Raughley field.

The pilot left the machine while he came to Dover. A bull charged the machine, lifting the tail end of the plane high in the air with his head and horns.

HORSE BETRAYS THREE ROBBERS

Leads Detectives to Home of Accused Brothers.

Toronto.—An amateur detective once won fame by finding a missing horse; and, when asked what method he had followed, replied: "I figured out where I would go if I were a horse; then I went there, and there he was."

Toronto detectives followed a somewhat similar course in tracing thieves who attempted to break into a grain and feed warehouse here.

The burglars were frightened away, leaving behind a horse and wagon, in which they had planned to carry their loot away. Suspicion fell upon three brothers, John, Arthur and William Hopper. They denied that they had ever owned such a horse or wagon as those in the hands of the police.

Detectives, however, were skeptical. Accordingly, they turned the horse loose from the city pound, and followed it, as it ambled leisurely along the roadway. The animal made its way straight to a stable in the rear of the Hopper home.

The brothers persisted in their denial, but they'll have to tell their story to a judge now. And they're faced with the loss of the horse, if it is theirs, as well; for the animal is about to be sold at auction to pay for its feed bill. The Hoppers haven't yet claimed it, and can't very well do so, now.

Horrified Pilot Fights Rattler Mile in the Air

Scott City, Kan.—An unprecedented battle in the air between a horrified pilot and a rattlesnake was verified when "Happy" Wiggins, aviator, obtained snake bite treatment at a Scott City hospital.

Wiggins said he was pounding his plane through the clouds almost a mile above the ground when the snake reared its head over the cockpit.

"I jumped back," said Wiggins, still violently ill from effects of the snake poison, "but the snake jumped after me.

"I tried to grasp it and pitch it from the plane, but it coiled and struck me twice before I finally was able to fling it away."

While Wiggins was engaged in his battle with the rattler, which apparently crawled into the plane while it was at rest in a hangar, the ship hurtled down, out of control.

Wiggins finally pushed the snake overboard, righted the ship, and landed so hastily in a pasture that he almost wrecked the plane.

A rancher hurried out and dragged Wiggins, almost unconscious from fright and poison, from his seat. The rancher hurried him here, where hospital attaches said he would recover.

Canadian Girl Revived After an Hour in Water

Winnipeg.—Floating face down, seven-year-old Mary Calder was taken from the water and pronounced dead.

But members of the St. John's Ambulance association happened to be in the crowd that gathered. They went to work. At that time they did not know the little girl had been in the water so long.

After two hours' strenuous work, life signs were displayed. Two hours later the child was out of danger. Then the mystery of the affair was disclosed.

Charles Brown had stood on the wharf for half an hour observing what he thought was an old bathing suit floating some distance out. He was not interested. Then the waves brought it nearer, and he thought there was a semblance of a child's body concealed.

Hastily he plunged in and brought it to shore. The child had been missing for more than an hour and she had apparently been floating all this time, face down, in the lake. Medical men can't fathom her extraordinary escape.

Snake Picks on Youth, Who Bites It to Death

Wooster, Ohio.—There was a snake about these parts that tried to bite and got bitten.

Allen Manson, seventeen, bit the reptile, a blue racer, when it coiled around Manson's neck. Manson bit and kept on biting till the snake relaxed. Then the youth killed it with a stick.

Kills Trio and Self

Zenta, Jugoslavia.—In a state of drunken insanity and rage Gabriel Budasch, a sixty-year-old Zenta peasant, stabbed to death his wife, his son, his seventeen-year-old mistress and himself when he was frustrated in an attempt to attack the thirteen-year-old child of a neighbor.

Happy Again

"Nothing seemed to please Betty Jean," says Mrs. James W. Nolen, 113 Ceanter St., Dallas, Texas. "She was feverish and fretful. Her appetite was poor; she seemed bilious.

"A child specialist recommended California Fig Syrup and it certainly made my little girl happy, well again in a hurry. We have used it over three years for all her upsets."

Mothers by thousands praise this pure vegetable product. Children love it. Doctors recommend it for feverish, headachy, bilious, constipated babies and children; to open the bowels in colds or children's diseases.

Appetite is increased by its use; the breath is sweetened; coated tongue is cleared; digestion and assimilation are assisted; weak stomach and bowels are strengthened.

LEVI for Auditor

To Voters of Marshall County:

Dear Voters:

As I am not very well known in a large portion of the county, and unable to meet more than part of the several thousand voters before election, I wish to introduce myself thru the papers.

I was born in Minneapolis 45 years ago, and came to this county with my parents in infancy, living in Foldahl and Wright townships. Since marriage have made our home on a farm in Foldahl the last 20 years. I have never indulged in booze or gambling. I have held several local official positions, and am now serving as town clerk and school treasurer. I am "self-educated," having a talent for self-study, pursuing some line of study ever since school days, my hobby being mathematics and astronomy. To prepare myself for the office I am seeking, have for the last three years studied "Higher Accountancy" thru a correspondence course by LaSalle Extension University, Chicago, containing: elements and principles of commercial and municipal accounting, public auditing and investigations, systematizing, organizing, business law, etc.

Be sure to read my ad next week.

Sincerely

Levi G. Johnson.

DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION

To Be Held at Thief River Falls October 29 and 30

Dairymen, creamery operators, and others interested in the dairy industry in the Red River Valley are invited to gather at Thief River Falls October 29 and 30, for the twenty-seventh annual convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's Association. Several outstanding speakers will contribute to a program planned to provide educational features as well as special entertainment, which the Commercial Club of Thief River Falls is sponsoring. The officers are planning several worth-while and interesting features.

Some of the speakers will be John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes, Congressman C. G. Selvig of Crookston, J. H. Hay, Assistant Dairy and Food Commissioner, and Dr. W. E. Peterson, Associate Professor of dairy husbandry at the University Farm, who recently discovered the cause of milk fever, and developed a cure which is proving of untold value to the dairy industry.

Morris Sorenson of Pelican Rapids, president of the Minnesota Creamery Operater's Ass'n., will have something of interest to tell the creamery operators in regard to their salary schedules, according to C. M. Pesek, secretary of the association.

An attendance contest is sponsored by the association this year, conducted on a mileage basis, so that all creameries in the Valley will have an equal chance to win. The awards will be in the form of bronze tablets to the winning creameries, engraved with the names of the directors and operators who have contributed to the success of their creameries and to the convention.

Awards will also be given for high scoring butter, and to the winners in the butter judging contest. The names of the grand prize winners in the boys' and girls' Red River Valley Essay Contest will also be announced.

Several districts of the Minn. Creamery Operator's Ass'n. and the Land O'Lakes District are planning special prizes for high scoring butter.

Martin Olson, who spent a few weeks here and at Thief River visiting with relatives, left Sunday night for his home at Pontiac, Mich.

Several candidates have called in town the past week. The time between now and election is getting short and the boys are busy meeting the voters.

The Oscar Bottem family, who have been living on the M. O. Halvorson place the past few years, have now moved onto the Frederickson farm a mile north of town.

Mrs. C. W. Christianson and sons, Ellsworth and Ellis, of Freeborn, Minn., formerly of Holt, Minn., came last week to visit at the H. B. Young home and with other friends, returning to their home Wednesday of this week.

Prepared and circulated by Oscar T. Johnson, Olso, Minn., in his own behalf.

There's scarcely an ache or pain that Bayer Aspirin won't relieve promptly. It can't remove the cause, but it will relieve the pain! Headaches. Backaches. Neuritis and neuralgia. Yes, and rheumatism. Read proven directions for many important uses. Genuine Aspirin can't depress the heart. Look for the Bayer cross:

Salisbury Cathedral

England's most beautiful cathedral, at Salisbury, has been called England's finest poem in stone. It is indeed the most harmonious and best proportioned of the English cathedrals, for it was built within the short space of forty years (1220-1260), where many others have taken centuries to complete them. It is a pure example of early English architecture, unalloyed by foreign influence. Its spire, rising from the very middle of the church, is the loftiest in England.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

The doctor's tonic did not seem to help me and when a friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to take that instead. I kept on until I felt well again. It brought back my strength. Today I can do anything, thanks to the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. William Parent, 1415 W. 62nd Street, Seattle, Washington.

Analyzing ...YOU...

With the New Science of Syllabics

By C. J. COFFMAN

Dean of All the Enumerators

Irene

As the eye indicates our wakefulness, so the first syllable in this name, IR, really signifies the wakefulness of the city. This naturally makes you most adapted to city life, where you will not only be most at home but where your greatest success is almost certain to be found.

A Typical Irene Eye.

Your second syllable, ENE, tells us a lot about singing. This means not only songs of a joyful, happy nature, but the song of triumph, which you will sing because of your watchfulness for opportunity in the city.

Only a few people can succeed, and then be peaceful. You have real ability here, because you avoid the continual urge of ambition, the dynamic drive for more of success and of applause.

The whole word Irene means peace, quietness and rest.

The letter I in your name, like the human eye in your body, is able to radiate great peacefulness among your friends and loved ones. At times this wakefulness may have a dash of fire in it, like that of Irene Bordoni, the French actress and vaudeville artist.

Taking the letters separately in your name I signifies Immaculate, Innocent; R stands for Righeteousness and Restoration; E stands for Entre and Entertainment, while N stands for both Nobility and Novelty.

Whatever advice is given you, you will do as you like about following, but the principal bit of advice that you really need is to be kind to your inferiors.

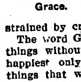
The reason for this is that you have the tendency to attract around inferiors who grow. These may, quite unexpectedly, catch up with you or even go ahead of you.

To you especially applies the conclusion of the little fable about the grasshopper who spurned the acquaintance of the caterpillar, and was afterwards snubbed by the butterfly who had been the caterpillar.

* * *

Grace

Your name begins with G, the seventh letter. To the enumerator this represents God, but to everyone else you will need to bring out the God within you. It is quite probable that you will be deeply religious in your own way, but not easily restrained by creeds or dogmas.



The Eyes of Grace.

The word Grace really means to do things without friction, and you are happiest only when you are doing things that way.

Your deep and studious eyes show the ability to penetrate the thoughts of others. You can mother them, even though you disagree with them.

With an almost unlimited courage you combine a peculiar timidity, a fluttering of heart and mind, like a frightened bird, making almost a paradox in your life.

Taking off the G in your name we find the word RACE. This indicates the speed with which you can accomplish a thing your heart is set upon. It also has a relationship to the pride you take in skill of fingers.

The first three letters of your name, GRA, relate to an old Greek root, to write. In this you will probably find your greatest career. Among the modern Graces who have exemplified this is Grace Coolidge.

Taking off the first two letters of your name gives us the word ACE. This gives you the desire as well as the ability to hold to a single ideal, and to demand the singular possession of what you feel to be your own.

You have one of those peculiar natures that gives you access to what you set your mind upon, but this is curiously restrained by the timidity that I mentioned. Ordinarily you are not lonesome even when alone, your mind is so filled with things to learn and to do.

Go right on courageously then, Grace, knowing that all things come to him who waits, if you continue to labor while you wait.

(©, 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

Checkers' Many Names

In England the game of checkers is known as draughts; in France, Jeu des Dames; Italy, das Damenspiel; Holland, Damrod; Poland, Dama; in the Arabic of Egypt, Damah. The recurrence of the forms of "Dame" is attributed to the fact that part of the board and some of the draughts of Queen Hatass, daughter of Thothmes, who lived in Egypt 1600 B. C., have been found.

Wife Sore as Hubby Returns 13th Time

Elizabeth, N. J.—It wasn't that her husband deserted her 13 times that annoyed Beatrice Karris so much as the fact that he always came back. Stanley was held in $300 bond to keep away from his wife.

GROCER WINS IN DEAL WITH CROOK

Sale of Tea Nets Him Cent and Half Profit.

Kansas City.—"May I have a piece of string to tie my bundle?"

"Certainly," William J. Embree, grocer, told the stranger who asked the question.

Work of tying the bundle, which was broken, disclosed a quantity of suit material.

"Present for my brother," explained the man. "Just got here from England, looked for my brother, but he's moved."

"Too bad," sympathized Embree, turning to wait upon another customer who just had entered.

"Ten cents' worth of tea," said this man.

"What have you there?" the customer asked the man who had lost his brother.

The contents of the package was explained in the broad accent of the Englishman.

The customer inspected the cloth. Wanted to buy it. Offered $130 for it.

"I don't like your nationality," the Englishman told the bargainer. "I cawn't sell to you."

The customer took Embree aside. "I'm Goldberg," he said. "Country club plaza tailor. You buy this cloth. It's worth $300. I'll go to my shop and get the money. Give you $25 for making the purchase for me."

But Embre had heard Goldberg ask the Englishman, "You're not going to take that back to New York, are you?" Nothing previously had been said about New York. Embree was suspicious.

"Nothing doing," he told Goldberg. "I think I'll tell the police about this Englishman." He started for the telephone, his visitors for the door.

Goldberg was carrying the tea, the Englishman his bundle.

"Dime for the tea," said Embree, dialing for police headquarters. It was tossed onto the counter.

The men disappeared as Embree made connections with the police.

"It's an old game," he was told. "Couple of confidence men. Cloth was worth probably $40."

"O. K. with me," Embree replied. "I made a cent and a half profit on the tea."

Pumps Three Days as Sharks Circle Craft

Jacksonville, Fla.—Hero of a strange saga of the sea is Jack Grant, a huge negro employed as one of the crew in a motor cruiser owned by Paul Rice of this city. Grant saved his own life and that of Rice after an explosion disabled the craft far from shore and sprang leaks in the seams of its hull.

For three days and nights without a rest Grant pumped and managed to keep the craft afloat until another vessel happened by. Ten minutes after Grant and Rice were rescued their cruiser sank in 200 feet of water.

Grant and Rice were knocked unconscious, but water lapping at his face revived the negro, although Rice was seriously injured.

Time and again, when it seemed impossible for Grant to continue pumping, he would glance over his shoulder and groan:

"Look at dem sharks, boss!"

Then the water would flow more freely from the small pump while the maneaters continued to circle the craft. Grant was on the point of collapse when the other boat finally reached the spot.

Hot Stove Thrower's Wife Is Given Divorce

Chicago.—If you suddenly saw a hot stove come hurtling through the air at you—how would you feel?

Mrs. Ethel Huseby, 2901 McVicker avenue, appeared before Judge Robert Gentzell complaining about her husband, Marshall.

She married Marshall, a chauffeur for her father's coal, wood and ice company, on March, 1926. They lived happily until October 5, 1929, when Marshall developed this stove mania.

"And he threw this stove—a hot one—right at my client," recited Attorney Irving Eisenman.

Judge Gentzell pondered. Then—

He granted the divorce and directed Marshall to pay $15 a week alimony for the support of his wife, and a daughter, Ethel, aged three.

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Little "Ifs" That Might Have Changed History

The word "if" has been the cause of much reminiscing ever since Adam said, "Oh, if we had never eaten the apple."

Professor Hearnshaw, of London university, has prepared a book called "The Ifs of History," in which he says:

"If Cleopatra's nose had been an eighth of an inch longer she would have failed to excite Julius Caesar or Mark Anthony and the history of the world would have been changed.

"If the battle of Actium had not been fought, the empire of Augustus would not have been established, neither Pontius Pilate nor Herod would have ruled Syria and Rome might have remained a stranger to the Christian faith.

"If the Spanish garrison of Gibraltar had not been so pious as to be attending church when the English troops attacked, the rock would not be in English possession today."

The London Purdah

Katherine Mayo, the distinguished writer, was talking to a group of New York reporters about the campaign of the women of India to abolish the purdah, or shut-in harem life.

"And here," said Miss Mayo, "I'm reminded of a story about the emir of Afghanistan.

"The emir once visited London, and of course a royal dinner party was given in his honor. Well, when all the guests were seated, the emir looked around at the glittering assemblage of princesses and duchesses and countesses and what-not, and then said to King Edward in a loud voice:

"'I see you do the same here as we do in Afghanistan—keep all the pretty ones shut up.'"

Chimes Played by Rain

Children of the vicinity of University high school, Sawtelle, Calif., can hear, when it rains, the chimes in Louis Zwieg's "singing tower." Holes carefully placed in the dome built on the top of the sheet-iron house that this veteran of the Indian war of the late sixties built for himself, permit raindrops to drip down on chimes made of discarded glass lampshades, arranged around a ring of copper tubing. Some who have heard the most pretentious chimes in the country have said this rain-drop-played instrument is better for soft, sweet, melodious tones.

Newlyweds Get Vow Cards

Cards reminding husbands and wives of their marriage vows are being issued by the Mothers' union of England. They are of a size convenient for carrying in the pocket, and are printed in silver and white. They record the date and place of the marriage and the names of the groom and bride, and they reproduce the essential portions of the marriage service which have reference to marital fidelity. It is planned to give a card to every bride and one to every groom at the time of the ceremony.

CHAPTER XIV

—23—

Will and Ernestine Choose

Will was nailing up a wooden box. The shelves and the table were empty. Ankle deep on the floor was a litter of papers.

"Ernestine!" He stopped, a hammer in hand, to stare at her.

"What are you doing?" she exclaimed, and then, with a little cry of horror she stooped and picked up from the rubbish on the floor, a torn picture.

"Oh, Will, how could you tear it up? It was good—it was wonderful. Why did you destroy it?" With trembling hands she tried to put the ragged pieces together on the drafting desk. He looked at her astonished, voiceless. Before her, racked against the wall, was the sketch of herself, with Elaine on her arm.

"I'm glad you didn't throw this away—oh, Will, I like it so! But what are you doing? Are you moving?"

"What do you mean, Ernestine?" he said sharply. "Did you know about this office—when have you been here?"

"Of course I knew," she said impatiently, confused to find the need for explanations, now, at this vital hour. I've known you had this office, since last spring. I knew, long before that, that you were hankering for something—some new work. You remember the night you made this picture?" She picked up the sketch of herself. "You remember? Of course you do. I knew then, that you were working. Lillian had told me she saw you in this neighborhood, and I came here the next day, and looked at all your work. Oh, Will, don't look at me so! I wasn't spying on you! You were so strange, and I was very unhappy—I had to know what you were doing. But aren't you going to work here any more?"

He laughed strangely.

"Rent's due tomorrow," he said. "I decided to let it go. I'm closing this office, and I'll never open another. I suppose, since you knew I was working here, that you were worried about the cats—but you needn't have worried—I'll stay with the job. I've given up my wild ideas. We'll keep the income—that's what counts."

"Why Will," she said swiftly, "you don't think there's any conflict between your desire and mine, do you? That's what I've been saving for—all this time. I knew that you would want to quit the cats, and I've saved a great deal of money—you'll be astonished. I had to know—it was right for me to know. It's made it possible for us to build a reserve. And why should I worry about the cats? Do you think I want you to stick to the cats, if there's something bigger, something more compelling upon you? Why, Will, Will—all I want is just what you want." Suddenly she remembered her errand, with a wail. "Oh, Will, Pastano wants the money for Loring—a bribe. Loring's in terrible trouble. He'll have to go to jail, but, oh, I don't want to give them the money for him. It's your money, Will—don't give it away—don't let them take it from us."

He caught her wrist and held it hard.

"Are you out of your senses?" he asked sternly. "What do you mean—money? What money have you?"

She opened her purse and took her small savings deposit book from it. She opened the book, and put it in his hand, the total across the narrow page. His eyes were wide, incredulous. He rubbed his hand across his face.

"It's yours, Will," she said with sudden gentleness. "I have robbed you of every cent I could get from you, and I've lived as cheaply as I could, and I've banked the difference—for you."

Deep within her she heard a warning bell. She remembered that they had much to tell each other. She laid her hand upon his arm, and said in the same low tone:

"Look at me, Will."

He looked at her—his brilliant black eyes fixed on her brown eyes—he looked at her deeply, with astonishment, and suddenly Ernestine was filled with a strange power and wisdom. She passed out of self-consciousness and was controlled and guided by deep instincts and ancient mother wisdom. She moved toward Will, put her face up to his and kissed his lips.

"Will," she said, smiling up at him, her lovely face alight with feeling, her tender mouth curved in a smile of sweetness, "Will, I love you. You forget it. You ignore it—you make love a burden instead of a support. I've seen it in the deeps of your artist's mind—that love betrayed and entrapped you, instead of letting you free. Haven't you thought that?"

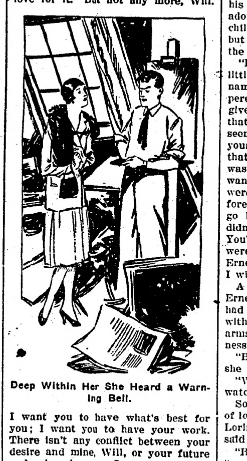
His arm trembled a little under her hand.

"Only once," he said, and his face flushed, "only once—the day after I had made that picture." He motioned to the picture she still held in her free hand. "The next day, I knew that I could not go on with my dreams, I knew I would have to quit it—that day, I felt so—it seemed as though—" He paused, stumbled on, with courage. "It just seemed to me—a woman is so sweet and warm in one's arms—so generous—so lovely; and then, suddenly, there are a house, and a car, and children, and nurse maids, and cooks, and doctors—a thousand things—just suddenly. I shouldn't have felt so—I fought it but it got me. I'm telling you—you asked me."

Her eyes were full of tears.

"I knew, Will—not just that way, but I knew—that's why I've been saving and been silent—that's why I didn't ask you any questions. But, Will, I love you. It's the biggest thing in the world to me, Will. It means to me what these pictures—what this work means to you. I'm not an artist—I'm not even artistic—but I know what your work means to you, because I love you. And when you shut me out, Will, it was for me just as it was for you when you were shut off from your work. I want you to be happy." She was solemn, young, uplifted, filled with the glory of unselfishness, her face a blurred and lovely picture seen through tears.

"Dear heart, what does the money matter? Why, Will—even more than the children—yes, though I ought not say it—more than the children, than my people, than myself. You've told me how you felt, and I'll tell you, that for a little while, for one dark time, I was jealous of your work—of your love for it. But not any more, Will.



Deep Within Her She Heard a Warning Bell.

I want you to have what's best for you; I want you to have your work. There isn't any conflict between your desire and mine, Will, or your future and mine, because I want what you want."

His face began to shine. He reached up, took her hand and held it.

"Ernestine," he whispered, and stopped as she leaned forward, her head against his shoulder, her face hidden so, while she went on swiftly:

"Will, I knew you were tired of the cats. Will, I spent only about a third of what you earned, last year. But you wouldn't tell me, you didn't want to talk to me, so I just went ahead, planning for the time when you would. I knew that you wouldn't want, probably wouldn't take, the money I'll have from grandmother and from papa, some day. But this is yours—it's savings from your earnings, Will. It's for your stake."

"You understood," he said hoarsely.

"Will," she said again, and now her arm was around his body, the picture up between his shoulders, "I'll tell you again—I—"

"No, no, Ernestine," he said with quick passion, "you can't let me; we can't go back. Do you know what it means? A living—I think I could make that—but it will be precarious—I've been into it all with some thought. It will be years before I can make even half what the cartoons bring me. Even if I get darned good—there's not the money to be found— I've thought it all out. I've been up and down and around this problem. I've tried to save some, too. But it won't work. It's precarious—it's too scanty. I've been through it all, and made up my mind. Don't tempt me with your savings—they wouldn't last us a year."

"If we went back to the West side, back to the old house, I could do my own work, and the children and I could live on the trust fund, until you got started. You could keep this studio, and you could go to Philadelphia and to Paris and study."

"Would you—would you do that—for me? Ernestine, my wife." He kissed her, and she shook the tears from her own lashes and drew him down and pressed her lips against his eyes.

"It wouldn't be necessary for you to do that, derling," he said to her, and he laughed a little. "It wouldn't be that bad. I could make a living—and you've your trust fund, and your grandmother has promised you the house at Langley lake. No, you won't have to go back to the West side—you can keep Molly, I believe. We can manage that much, Ernestine, with good luck and good management."

"Oh, Will," she said to him, "I almost wish it would be hard like that again. I've been so lonely—longing to help you, feeling outside. What does the car and the house and the things mean if I'm cut off from you? I know I can't help you with your painting. I know that travail is yours—that's your work—your life. It must be first with you, Will. And that's right. Gifted people can't choose. But if your work must be first, to you, you can understand what love and marriage mean to me. That's my life. And if I can feel that you can go on—because I understand—"

They were both crying, his arms were around her—tight—tight. As their tears mingled and they stood together in the long embrace, the kiss that was free from passion but frought with tenderness, the purest and holiest feeling, true married love, welled over them. It seemed to Ernestine, straining so in his arms, that for the first time she was truly wife to Will. Not only bride, bride of his body, star of his imagination, object of romantic adoration, not only the mother of his children and the keeper of his house, but wife—wife—in the deep places, the secret places of love.

"Ernestine," he whispered, after a little, and she wept afresh to hear her name so on his lips as he had whispered it when first they loved, "forgive me—that I didn't understand, that I didn't confide in you. You seemed always to have a child in your arms, a thousand needs. I felt that this other was a foe to you. I was stupid, blind. I thought you wanted the money—needed it. You were hard with me that summer before I made the cats. I didn't want to go back to that bad time again. I didn't know how wonderful you are. You're my good luck—you always were. I'll never forget it again. Oh, Ernestine, I'll do big things for you—I will."

A clock somewhere boomed two, and Ernestine started in his arms. She had remembered Loring—at last. She withdrew herself from her husband's arms and made a gesture of helplessness.

"But here's this business of Loring," she said.

"What is it about Loring?" he asked, watching her.

So with the enchantment, the throb, of love still on her, she told him about Loring—about all that Pastano had said to her that morning.

"But of course," he said at once, "you must let me take the money for you—at once. Give me the slip of paper."

She gave it to him with a reluctant sigh, and he gave a whistle as he looked at it.

"How could you have refused Pastano?" he asked. "Think what it would mean to your family—to your mother. And Lillian—with Loring dragged through the mud—"

"But Will! The money's yours—it's what we've just been talking about. It's your chance."

"I don't need twenty thousand dollars," he said quickly, and then gave a laugh of pure happiness. "Why, Ernestine," he said, "if you understand—if you know what it's all about—if you can live that economically and if you're behind me, I'll take a chance on it. Give the money for Loring—we can wangle it. After all," he added more seriously, "the understanding—the way I feel now—is worth more than the money. Let Loring have the money, we're rich. When we were young and poor we did as we liked. But after we got a little money we weren't free agents any more. The big income restricted us more than the little one. Look how Loring was bound by money! Let's let it go. After all, only beggars can choose!"

"If you'll quit the paper and go ahead with this work, if you will stick to your own dreams, I'll gamble with you," she said.

"It's done," he answered. He reached for his coat and hat, and looked at his watch at the same moment.

"We'll have to go right back to the bank. Thank God, you've got the money and don't begrudge it. Nothing can stop us, now."

And before they went out into the dark and narrow hall, they kissed again, hand in hand, simply, like children pledging a secret.

Ernestine saw Ruby Pastano near the bank entrance and, though he bowed formally and did not speak, he gave her a flashing, radiant glance, like the flash of a mirror held in the sun. She knew that he understood, from the happy countenance and from Will at her side, that they were looking after Loring.

Demand for Dwarfs Met by Inhuman Exploiters

Dwarfs were the lapdogs of medieval times. And so popular were they that many merchants specialized in selling them to the nobility.

"Marc Antony owned a dwarf," writes M. R. Werner in Liberty, whom he called, ironically, Sisyphus. In Rome there were dwarf merchants who, when they could not obtain natural specimens for the emperors and nobles, manufactured dwarfs by undernourishing normal babies, or by binding their limbs to prevent full development.

"Tiberius, Domitian and Heliogabulus paid high prices to their dwarf merchants, who experimented constantly to supply the demand. Catherine de Medici, in order to secure a regular supply of dwarfs for her court and as presents for her friends, caused all the dwarfs of her establishment to be married in a large scale effort to produce a race of midgets. The marriages, however, were uniformly barren, and her majesty was sadly disappointed."

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Queen's Crucifix Added to Vatican Treasures

The pope has recently added a very important, though quite unostentatious looking crucifix to the already large and priceless collection which he possesses. This crucifix was carried by Marie Antoinette almost up to the moment of her execution and is made of wood and brass.

After the queen had made her confession, an hour or so before her execution, she handed the simple little crucifix to the priest . . . almost her last earthly act. Some time later the priest gave the crucifix to his niece, who lived in Toulouse.

As she lay dying she asked the cure to select some little object as a keepsake. He chose Marie Antoinette's crucifix. Later he became Monseigneur Ricard and it was he who bequeathed the relic to his holiness.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1929, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1930 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
HENRY N. BENSON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LEGAL DEPARTMENT.
HENRY N. BENSON,
Attorney General.

St. Paul, Minnesota, February 27, 1930.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State:

In compliance with the provisions of section 46, General Statutes 1923, I furnish you herewith a statement of the purpose and effect of proposed amendments to the constitution of the state of Minnesota which are to be submitted to the electors of the state at the general election in 1930, in accordance with certain acts adopted by the legislature at the 1929 session thereof.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 1.

By the adoption of Chapter 429, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 3 of article 10 of the constitution relating to corporations. This section now reads as follows:

"Each stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business, shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"The Legislature shall have power from time to time to provide for, limit and otherwise regulate the liability of stockholders or members of corporations and co-operative corporations or associations, however organized. Provided every stockholder in a banking or trust corporation or association shall be individually liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by him for all debts of such corporation contracted prior to any transfer of such stock and such individual liability shall continue for one year after any transfer of such stock and the entry thereof on the books of the corporation or association."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The Constitution, as it now stands, makes every stockholder in any corporation, excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing or mechanical business, liable for the debts of the corporation, if the corporate assets are insufficient to pay the debts, up to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held or owned by him, in addition to any sum that he may owe the corporation on account of his stock. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize the legislature to prescribe and regulate by law the liability of stockholders or members in all corporations including co-operative corporations or associations, however organized, except stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate the present fixed rule of stockholders' liability prescribed by the constitution, except in the case of stockholders in banks or trust companies, and to place the matter of prescribing and regulating the liability of stockholders in all corporations, co-operative corporations or associations created under the laws of this state (except banking or trust corporations or associations) entirely within the control of the legislature, subject to change from time to time as the legislature may see fit.

Stockholders in banking or trust corporations or associations will remain, as they now are, liable in an amount equal to the amount of stock owned by them.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

First:

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS IN CORPORATIONS.

Amendment to Section 3, Article 10, of the Constitution authorizing the legislature from time to time to prescribe and limit the liability of stockholders in corporations.

YES..........
NO..........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 2.

By the adoption of Chapter 430, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to section 2, article 6, of the Constitution, relating to the supreme court. This section now reads as follows:

"The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and two associate justices, but the number of associate justices may be increased to a number not exceeding four, by the legislature, by a two-thirds vote, when it shall be deemed necessary. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

Pursuant to the authority granted by this section the legislature in 1881 increased the number of associate justices to four.

If amended as proposed, this section will read as follows:

"The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and six associate justices. It shall have original jurisdiction in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, both in law and equity, but there shall be no trial by jury in said court. It shall hold one or more terms in each year, as the legislature may direct, at the seat of government, and the legislature may provide, by a two-thirds vote, that one term in each year shall be held in each or any judicial district. It shall be the duty of such court to appoint a reporter of its decisions. There shall be chosen, by the qualified electors of the state, one clerk of the supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and the judges of the supreme court, or a majority of them, shall have the power to fill any vacancy in the office of clerk of the supreme court until an election can be regularly had."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

The supreme court, as now organized under the constitution, consists of a chief justice, and four associate justices, all elected by the people. In 1913, in order to take care of the increasing business of the court, the legislature passed a law providing for the appointment of two commissioners to assist the court in the performance of its duties. The act under which these commissioners are appointed provides that each shall receive the same compensation as a justice of the supreme court, and also provides that if, by amendment to the constitution, the number of associate justices shall be increased to six the office of commissioner shall without further act be abolished.

In practice the commissioners sit as members of the court, hear arguments, read briefs, take part in discussions, write opinions, and in general do the same work as the regular justices, but they have no vote in determining the final decisions of the court. The legislature cannot give the commissioners a voice in the decisions of the court, since the organization of the court is governed by the constitution.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to provide for the election of two more associate justices with full authority as members of the court, to take the place of the present two commissioners, who will then cease to hold office.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to provide for the election of two more associate justices of the supreme court with full authority as members of the court, replacing the present two commissioners, without additional expense.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Second:

FIXING NUMBER OF SUPREME COURT JUSTICES.

Amendment of Section 2, Article 6, of the Constitution, to make provision for two elective associate justices of the supreme court to take the place of two court commissioners now appointed by legislative authority.

YES..........
NO..........

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. 3.

By the adoption of Chapter 431, Laws 1929, the legislature has proposed an amendment to article 8 of the Constitution by adding thereto a new section to be known as section 8, and reading as follows:

"Any of the public lands of the state, including lands held in trust for any purpose, may be exchanged for lands of the United States as the legislature may provide, and the lands so acquired shall be subject to the trust, if any, to which the lands exchanged therefor were subject."

The Purpose of the Proposed Amendment:

By section 2 of article 8 of the Constitution school and swamp lands owned by the state may not be disposed of other than at public sale. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to abrogate this requirement in so far as the disposal of such lands to the federal government is concerned by authorizing the legislature to provide for the making of direct exchange with the United States of such state lands in return for lands owned by the federal government.

The Effect of the Proposed Amendment:

The effect of the proposed amendment, if adopted, will be to abrogate, under such conditions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe and to the extent necessary to effectuate exchanges of state, school and swamp lands for lands owned by the federal government, the rule requiring the disposal of school and swamp lands only by public-sale. Such abrogation and the consequent provision for exchange of lands in pursuance of legislative enactment authorized by the proposed amendment will not impair or diminish the trust funds of the state arising from the sale of school and swamp lands, since the proceeds of sales of federal lands so acquired by exchange must, under the proposed amendment, be deposited to the credit of such trust funds.

The ballot used at the election should have printed thereon the following:

Third:

EXCHANGE OF STATE AND FEDERAL LANDS.

Amendment of Article 8 of the Constitution, authorizing the exchange of public lands of the State for lands of the United States, as the legislature may provide.

YES..........
NO..........

To Voters of Marshall County:

Having received the nomination for the office of County Treasurer, I come before you again for your consideration at the General Election on November 4, 1930.

As I realize that I am not very well known in some parts of the county, I think it is only fair to let you know who I am, and also my qualifications for the office.

I am a graduate of one of the leading Business Colleges in this part of the country, and have several years' experience as an accountant and general office work.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on election day, November 4, 1930.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me, and if elected I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of County Treasurer carefully and impartially to all.

Sincerely yours,

Politics Rampant

We don't fancy the idea of taking a crack at candidates at the last moment, but there are so many rumors out in the 5th commissioners district now that we simply can't hold our horse in any longer.

Therefore we are taking the liberty of defending our local candidate against some of these breaks that are being made about him and we are asking every fair-minded voter to weigh the statements they have heard very closely before they take much stock in them, and also consider the persons who make the statements and find out why they make them.

Mr. Fricker has not, as far as we know, spent his time during the present campaign in going around and telling voters that he would do a lot of things for each one and for their communities if he is elected. He has stood out like a man and told the voters that he would do what was right for all, which is the only honest course to follow.

Mr. Johnson of course, says that during these long years in Marshall County he has been interested in the welfare of all the people. Yes, We see that now as he was interested in getting a good sum of County money tied up in a closed bank over in Grygla in which he was interested. Is this some of the old interest for the people? If so, we are not in the mood for it, as the county money is the taxpayers money and should not be throwed away.

Mr. Johnson only mentions the fact that he is a farmer and does not mention that he is in the service of the Department of Rural Credit.

We have also been advised that the Department of Rural Credit does not pay any township or school taxes towards the 5th District while Mr. Fricker is employed by one of the largest tax payers in Eastern Marshall County.

Do you not think it would be advisable to elect a Commissioner for the 5th District who would not have to play politics in order to fulfill his campaign promises?

THINK IT OVER.

Diogenes Under Suspicion

We suppose one rumor they started about old Diogenes as he went peering around looking for an honest man was that he probably stole his lantern.—Columbus, Ohio, State Journal.

N. S. A. News

The Eleventh Annual Parents' Day celebration and reunion will be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture. Crookston, on Saturday, Nov. 1. Visitation of classes and the inspection of the station's buildings and equipment will take place during the forenoon. Christmas Seal Sale

Appointment of Supt. R. B. Perry as Local Manager for the 1930 Christmas Seal Sale in Holt is announced by the Minnesota Public Health Association.

Although dates for the sale are from Thanksgiving Day to Christmas, plans for distributing the seals are already under way. Wide spread use of double-barred cross seals on all holiday mail is to be an objective in this year's campaign, according to the local directors. The seals make possible health and anti-tuberculosis activities in each county and also help support the state and national organized campaign against the dreaded White Plague.

Dorcas to Meet

The Dorcas Society will meet at the Hans Larson home Tuesday evening November 4th.

Serial Story Begins Next Week

Scarcely less dramatic than the World war has been the revolution in Russia, one of the stupendous events growing out of the great confilict. You have read much in the news accounts of the Bolshevists and their rule and no doubt have tried to picture to yourself the remarkable conditions that have prevailed. It requires a great novelist to put such a picture before you in words. The work was accomplished by the late Herbert Quick in his story entitled, "We Have Changed All That." almost the last of his finished writings, when came his untimely death. We are plesed to announce that we have secured this story in serial form for the NEWS.

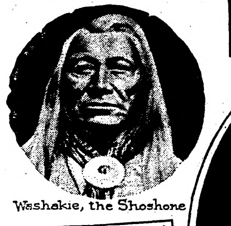
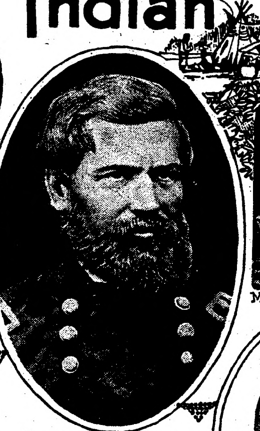
Famous Fighter, and Friend, of the Indian



Washakie, the Shoshone

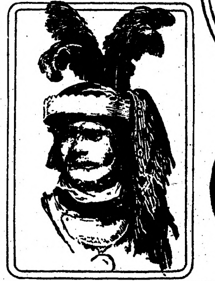
Chief Joseph, the Nez Perce



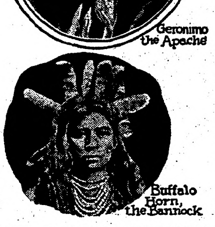
Gen. O. O. Howard

Manuelito, the Navajo

Geronimo the Apache



Billy Bowlegs, the Seminole



Buffalo Horn, the Bannock

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE hundred years ago there was born in New England a boy who was destined to become one of the most famous Indian fighters in American history. And paradoxical as it may seem, this fighter of Indians also became known as one of the best friends the Indian ever had.

The date of his birth was November 8, 1830; the place was on a farm near Leeds, Maine; and his name was Oliver Otis Howard. It would seem that from the beginning Destiny ruled that his career should be closely linked with the fate of the red men, not just those of one tribe but of many tribes. As a boy he heard from the lips of his grandfather stirring tales of Indian warfare during the Revolution. When he went to West Point as a cadet at the United States Military academy he came in contact with many army officers who had served on the frontier against the wild tribes beyond the Mississippi, among them Maj. George H. Thomas, who had received three brevet commissions for gallant conduct in Indian fights and who, as General Thomas, was to be hailed as "the Rock of Chickamauga" in the Civil war.

Howard himself rose to the position of major general of volunteers in the Civil war, and repeatedly distinguished himself during those four years. He left his right arm on the bloody field of Fair Oaks during a gallant charge at the head of the Sixty-first New York infantry and won for himself the medal of honor. He received the thanks of congress for his "skill and heroic valor" at Gettysburg, and for his gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Ezra Church and during the campaign against Atlanta, Ga., he was brevetted major general in the regular army.

His contact with the red men began almost immediately after he was graduated from West Point in 1854. In December, 1856, he was ordered to report to Gen. W. S. Harney, a distinguished Indian fighter, in Florida, where a remnant of the Seminoles who had refused to go west with the main portion of the tribe after the close of the second Seminole war, were continuing their raids on white settlements under their leader, Chief Billy Bowlegs. Howard was placed in command of an expedition to round up these recalcitrants and although it failed of its immediate object, it resulted eventually in the surrender of Billy Bowlegs and permanent peace in the Everglades for the first time in many years.

Howard was next detailed to duty at West Point and was there when the Civil war began. At the close of the war he was made commissioner of the bureau of freedmen and refugees and served in that capacity until 1874. Then with the inauguration of President Grant's "Indian Peace Policy," Howard was detailed as a special commissioner to Arizona and New Mexico and especially to make peace with the Chiricahua Apaches under Chief Cochise whose reign of terror in the Southwest was holding back the settlement of that region. After holding councils with the Yumas, the Pimas, the Maricopas, the Arivipas, the Mojaves, the Tontos and the White Mountain Apaches, and settling the troubles between them and the whites, Howard next went among the Navajoes for the same purpose. He accomplished this by establishing a force of Indian police and inducing their great war chief, Manuelito, to be the head of the force.

But his main objective was still ahead of him—that of bringing Cochise, the Apache, in off the warpath. After several unsuccessful attempts to get the chief to come in for a conference, Howard, accompanied by a noted frontiersman named Tom Jeffords, took his life in his hands and visited Cochise's stronghold. There he persuaded the Apache leader to make a "good peace," which Cochise kept as long as he lived.

Howard's next assignment was in the Pacific Northwest where he was one of the chief actors in the Nez Perce war. It was during this short war that Chief Joseph of that tribe made his epic dash for freedom toward Canada which has come down as one of the greatest military exploits in American history. No less brilliant than Joseph's retreat was Howard's pursuit of the fleeing Indians, a pursuit carried on through some of the most difficult country on the North American continent. But when the Nez Perce leader was at last brought to bay in the Bear Paw mountains in Montana by Gen. Nelson A. Miles and forced to surrender, Howard, who at last had caught up with the fugitives, displayed a rare magnanimity at the surrender of Chief Joseph. The Indian leader extended his rifle to Howard in token of surrender, but Howard waived it over to Miles, thus declining in favor of his brother officer the honor which he had so richly deserved after his trying and difficult campaign.

No sooner was the Nez Perce war over, however, than Howard was again in the field against the Piutes and Bannocks in the campaign of 1878 which was nearly as arduous as was that of 1877. This war resulted in the death of two important chiefs, Egan and Buffalo Horn, and Howard was again the victor in another conflict with savages. His next service was a series of councils with the Colville Indians, the Spokanes, the Okanagans and the Coeur d'Alenes whose high regard he won by his efforts to right the wrongs which they had suffered at the hands of the whites. The attitude of Chief Lot of the Spokanes toward Howard was typical of the Indians of that region. When he learned that the general had been ordered east he protested against it. "You must not go; you cannot go!" entreated the Indian chief with tears in his eyes, "You are the Indians' friend. If you stay everything will go on right, but if you go the white men around me will get my land and there will be trouble. You must not go!"

No doubt many another Indian leader would have concurred in Chief Lot's words, for until General Howard's retirement from the army in 1895 and his death in 1909, he was looked upon by most of the red men with whom he had had any contact as one white man whom they could trust. In his wide experience with the Indians and their confidence in him he has probably only two rivals—Gen. George Crook and Gen. Hugh L. Scott.

But it is doubtful if either Crook or Scott knew personally so many noted red men as did Howard. To read his two books, "My Life and Experiences Among Our Hostile Indians" and "Famous Indian Chiefs I Have Known," is to call the roll of most of the Indian notables over a period of more than forty years. In addition to those already mentioned in this article, the list would include Washakie, the great chief of the Shoshones; Geronimo and Natchez of the Chiricahuas, Red Cloud, Spotted Tail, Crow Dog and Short Bull of the Sioux, Pasqual of the Yumas, Antonio and Antonito of the Pimas, Santos and Eskiminzeen of the Aravipas; Pedro, Taketesela and One-Eyed Miguel of the Apaches, White Bird and Looking Glass of the Nez Perces, Moses of the Yakimas, Sarah Winnemucca, daughter of the great chief Winnemucca of the Piutes, Egan and Ovtes of the Umatillas, Homili of the Walla Wallas and Cut Mouth John, a Umatilla, who served as his scout during the Bannock and Piute war in 1878 and with the forces under Howard during the Sheepeater campaign a short time later.

Among his most interesting reminiscences are those of Geronimo, the notorious Apache leader. "Geronimo was one of the Indian captains who was with Cochise when he decided that the Great Spirit wanted the Indians to make peace with the white men and eat bread with them," writes Howard in his "Famous Indian Chiefs I Have Known." "At that time most of the Indians were very happy to have peace, and Geronimo seemed quite as pleased as the others, though I believe he was not yet quite sure that it was time for peace to come. At any rate the great Cochise said it was, so Geronimo was ready to ride with us to meet the soldiers, and as I was willing, he sprang up over my horse's tail and by a second spring came forward, threw his arms around me and so rode many miles on my horse. During that ride we became friends and I think Geronimo trusted me, although he trembled very much when we came in sight of the soldiers near Camp Bowie. . . .

"In 1899 I went to Mount Verion barracks, Alabama (where Geronimo and his warriors were held as prisoners of war), and the first man I saw there as I got out of the train was Geronimo. He had a bundle of canes of different sorts of wood, which he had peeled and painted and was selling them one by one. When he caught sight of me he passed his canes to another Indian and ran to meet me. I could not understand his Apache but he embraced me twice and called his Mexican name 'Geronimo,' 'Geronimo,' many times so that I should be sure to know who he was. Then he got an interpreter and came to talk with me. 'I am a school superintendent now,' he said. 'We have fine lady teachers. All the children go to school. I make them. I want them to be white children.'"

WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists:

Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouthwash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

How Old Are You?

Today Said She—I'm 43

Am I Fat?—Not Me

Yes! A year ago I had twenty-two more pounds of fat than I needed—I was fat—and very sensitive about it—but now I say it is foolish for anyone to be overweight.

What did I do? Nothing very hard, I can assure you—I cut out pies—candy and all sweets—ate moderately and every morning before breakfast I took one-half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water—Never missed a morning.

I lost fat—gained in energy—vigor—charm—and vivaciousness and have a shapely figure I am proud of—anyone can do the same.

A North Carolina woman lost 47 pounds in 3 months—a Montana woman lost 19 pounds in 4 weeks—Wisconsin woman 11 pounds in 6 weeks.

Every druggist in the world sells Kruschen Salts—a Bottle that lasts 4 weeks—costs 85 cents.

Lesson Learned

It's really very little use. There's three-and-a-half-year-old Joan. Joan has been repeatedly warned not to play with strange pups—"Baby mustn't play with doggie," they tell her over and over again, "doggie bite baby—." The other day Joan escaped from her nurse for a few minutes and was heard making overtures to a rowdy Scotch terrier—"Come, doggie," said Joan, "come, doggie, bite baby!"

WOMAN OBJECTS TO SON-IN-LAW AND KILLS HIM

Bride of a Day Sees Elopement End in Tragedy in Philadelphia Home.

Philadelphia.—Mrs. Elizabeth Attilio, forty, shot and killed her newly acquired son-in-law, James Cassidy, forty-eight, when he called at her home, to tell of his elopement with her eighteen-year-old daughter, Rose.

The bride of one day, clad in black, heard the shot in the dining room of her mother's home and saw her mortally wounded husband run out, cross the street and stagger along the sidewalk for a block before he fell in front of a railroad boarding house.

Cassidy, employed on a Pennsylvania railroad construction gang, was known to those in the house, who called the police. The girl collapsed as an automobile was summoned to take her husband to the West Philadelphia Homeopathic hospital. She was placed in the same automobile with him and recovered sufficiently to remain by his side until he died.

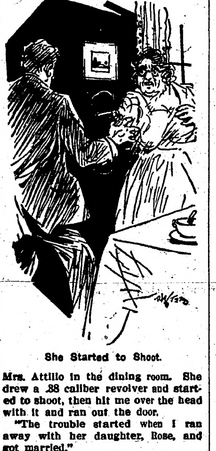
Bullet Pierces Heart.

Death was caused by a single .38 caliber bullet that pierced the heart.

With only a few minutes to live and with his young bride weeping by his side, Cassidy dictated an ante mortem statement accusing her mother. He smiled into the face of his bride as he completed his statement.

"I am James Cassidy," said the dying man. "I think I am going to die, and I make the following statement:

"I went to the Attilio home at 10:30 a. m. to ask for my clothes. I met Mrs. Attilio in the dining room. She drew a .38 caliber revolver and started to shoot, then hit me over the head with it and ran out the door.



She Started to Shoot.

"The trouble started when I ran away with her daughter, Rose, and got married."

Feared Mother's Anger.

Police said the mother learned that Cassidy and her daughter had gone to Media and married. The couple returned, but instead of going to the mother's house, took a room on Eleventh street, near Norris, and waited until the next morning before calling on the mother. The daughter, police said, had feared her mother's anger.

Mrs. Attilio, a short, stocky woman, weighing 250 pounds, wore tortoise-shell glasses and a plain pink print dress as she entered the dining room and greeted Cassidy. Police believe he did not see the pistol at first. He explained he had arranged to give up the room he had occupied at the Attilio home for 15 months. From their questions police learned Mrs. Attilio then demanded to know the whereabouts of her daughter.

"Oh, she's all right," Cassidy answered. "She and I were married yesterday. It's all right now."

"It's not all right with me," the mother is said to have retorted. "You have made me unhappy. You are too old for Rose."

Other words were spoken and the mother's anger, the police said, became uncontrollable.

"You shan't take Rose," she cried, and the shot followed.

Dog Leaps Into Sea in Attempt to Save Sailor

Saint Malo.—Fishermen are attempting to get some sort of official recognition for "Turk," a massive Newfoundland dog.

During the last voyage of the Gris Nez a seaman was washed overboard. No one saw him go except Turk, who leaped over the side and caught the sailor's clothes in his mouth.

Some one saw the dog leap over and sent up a cry. A boat was put out and rescued Turk as he was about to sink. He had a bit of cloth in his mouth, but the sailor had disappeared.

Wife and Auto Gone; He Offers Reward for Car

Munford, Tenn.—In announcing a reward of $50 for recovery of his wife and auto, C. B. Bemery, Munford, said: "I'd like to get the car back. It's a good one. I think if anyone finds the car they also will find my wife. I don't know—maybe it was the heat, but I think she didn't like the farm."

Healthiest

"Arthur had a bad case of measles," says Mrs. Clara Gilliam, 4137 Bowdoin St., Des Moines, Iowa. "He was having a hard time until I gave him California Fig Syrup. It regulated his bowels, seemed to give him new strength and energy.

"I have since used it for all his colds or upsets, and it has helped make him the healthiest boy I know."

For over fifty years, mothers have praised California Fig Syrup. Doctors advise its use when children are bilious, headachy, constipated; and to keep bowels open during colds or upsets. Every child loves its rich, fruity flavor. It is mild in action.

Domestic Sand for Glass

A recent discovery of a high-grade sand in Nevada is expected to go a great way toward ridding this country of dependence upon foreign countries for sands suited to the manufacture of glass. The sand in question is found to contain practically 99 per cent of pure silica, with 65 per cent of alumina and slight impurities. The sand is being shipped to California glass manufacturers and has been found to be particularly suitable for the highest grade glass.

Odd War Memorial Made From Scrap Metal Pile

A curious memorial to an officer of the World war is to be seen at Tirley, in England, in the shape of a clock made entirely of scrap metal and it is now doing duty in the parish church. It is the work of a resident. There are two weights which consist of assortments of old iron. They are wound up by a windlass which previously worked a canal lock. The driving wheel came from a winnowing machine; and the face, now in the church tower, was made from pieces of old oak and deal. Other parts of the works are made from the remains of a spade, a bean drill and a plowshare. The first model refused to go, so the builder smashed it with a hammer. Then he started his task all over again, and this time he has been successful.

CHAPTER XV

—24—

Some Day

But the day was not over for Ernestine. She left Will at the bank. His coat pocket was stuffed with the packet of bills the teller had given them, and her bank balance was reduced to three figures. But that didn't matter. Not a bit. She was a million times richer than she had been the day before. The bankbook figures would fatten again.

She wished she had her car, but, lacking it, she went across to Sheridan road, took a bus north, rode almost to Devon, left the bus and went to Lillian's.

Nobody answered the bell, but the door was unlocked, so Ernestine walked in. The house was silent, but she was instantly aware of the fact that some one was in it. She called, but no one answered. She went through into the kitchen. The maid's bedroom was off the kitchen and the door stood open. Ernestine went in there and saw that the room wore an unoccupied look. She opened the closet door. The hooks were empty. The maid had left, or had been dismissed.

She was still under the domination of her deep self, and, as she had been governed in Will's office an hour or so earlier by forces she did not understand, so now she went quickly up the stairs, through the silent house and into the big front bedroom where Lillian and Loring slept. The cover showed the impress of a body, the pillow had been drawn out from under the spread. She looked swiftly about and was not at all surprised to see Loring standing against the wall, behind her, one hand behind his back.

His coat collar was turned up across the back, his hair was in disorder, he was unshaved, and across one cheek was a deep imprint where his sleeve, or his pillow, had creased his flesh.

Ernestine went to him and held out her hand.

"Give it to me," she said sternly, as she might have addressed Peter.

Loring stared at her sulkily for a moment, his haggard eyes taking on a belated vitality. Then, silently, but with a shrug and a grimace, he drew from behind him a small nickel-plated revolver and put it in her hand. Ernestine crossed the room, opened the window and flung it far away into the water of the lake that breathed against the sandy beach.

She turned back to Loring, closed the window and dusted her hands.

"That's that," she said, with a gleam in her eyes. "What did you think that was going to do for you?"

He dragged himself away from the wall and sank down into a chaise-longue. With a kind of groan Loring hid his face in his hands and sat there like a broken man.

"I didn't know till this afternoon," he said. "But the grand jury—"

"That's all right, Loring," said Ernestine. "That's fixed."

"Fixed?" he said hoarsely, and looked up at her, his expression a little wild. "You don't understand. They've got me seven ways."

"Not now," she said, thinking how strange it was that he could never know about Pastano, and about the twenty thousand dollars.

"Will fixed it," she said gently. "You know, he has friends who told him. Will fixed it for you, Loring. He could—there are men downtown who would do anything for Will. He knows the ropes."

Loring's head fell forward again.

"I'm a failure," he muttered. "A complete failure—and now Will pulls me out of the rubbish heap. I've been here in the house all afternoon, trying to screw myself up to do one decent thing—to get myself out of the way—before all this falls on the rest of you, and I couldn't even do this."

"Of course you couldn't. You're too perfectly healthy. You've been a fool perhaps—like the rest of us, but you aren't crazy, and only insane people are capable of self-destruction. Look, Loring, you can start again. Why, men sometimes have to start again when they're old. Lots of men fail once—or twice—and then succeed. You can start back and rebuild your father's old business. What if you have to let the house and the car go—it's a small price for a new start. Pastano will let you alone, as long as you stay off of his preserves. Lillian's got her money. Will and I are going to start new."

He looked up at her—eager to be comforted as a child is eager to be comforted—eager to believe her, coming back, slowly and painfully, from the dark places of fright and madness.

"But Lillian"—he said, protesting, arguing, as mortal man always argues, on the wrong side—"Lillian's going to have a baby—that was what sickened me on all that old business—I'd been sick of it, anyhow, and when I knew I might have a son—I had to get clear. I told her to go to New York, last week, but she wouldn't. She's stuck to me, Ernestine. I never believed she would. I thought she was a fair-weather wife. I've always thought it. But she's been wonderful. She let her maid go, and she's been doing her own housework. She sold her car and brought me the money. She wrote to her father to let her have her trust fund outright. Now she's going out looking for a flat. That's all right—but when I thought of prison—and Lillian's baby coming in all that trouble, it seemed that the best thing I could do would be to get out. If I were gone, she'd go home to her mother, and perhaps no one would know. I'm all caved in about Lillian, about the way she's taken it."

"Why, Loring," said Ernestine, and laughed shakily, "Lillian adores you—always did. She loves you. When you've just found out how much she cares, you contemplate leaving her. What a way to figure. If that's not like a man!"

They talked a little. Ernestine sat down on the dressing table, flung her hat upon Lillian's bed and talked to him. She told him of the new plans she and Will had made. Gradually he relaxed, came back to normal. He reached up and turned his coat collar down and put up a hand and smoothed his hair. After a little he got up and shook his big body.

"I believe I'll go and shave," he said. "I'm a fright. You won't tell Lillian or Will about this afternoon?"

"Why should I tell them? It would just scare them both. Have you had lunch?"

"No, I don't think so; no, I didn't."

"Neither did I. I'll go downstairs and fix some coffee and sandwiches while you're shaving."

From the kitchen she could hear him moving about; then she heard the front door open and the click of the latch. She went to the hall, and Lillian saw her. Lillian came back to the kitchen.

"You didn't answer the phone, so I came over—Lorrie's upstairs. He said he hadn't eaten"—she made a gesture to the preparations on the table.

Lillian nodded absently.

"Ernestine," she said softly, quickly, "I'm going to have a baby."

Ernestine kissed her. "I'm awfully glad."

"Did you know about all of Loring's trouble?"

"Will told me some—Loring's told me the rest—but the worst is over for him now."

"Poor kid," said Lillian. She leaned against the door a moment and smiled at her younger sister. It seemed to Ernestine that since she had last seen her, the hard surface had dissolved from Lillian.

"Isn't it funny? Now everything is different. I used to wonder how you could go ahead when things were so hard. But it's not so bad—in the thick of it, as it seems from the sidelines. Just to know the baby's coming makes all this mess of Loring's seem so unimportant—I don't care what arrangements we make.. Oh, Ernestine, there have been times when I thought Loring loved you more than he did me, but these last few days he's been so sweet to me—so worried about me. He's humbled—it makes my heart ache. I can't tell you how I feel."

"I guess I know," Ernestine answered. "It's this business of marriage—but go on up to him, darling, and get him to eat something. All this will straighten itself out."

Lillian went up the stairs. Standing in the hall, looking after her, Ernestine realized that these sorrows were blessings—these were the things that bound a man and a woman together. This would break for ever Loring's old fixed idea about herself, and Lillian's belief that she had married for her own advantage. This would leave them close together, warm, heart to heart.

She turned the gas low under the coffee-pot, spread a napkin over the sandwiches she had fixed and slipped quietly out of the house. Perhaps Will was at home, and she would eat with him.

As she walked she began to plan all the new life. Her practical, efficient mind set itself with vigor upon the new problems. The removal to the lake—the need of a studio there for Will, the possibility of adjusting their life to changeable income. But Will was so active—he would doubtless have all the work he could do, within a year or two. Some day he would be famous, and he would find the world willing to pay for beauty as well as wit.

She walked more quickly—eager to be home, the young blood singing in her heart.

Some day—

Writer Would Go Limit in State Abbreviations

The abbreviation used for Ohio is "O." Apparently Oklahoma and Oregon do not object. But there are six states whose names begin with letters which are not the first letters of the names of any of the other states. These states are: Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Utah. Why not use D, F, G, L, P and U for the abbreviations in those cases? Also, West Virginia is the only "West" state. So why not simply use "W. V." instead of the usual "W. Va."? The only reason for abbreviations in the first place is the desire to save time and space. Then why not save all the time and space possible, or else use the full name? Why fuss with "Pa." and "Penn." and "Penna." when "P." would fill the bill?—Worcester Telegram.

The Silver Cross

By KENNETH F. CRANE

(Copyright.)

WES BROOKER, suburban reporter for the Morning Call, found himself entering the public museum when he should have been covering a lecture on child psychology at the Henry Clay school. Instead of dozing in a hard seat in the school auditorium, while Doctor Sylvia Humbrecht, eminent child expert who as yet had not been fortunate enough to have any children herself, droned on about the psychological reactions of the adolescent and illustrated her lectures with fierce though profound glances through large glasses, Wes had chosen to come down to the museum and see the thing for himself. It was a queer coincidence that had brought him and Major Mieding together at the athletic club banquet. Wes always welcomed an opportunity to swap war experiences.

The reporter hustled through the corridor and turned to the right into the main floor museum room. He had been there many times. The Indian basket display, the miniature groups depicting life of the Eskimos, the shelves containing ancient lamps, did not interest him. He entered the large room housing the World war exhibit and walked through the aisles between the cabinets, examining them closely. He stopped before one of the cabinets and stared at an object mounted carefully and bearing a neatly lettered placard.

It was a small silver cross, perhaps an inch and a half long, "lost by some American soldier most likely killed while advancing at Chateau Thierry." The donor was Major Mieding. One of the corners of the smaller arm of the cross had disappeared, as if it had been carried away by a bullet. Wes noticed this and smiled.

Wes drifted into a kind of calm reverie which lasted perhaps fifteen minutes and might have lengthened into a half hour had he not been disturbed by the presence of another person in the next room. Casually he glanced up and saw the intruder, who however, due to the darkness of the room, had not seen him.

There was a bit of prettiness about her despite the pale, worn face, the whiteness of which was accentuated by her black dress and hat. Idly Wes followed her progress as she aimlessly wandered through the aisles. He would have bet his life that there was a story in that girl.

From his position the cabinet before which he had stood and examined the silver cross a short time before, was plainly visible. The girl was passing it now. Her eyes swept the objects in this cabinet in a listless manner. Then she stopped in front of it and Wes saw her start. What was she looking at in that manner?

She was speaking, speaking to something in the cabinet. With a question in his mind as to her sanity, Wes bent further forward so that he could better hear the low sounds.

"Paul," she was moaning half sadly, half joyously it seemed, "Paul. Then you were killed. Now I know why you don't come back to me. Oh, Paul! Now it's mine, Paul. It's mine! They can't keep it; I'm going to have it."

Hysterically she glanced around. Then, to Wes's amazement, the girl seized a small grenade, now empty, that was openly displayed on a stand nearby, and, before Wes could dash in to interrupt her, shattered the glass door of the case and tore an object from its mounting.

Wes had darted to her side. The thing she held in her hand was the silver cross, the silver cross that Major Mieding had—

"Girl, are you crazy? Don't you realize that noise will arouse all the attendants in the building?"

"I don't care; it belongs to me; I gave it to Paul before he left for the front. Now he's dead and it belongs to me."

Wes thought quickly. Then before the girl could protest, he rushed her to a side stairway.

"Beat it quick," he commanded, and, clutching the cross, she disappeared.

When two blue uniformed attendants ran into the exhibit room they found a very bland reporter reaching through the broken glass of a case, removing a gas mask that was advertised as being found at Verdun. Already piled in his arms was a German star shell pistol, a dented metal mirror and a manual on the operation of machine guns.

Three hours later Ole Simpson, the fat good-natured reporter who covered the hotels, gazed at Wes through the bars of a cell door. He was grinning.

"What the h—l got into you?" was his first remark. "Trying to start a museum of your own?"

Wes grinned back at him.

"Wait'll Makosky on the police run joins the party, then I'll tell you the whole story."

When Makosky came, Wes told them what had happened that afternoon.

"But what the devil were you doing in the museum? I thought you were out in Whitefish Bay!" asked Simpson.

"I came to look at that silver cross."

"Wha-a-at?"

"Keep this to yourself, and that poor kid who's been waiting for Paul will be happy. That one corner was carved off with a bayonet in a dugout while we were waiting to go on a raid. The cross was found by Major Mieding, our commander. I lost it. It's mine. Maybe Paul's still wearing his somewhere in Marseilles."

Search for "Cradle of Man" in Wild Regions

An expedition is in preparation which will go far into the jungles of Honduras to look for "the cradle of man." That, at least, is among the announced intentions of the explorer, F. A. Mitchell-Hedges, though he has also more definite prospects of discoveries in the remnants of a civilization some thousands of years old located in the province of Mosquitia by a previous search.

But the more romantic quest is that for man's first home on the earth. A great number of scientists have looked for it in all sorts of likely and unlikely places. Dr. Roy Chapman Andrews chose the Gobi desert; others have dug into Mesopotamia and central Africa. Nobody has so far found it.

It appears from the behavior of explorers and anthropologists that primeval man must have insisted on the least accessible part of the world for his first appearance. Expeditions in search of his traces seem always to go off to the other end of nowhere, far from gasoline stations and miniature golf courses. Probably there is no reason for this procedure except that anything is possible in unknown territory. While looking there for what may be found, the explorer may as well look for the cradle of man and thereby give an indisputable dignity and importance to his expedition.—New York Evening Post.

Vatican Art Treasures Worth Many Fortunes

Said to be the largest palace in the world, the Vatican contains 80 grand stairways, and 200 smaller ones, 20 courts and 11,000 halls, chapel rooms and apartments, and its wealth is so fabulous as to be beyond anyone's knowledge, writes James T. Nichols in an article in Successful Farming.

Within the Vatican, he continues, are tens of thousands of paintings and objects, many of which alone are worth a fortune. The single painting of the Last Judgment is 33 feet wide and 66 feet high. If a single one of the half-dozen marble bathtubs were put on the market, it would bring enough to build a good-sized church. In the library are single manuscripts that are priceless, marble tables inlaid with pearls and gems worth a fortune, and vases almost as valuable. Rockefeller could hardly pay for the tapestries and paintings in the Vatican, and Henry Ford would be bankrupt before he half finished if he started to purchase the treasures of this great building.

Unharmed by Long Fall

Reversing the case of Humpty Dumpty, a Stockholm roofer recently fell seven stories to the street without causing himself more damage than a broken tooth. The workman, Tore Fredelin, was nailing plates on the edge of a mansard roof, when the plank he stood on gave way and he tumbled to earth. He said later that he remembered striking many beams before he reached the ground, but he remained conscious throughout. Passersby who had watched him fall could hardly believe their eyes when they saw Fredelin unconcernedly pick himself up and brush off his clothes.

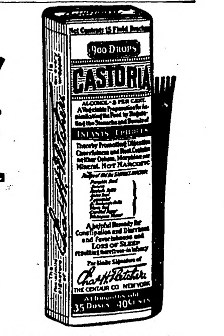
Can't PLAY
Can't REST
—child needs Castoria



WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

F. A. GREEN
—for—
Representative in the State Legislature

To the Voters of Marshall County:

I take this opportunity of thanking you for the splendid vote you gave me, in placing me in nomination as one of the candidates for Representative for Marshall County. Having lost our crop of grain by hail, it becomes necessary for me to keep working, in order to earn money with which to buy feed, consequently I will not have the time or money to spare to enable me to make an aggressive campaign. I will have to depend on you to give me your vote and influence.

If elected, I pledge myself to do all I can to bring about a reduction of our heavy tax burden. I have, in the past two sessions, helped pass a bill requiring the state to pay taxes on the foreclosed Rural Credit farms. The Governor saw fit to veto these bills. If elected, I will use my vote and influence to repass that bill.

Once more thanking you for your support in the past, and assuring you that I will appreciate your support at the coming Election, I remain,

Yours truly, F. A. GREEN.

To Voters of Marshall County:

Having received the nomination for the office of County Treasurer, I come before you again for your consideration at the General Election on November 4, 1930.

As I realize that I am not very well known in some parts of the county, I think it is only fair to let you know who I am, and also my qualifications for the office.

I am a graduate of one of the leading Business Colleges in this part of the country, and have several years' experience as an accountant and general office work.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on election day, November 4, 1930.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me, and if elected I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of County Treasurer carefully and impartially to all.

Sincerely yours,

Peter E. Kvikstad

94 Votes Cast at the General Election in the Village Tuesday

Hottest Election in Years Contains Many Surprises in Both County and State

Ninety-four votes, which represent Holt village about 100%, were cast here Tuesday in the General Election. This is an indication of the widespread interest aroused in this contest. In another column we show how Holt voted on the county and district candidates.

The outstanding upheaval of the lot was Floyd B. Olson's decided victory over Ray P. Chase (Rep) for governor. This is the first time in history that Minnesota will have a Farmer-Labor governor.

The senatorial race was largely between Hoidale (Dem) and Schall (Rep). Early returns showed an immense plurality for Hoidale, but later returns piled up Schall's total, so that the outcome at this writing is uncertain

Selvig Leads

On Wednesday, with 445 precincts out of 549 in the 9th Congressional District heard from, Selvig (Rep) led with 32,011 as compared with 26,380 for Wefald (F-L). As the 104 precincts to be heard from are regarded as Knud Wefald's stronghold, the outcome of this contest is undecided also.

Geo. Fricker, local candidate for county commissioner, 5th district, lost the race to O. J. Johnson of Grygla, by a margin of 20 votes.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING AT DUNWOODY

Many young men are now confronted with the problem: Should I go to school, or should I go to work?

After a person has completed his general education, he must take up vocational education, or training which enables him to earn a living.

Many people get their training "on the job" where they "earn and learn" by doing.

There are available vocational schools in agriculture for the farmers; business colleges for those interested in commercial lines; and trade schools for those interested in mechanical and industrial lines.

Dunwoody Institute at Minneapolis was left as a gift to the residents of the state for training boys and men in industrial and mechanical lines.

The Institute is conducted without profit and charges only nominal fees for training in many lines like automobile, baking, building, drafting, electrical, machine shop, printing, painting, paperhanging, bricklaying, and sheet metal.

Students may enter at any date for any length of course in the industrial and mechanical courses available.

The Red Poppy—Symbol of Armistice Day

The pictures shown above are photographs taken in a disabled veterans' hospital where the patients make Buddy Poppies to be sold throughout the country by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, the proceeds being devoted exclusively to welfare work among disabled veterans and ex-service men.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WITH the coming of another Armistice day men and women all over the world will pin flaming red poppies over their hearts as symbols of the blood which was shed on the battlefields of the World war. For the red poppy has become the emblem of Armistice day and we wear it on November 11 as a memorial not only to the men who died during the war-torn years of 1914-18 but also to those who came back to their homes alive but bearing upon their bodies and in their minds the scars of that holocaust—the disabled veterans.

The story of how the red poppy became the emblem of Armistice day goes back to November, 1918—even before there was an Armistice to lighten the burden of a war-weary world. In it there is a curious parallelism between the establishment of this custom and another custom observed on another day when we honor our war dead. It was a group of southern women in Columbus, Ga., who in 1865 banded together to decorate the graves of soldiers, both Union and Confederate, thus originating a custom which is perpetuated in our Memorial day observance. And it was another southern woman, Miss Moina Michael of Athens, Ga., who originated the idea of adopting the red poppy as a symbol of the sacrifices of the fighting men of the World war and whose efforts have resulted in this flower's being adopted as the Armistice day emblem.

The idea came to Miss Michael while she was serving on the staff of the Y. W. C. A. overseas headquarters at Hamilton hall, Columbia university, in New York. On Saturday, November 9, 1918, she was sitting in the headquarters office when a soldier came in and placed a copy of a monthly magazine on her desk. In it she happened to read Colonel McCrae's now-famous poem, "In Flanders Fields." She was so stirred by the lines that she re-read it several times and then with a sudden inspiration she wrote this reply to it:

Oh! You who sleep in Flanders Fields,
Sleep sweet—to rise anew!
We caught the Torch you threw
And holding high, we keep the Faith
With all who died.
We cherish, too, the Poppy red
That grows on fields where valor led:
It seems to signal to the skies
That blood of heroes never dies,
But lends a lustre to the red
Of the flower that blooms above the dead
In Flanders Fields.
And now the Torch and Poppy red
We'll wear in honor of our dead.
Fear not that ye have died for naught;
We'll teach the lessons that ye wrought
In Flanders Fields.

As she wrote, she decided that she would wear a poppy for remembrance and she would also ask others to do the same. While thinking about this three overseas Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. workers, who had been attending a conference at Columbia, came in to bring her a check for $10 in appreciation of her efforts to make a model hostess house of their headquarters. She immediately told them that she would use the money with which to buy poppies and then explained her idea. They were as enthusiastic about it as she was and, returning to their conference, spread the news. As a result, all of the workers at the conference that afternoon were wearing poppies which Miss Michael had provided.

The next morning Miss Michael went to see her friend, Dean Talcott Williams of the Columbia school of journalism, and confided to him her poppy-thought. He was very much pleased and offered to pass the thought on that afternoon to a war workers' committee on which were Mrs. Preston, the former Mrs. Grover Cleveland, and Rodman Wanamaker. He attended the meeting of the committee and brought back to Miss Michael enthusiastic reports of the manner in which her plan had been received.

Then came the armistice and Miss Michael turned all her energies to spreading the idea of the poppy as a national emblem. She presented the plan to other conferences and they straightway adopted it. Home-coming programs were made and the poppy idea was introduced into them.

Miss Michael wrote her congressman, Charles H. Brand, and he replied on December 10, 1918: "I am writing today the War department in behalf of your suggestion that the poppy be adopted as the national emblem in commemoration of our soldiers who died in France."

Miss Michael wrote to many institutions of education, women's clubs and other organizations, explaining that as it was impossible to have triumphal arches or great memorials in all places from which came the heroes of the World war, she begged them to adopt the poppy as a tribute to the men who won the victory.

"Out of every great event of the world has come an emblem," she wrote, "'Lest we forget.' Into this war went many emblems: The flags of nations, the Red Cross, the Red Triangle, the service flag and pin. Now out of this war should come some symbol perpetually to remind us and unfailingly to teach coming generations the value of the light of liberty and our debt to those who so valiantly saved it for us."

On the eve of the Georgia State convention of the American Legion, August 19 and 20, 1920, in Augusta, Miss Michael went to the Legion headquarters in Atlanta and turned over to them her arguments concerning the adoption of the poppy. Charles M. Galliene of Post No. 1, Atlanta, took charge of the material and presented the movement to the convention. It was adopted and the delegation to the national convention was instructed to present it at Cleveland, Ohio, and to support the resolutions. The resolutions were presented to the national convention in September, 1920, and the poppy became the National American Legion Memorial Flower.

The happy inspiration which this southern woman had has not been confined in its result to this country alone. For her idea has spread to other countries. Madam E. Guerin of Paris read Miss Michael's poem pledging to "Keep the Faith," and her plans for wearing poppies to memorialize the sacrifices of the war. She immediately organized the American and French Children's league and sold poppies for the benefit of the orphans in France. In an official report, which she issued on February 8, 1922, from Canada on Poppy days, she announced: "The great war veterans have sold 1,000,000 small poppies and 200,000 large ones, clearing $90,000 for their relief work, and for the French, $80,000 to go to the poor French children of the battlefields."

In England the poppy program flourished tremendously. Earl Haig's British Legion adopted the selling and wearing of poppies in 1921 and since that time more than $11,000,000 has been cleared for ex-service men. In 1927 alone the British legionnaires sold 28,000,000 poppies and made a profit of $2,522,000. In 1928 the sales reached the $3,000,000 mark. In every British community, no matter how remote from the mother country, anniversary of the armistice is observed by the sale of poppies. The full list of overseas collections from poppies, as printed in the 1927 report of the British Legion, assumes the appearance of a gazetteer of the world. There are listed there the Azores, Egypt, the Grand Canary islands, Morocco, Nigeria, the Sudan, the Orange Free State, Bermuda, British Guiana, Trinidad, Borneo, British Malaya and dozens and dozens of other countries.

Instead of the poppy becoming a national emblem, as the Poppy Lady first dreamed, it has become an international emblem. In Europe, besides the British Isles and France, 19 countries wear the blood-colored blossoms in their lapels: Italy, Holland, Germany, Spain, Belgium, Sweden, Switzerland, Poland, Greece, Rumania . . . oh, almost every corner of the globe. Poppies are even worn in Japan, China, Mexico, Asia Minor and in every country of North and South America.

The poppies are made by disabled veterans in hospitals in the East, at piece-work cost and the state departments of the Veterans of Foreign Wars all taken certain quotas. A small amount is deducted for national and state relief and the rest goes to the posts that sell the poppies to be used as their relief needs arise. The veterans are paid one and one-quarter cents for every poppy they make and some of them are skillful enough to turn out from 800 to 400 poppies in a day, thereby earning about $5.00.

We Have Changed All That

By Herbert Quick and Elena Stepanoff MacMahon

Copyright by
The Bobbs-Merrill Co.
WNU Service

Herbert Quick's visit to Vladivostok in 1920 on behalf of the Red Cross and his meeting with Elena Stepanoff led to this story. It came as an interlude in the composition of his epic of the Iowa soil—the three famous novels, "Vandemark's Folly," "The Hawkeye" and "The Invisible Woman," and the personal record of his early years, "One Man's Life." He desired to have its publication deferred till the last mentioned work—his autobiography—was finished. Then came his untimely death.

The reader familiar with his style will find its impress everywhere in "We Have Changed All That," and nowhere else perhaps does it appear to better advantage. Yet he was anxious that his collaborator, a woman of the untitled nobility, "a monarchist of the extreme right, but with the true Russian instinct for the verities," should have a full share of credit.

"I am trying to make it," he said, "a real study of the life of the victims, the nobility, in the most striking dissolution of social values in history. The facts, the nuances of the life, and the plot in large measure, are furnished by my collaborator."

This brilliant and unique work gives new evidence of his power and sympathy. It is a masterly etching of the end of a great epoch, an etching in which the force of imagination is equalled by the skill of execution.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Kazan and the House of Krassin

The man wore a peasant's smock; but he was very terrible to the great lady who was showing him over her house. But that group of men who followed him—they were more terrible still. Yet, she could not conceal from him the feeling of contempt that she felt for him and for them as she opened one room after another for their inspection.

"That is one of the rooms," said she with that little half-contemptuous smile, as if at his ignorance of great houses, "into which we looked at first. Across here are the last rooms on this side. Enter, please!"

The man in the peasant's smock, followed by that terrible squad of armed men, felt the sting of her contempt. For he had been in great houses before. This peasant's smock—he wished that he could somehow make her understand that he had never worn it until liberty came to Russia in the dictatorship of the proletariat. He was confused and exasperated. Just as she had hoped he would be. So he turned from the door through which she had said they had been before—just as, with held breath, she had hoped he would do; and he entered the room across the hall when the strong, plain, distinguished old lady of the palace swung the door open for him.

The squad paused outside. The man in the peasant's smock entered—entered the luxurious boudoir of a lady! He strode across to the other end of the room, and threw aside a beautiful Persian hanging. He pressed rudely through into a bedroom. As he entered, a young girl rose from a chaise-longue on which she had been reclining, and stood before him in filmy negligee, her eyes wide with astonishment.

"Mother," gasped the girl, "what is the meaning of this!"

"It is an officer of the government," said the old lady, still breathing quickly, but more easily, as does the hen-pheasant when the search has passed her nest; "he is looking at the house. They thought we might have unoccupied rooms. I have explained to this—this gentleman—"

"No gentleman!" he shouted with needless emphasis. "I am Tovarisch Vilinsky of the local government of the dictatorship of the proletariat! We are considering whether you fine ladies will not go out into the street and leave these rooms to the officers of the government!"

"Musia," said the old woman, "you may retire, my daughter, while we are busy here."

"Nothing doing!" said Vilinsky. "I don't feel so much in a hurry as I did before I came in here. This room," said he to his clerk, but looking meaningly at the girl, "will remain just as it is. I like the furniture. I like everything in it. Come, my dear, play us some music. I feel like enjoying myself today!"

Does the reader comprehend the situation?

Scarcely, unless he or she was in Kazan in those times—or at least, in Russia. Perhaps we may make it easier to understand.

To the eyes of travelers pressing eastward that day from Moscow or Petrograd, either by railway or by boat on the Volga, the ancient city of Kazan lay sprawled abroad shimmering in the hot sun of midsummer.

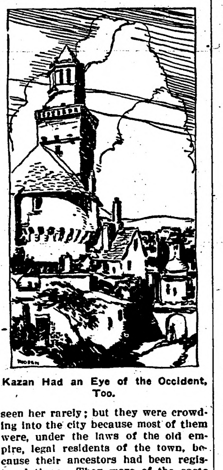
It is, if one may guess that anything but chaos and famine in the Volga basin still "is," the center of Mohammedan culture in eastern Russia, and of Christian culture, too, for it is the site of the great cathedral of the Annunciation. In it still stands, one may suppose, the old Bogoriditsky convent in which the miracle-working Black Virgin of Kazan once had her home, before she was ravished away by higher powers which cared for religious relics, first, centuries ago to Moscow, and then to St. Petersburg—where, it appears, her miracles have been less frequent than they were formerly.

With her oriental eye Kazan looked away across the Admiralty suburb, where Peter the Great built his river fleet for his campaigns against Persia, down her pretty little river the Kazanka, to where the Volga, the Russian Mississippi, flowed, almost dry on this day in comparison with the floods that sometimes roll into the purlieus of Kazan: looked on across the Volga, over mysterious distances to mysterious eastern places, to Perm, to Ufa, down to Saratov, and on to Astrakhan.

But Kazan had an eye of the occident, too. With this she contemplated her railway line from Moscow, her factories of soap—of which her population just now seemed much in need; her other factories of leather goods, military boots, munitions of war; and—to go with the munitions—of sacred images and candles; of cotton cloth, woolens and bells.

There were many travelers who sought for a first glance of it, and thought it only a little dirtier than of yore. They were of all sorts; but those who thought of the dirt are worth noting. They talked among themselves of the house of Krassin, where at this moment Tovarisch Vilinsky is asking Musia Krassin to play for him.

Such travelers wore all sorts of clothes, and a few were in uniform. All their clothes were or had once been of good quality. Some of these men had never seen Kazan, or had seen her rarely; but they were crowding into the city because most of them were, under the laws of the old empire, legal residents of the town, because their ancestors had been registered there. They were of the caste of the plain, proud old woman who had fluttered away from her secret with Tovarisch Vilinsky down there in the Krassin house—a part of the history of Great Russia, with authority, great estates, immense power and wealth, and back a few decades, with the serf and the knout in their systems.



Kazan Had an Eye of the Occident, Too.

They were going down to Kazan for another sitting of the great Court of Fate in which went on the trial of their souls; a court in which were also on trial the souls of Tovarisch Vilinsky, of the squad of armed men with him, and the soul of Mrs. Krassin with her secret room, and her blond-haired daughter, Musia. Russia was a great wine-press in which the grapes were being crushed—and the grapes were the souls of men and women.

Gulls Which Keep to Shore

The black-head gulls of Europe, unlike the ordinary seagulls common along the coast of this country, are not sea-going birds. They will not follow ships day after day, but keep themselves well within reach of land. In fact, they are not adverse to flying inland and feeding in new-plowed land, on insects, worms and larvae.

The gulls breed from the British Isles east through Europe, as far as Turkestan. In winter they range all the way from the Azores to Japan, living largely along the shores, on crustaceans, small fish and any food which finds its way into the waters along the shores.

Citrus

One evening Mr. Brown was seated in the living room reading the paper when his little son John, age five, approached him, and asked:

"Papa, what is a lemon?"

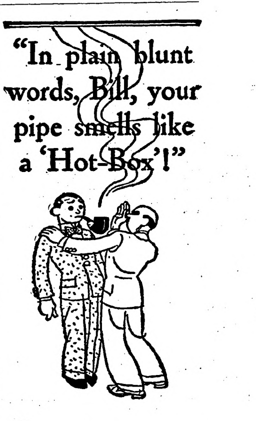
"Why, a lemon is a citrus fruit. It's something that causes a bitter taste in your mouth," his father replied.

"Well, papa, if mother gives me that bad medicine tonight, will she be a lemon," Johnny inquired.

No in Either Case

Richard Brinsley Sheridan (1751-1816), Irish dramatist and politician, and Edmund Burke (1729-1797), English statesman and orator, are both credited with the pun which follows. When asked to pay at least the interest on a sum owed, the impertinent but witty reply was:

"It is not to my interest to pay the principal, nor is it my principle to pay any interest."



"In plain blunt words, Bill, your pipe smells like a 'Hot-Box'!"

ONLY an old and trusted friend would venture to speak so frankly.

A new pipe, or an old one carefully broken in with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture, changes everything. And why shouldn't it? Sir Walter is milder and more fragrant. And it has the body and flavor found only in the finest of Burley, skillfully seasoned and blended. What more could we offer any pipe smoker? What more could he ask?

SIR WALTER RALEIGH

How to Take Care of Your Pipe (Hint No. 3) It's not true that a thick "cake" makes a sweet pipe. A heavy cake makes a hot smoke. A cake is necessary, but in a pipe, as in a car, too much carbon makes heavy, hot going. A thin cake makes the coolest smoke. Send for our free booklet, "How to Take Care of Your Pipe." Iron is considered the most useful metal on account of its great strength, durability and malleability.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

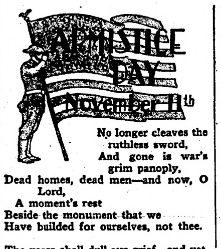
RECD-6AM-NOV-11-1918 MARECHAL FOCH.

The words contained in this message threw the world into a frenzy of joy on that eventful morning of November 11, 1918, the anniversary of which is being observed by the nations engaged in the World war. It is the late Marshal Foch's order halting hostilities on the front.



No longer cleaves the ruthless sword,
And gone is war's grim panoply,
Dead homes, dead men—and now, O Lord,
A moment's rest
Beside the monument that we
Have builded for ourselves, not thee.

The years shall dull our grief—and yet,
Though now the battle dust is lain,
Can we forget? Can we forget?
We need thee, Lord,
For thine the boon that tears of pain
Once shed shall not be shed again.
—Albert J. Cook, in American Legion Monthly.

How Soldiers Got the News

It was Monday, November 11, 1918, when hostilities came to an end from Switzerland to the sea. Twelve years ago at eleven o'clock of the eleventh day of the eleventh month—"Finis la guerre."

It was a memorable day, a more memorable moment when, at the stroke of eleven, the noise of cannon stopped, machine guns grew still, and rifles ceased to crack. For the first time in four years the air was free from flying missiles, and there was quiet on the tortured face of a war-torn land.

Over here, one remembers the noise which accompanied the wildest delirium of celebration the country ever has known. But what lingers in the mind of every man who was a member of the A. E. F. in France is the moment of deafening silence which punctuated the end of the war.

There could be no noise of celebration to equal the roar of the war which certain members of the American expeditionary forces had been engaged in. They had been listening to the granddaddy of all noises, louder noises and more of them than ever had been heard in the history of the world. So it is not the noise which is memorable to the American soldiers who were at the front twelve years ago; it is the sudden, complete cessation of all noise.

Good News Flies Fast.

Along the twenty-seven miles of front held by Americans, firing continued literally until the eleventh hour. Word of the impending armistice had spread faster than the flu during the epidemic. None of the doughboys believed it at first. They had heard the same thing before. It was just one of those rumors. Only the preceding Thursday night—the night the envoys came over from Spa—some one had passed the word that the armistice had been signed and there had been a small flurry of excitement, lights where there should be no lights and indiscriminate firing of arms resulting in hard-voiced reprimands.

But this time it was true. From the wireless station on the Eiffel tower in Paris Marshal Foch's order to cease firing at eleven o'clock had gone out into the air to the half-incredulous line which the Americans held from near Sedan to the Moselle.

The high command had a notion of passing the wonderful order along in a military manner, to have the corps report it calmly by wire to the divisions, the divisions to the brigades, the brigades to the regiments, the regiments to the battalions, and so on until every member of every squad knew about it. But it did not work out that way.

The news spread by that form of wireless known to man long before Marconi was born. It started early in the morning with the first blush of dawn. It ran along a thousand mess lines of men shivering and stamping in the mud, clattering their mess gear and clamoring for chow. Truck drivers shouted it to one another on the roads. Dispatch riders flung the words over their shoulders as they kicked the stands of their motorcycles into place and turned on the gas. So over winding, battered roads, into kitchens, camions, hospitals, ammunition dumps, gun emplacements, dugouts and barracks went the tremendous news—"Finis la guerre. Eleven o'clock."

With this knowledge in mind, the war went on in a final burst of reckless abandon. Everyone wanted to have a hand in it before it ended. It is told how at one point where a Yankee outfit was having a brisk battle on the east of the Meuse a man stationed at one battery stood with a handkerchief in his uplifted hand, a watch in the other. It wanted one minute of eleven o'clock. In front of him were the guns of the battery, four of them. Attached to each lanyard was a long rope, manned by gunners, cooks, signalmen, soldiers, messengers, stragglers, everybody. At eleven o'clock the handkerchief fell, the men pulled and the battery fired its last shot. And so it was, at hundreds, thousands of places along the line.

Stopped Fierce Action.

Probably the hardest fighting being done by the Americans in the final hour of the war was that which engaged the troops of the Twenty-eighth, Ninety-second, Eighty-first and Seventh divisions with the Second American army. They had launched an attack above Vignuelles just before dawn. It was no tea party. They knew nothing of any order to cease firing, and were hard at it when word reached them just in time, brought to the edge of the battle front by runners scurrying from fox hole to fox hole.

Then, at the stroke of eleven, after every gun in the war seemed to have been fired simultaneously, some of them without any attempt at direction, silence—utter and absolute silence—fell upon the land. It was as if the world had suddenly died. Men looked at one another bewildered. But only for a moment. Then—

Every man in the A. E. F. threw down his tools of war. A slow grin spread over his face. And then he yelled. At that moment every one was slightly befuddled, slightly mad. Then another amazing thing happened.

The battered, torn landscape which a minute before had been as bare as the palm of your hand, became alive with men. They crawled up out of the earth, dirty, disheveled figures, and looked about them a good deal surprised to discover so many people in a place which had looked so deserted.

Fraternizing With Foe.

The Germans came up grinning, eager to swap caps and equipment for tobacco and food. A stranger with an all-observing eye looking down upon the scene at this moment would never have been able to tell from the looks of things which side had won the war.

And that night, for the first time since the war started, there was light, illumination other than the flare of guns, the burst of shells and the tapering beams of searchlights sweeping across the dark sky in search of hostile airplanes.

Now that the war was over the boys lit everything they could find. Screens were torn from windows and doors. A new moon shone. Rockets and flares were sent up to brighten the sky. And that night there was many a man who could not sleep. It was so d—n quiet.

Thus ended the five hundred and eighty-fifth day of America's participation in the war. That was twelve years ago. "Finis la guerre."

Present-Day Lyricists Hauled Over the Coals

The decay of poesy should be viewed with alarm. As it is now practiced—by amateurs for the most part or by professionals who received their credentials under false pretenses—it has the potentiality of great harm for the language.

Special reference must be made to the brazen company who write the lyrics for our popular songs. These gentlemen are constrained to the erratic course of the composers' measures; that much may be said in their extenuation. After two or three boop-boop-a-doops, a long blue note may force the lyricist to change his plan and derail the meter. For this you blame the composer, not the verse writer.

But the unpardonable sin of the lyricists is completed in their choice of rhyme words. Melancholy, golly and Molly sound incongruous, but they might pass the board. And the bard who joined kiss with antithesis may have had an impediment in his speech. But sighin', cryin', and mine are a bit thick; and same and again are as dreadful as dream, queen and seem.

In a related category is listed Loosyanna, a corruption for the name of a state at the mouth of the Mississippi river.

Why not start a society to put a rhyming dictionary in every hotel room?—Milwaukee Journal.

Sent Suit to Waxen Effigy

Just before his recent visit to this country, Sir Thomas Lipton went to Madame Tussaud's museum in London, which is famed for its collection of wax effigies of famous men, with the object of inspecting the figure of himself which had just been put on view. Sir Thomas at once took exception to the manner in which the figure was clothed, and the next day he sent one of his own yachting suits down to the museum with the request that the figure be put in it, which was promptly done. The manager of the place said that the new suit fitted the dummy to a "T."

Day of Water Trough Gone

The four once popular water troughs in Main and High streets in London have gone the way of the horse and buggy and the bootjack of yesterday. Workmen have removed the troughs from the streets. The metal bowls were junked and the concrete bases broken.

There's poetry in everything, including the waste basket.

Idea Worked!

Wise mothers find the things that keep children contented, well, happy. Most of them have found they can depend on one thing to restore a youngster's good nature when he's cross, fretful, upset.

The experience of Mrs. Wm. Charleston, 903 Gilmore Ave., Kansas City, Kans., is typical. She says: "I have used California Fig Syrup with Annie and Billy all their lives. Whenever they're constipated or bilious it has them comfortable, happy, in a jiffy. Their wonderful condition proves my idea works."

Physicians endorse the use of pure vegetable California Fig Syrup when bad breath, coated tongue, dullness, feverishness, listlessness, etc., show a child's bowels need help. Weak stomach and bowels are toned by it; a child's appetite and digestion are improved.

The genuine always bears the name California for your protection.

THE QUALITIES OF LEADERSHIP

By JOHN G. LONSLADE
President American Bankers Association

John G. Lonsdale

Leadership and success, in a general way, are synonymous. They are both founded upon simple codes of thought and action, upon the realization that he who wins the laurels must be a doer, not a waiter, that application of energy, not time or luck, is what counts most. A rabbit's foot is a poor substitute for horse sense.

Both success and leadership, if they be of the highest quality, are the result of service to humanity. Service has been aptly described as "the supreme commitment of life." Analyze the lives and times of all great leaders of history and you will find that those whose names are enshrined in the hearts of their countrymen are those who sought to render a needed service to the populace.

Leadership, like success, need not, however, be international or national to achieve great results. There is room for each of us to be a leader in his community, in his work, in his church, and in various organizations.

One of the indispensable qualities of leadership is the ability to persist steadfastly in the face of discouragements. If George Washington had not possessed the quality of persistence, he and his soldiers would never have survived the hunger and privations which were theirs at Valley Forge.

We have too many young men and young women these days saying a job cannot be done. Too many spend their time explaining why a thing can't be done, instead of saying, with firm resolve, that it can be done, and then going out and doing it. Anything that ought to be done is capable of being done. And anything worth doing at all is worth doing well. The fellow who handles a little job in a big way is always on the road to greater fields.

Village Election Coming

One election is past but in a few weeks we will have another election excitement in our town when local village officials will be up for election. Village electionf always used to come in the spring but the last legislature changed this and from now on these elections will be held in December of each year on the first Tuesday after the first Monday. As a result of this change in election laws no election was held here or in any other village this spring and all officers held over until this fall.

In all villages in the state of Minnesota the resident electors shall choose the following named officers under the provisions of this act: a treasurer, two constables and a council composed of a president, a clerk and three trustees, and if said village is a separate election district, which Holt is, an assessor, and if there be no muicipal court established in the village, two justices of the peace. All officers chosen and qualified as such shall hold office until their successors qualify. Vacancies in office may be filled for the remainder of the term for which such respective officers were elected, by the council.

All elective officers in such villages in office when this act takes effect, shall hold their offices for the terms for which they were elected and any clerks whose terms would otherwise expire prior to Jan. 1, 1931 shall continue to hold office until the end of Dec. 31, 1930, and there shall be no village election in March 1930.

All village elections for the term and in the manner provided in the act shall be held annually on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in December of each year at which time the officers specified in section of the election laws, shall be elected for the terms following: President for the term of one year, one trustee for 3 years and all other such officers for the term of 2 years.

All terms, except as otherwise provided in the act, shall commence on the first secular day of January following the election.

The fiscal year of all villages in the state shall be the calendar year. Thus, village statement will hereafter be published after January 1st of each year instead of in the spring of the year.

Remember to watch this paper next week for the Caucus notice to nominate candidates for the village election to be held on Tuesday, December 2nd 1930.

DAD? What's he? Aw, he's the person I go to for the keys to the car."

This sums up — all too completely — the whole relationship between some fathers and sons. But this kind is few, after all. For a renewed warmth of comradeship seems to be developing, and speaks well for the future.

Dad holds not merely the keys to the car, but also the keys to his boy's success in life, if he uses them wisely. The ideals of thrift and credit—the basis of financial integrity—are usually copied from Dad.

Peculiarities of Echoes

Echo effects are often different when a hall is full. It has been found that an echo which may be there if a hall is filled with women may be entirely absent when the audience is a male one. The silk of women's garments absorbs sound far less than the thicker tweed and woolen clothing of men.

Her Reward

When children are weak and run-down, they are easy prey to colds or children's diseases. So it is never wise to neglect those weakening and depressing symptoms of bad breath, coated tongue, fretfulness, feverishness, biliousness, lack of energy and appetite, etc.

Nine times out of ten these things point to one trouble—constipation—and mothers by thousands know this is easily, safely relieved by California Fig Syrup.

Mrs. Chas. J. Connell, 1434 Cleary Ave., St. Louis, Mo., says: "I gave Virginia California Fig Syrup for constipation and she was more than rewarded for taking it. It regulated her bowels, helped her digestion, increased her appetite, made her strong and energetic."

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan, with the purpose of requisitioning the place for government use. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia.

They had not expected to find Kazan a clean city; for in spite of the fact that she held her proud place as the cultural center of the whole Volga valley; in spite of her great history, of which these travelers and their families had all been a part (which accounts for their hereditary pride)—a history in part Bulgarian, in part Tartar, but Russian since the time of Ivan the Terrible; for all her great university, of her paramount grand opera, of her importance as a seat of oriental scholarship, of her monasteries, of her many churches whose domes shone golden that day in the hot sun and which possessed that godliness which is next to cleanliness—yet they had never in Kazan been able to bring it closer than "next." The two qualities in the municipality had never actually coexisted. For all these hundred and fifty thousand people, with their crowded suburbs of Tartars and of the laboring Russians and the many great houses like the house of Krassin, surrounded by beautiful gardens and filled with luxuries, there had never been a central sewerage system; as if the quarter of a million volumes in the library of the University of Kazan had none dealing with sanitation.

Perhaps we are near the secret of Russia here. In this library a certain student, Count Leo Tolstoi, had in the early forties of the last century found the novels of Sue and Dumas. And in this old city he had grown so weary of dissipation that he told about it in a book called Youth. Like others, he strongly desired to cleanse the souls of his country, and apparently their souls only. The great ecclesiastical library was most important for its documents and books dealing with the interesting history of Russian religious sects, but treated of nothing closer to the subject of either personal or national purity for the multitude than inward purity and of the strange struggle of the Russians to obtain it; as they were now trying to obtain purity of government through Lenine and Trotsky. People who wish to plumb the depths of the Infinite would go farther and perhaps fare better if they began with plumbing of a much more prosaic sort. Especially in governmental matters. For in gaining the mastery of the prosaic and finite, the people learn to handle democracy without causing it to explode. It is a fine thing for us of America that we had to build our own roads and bridges. If Kazan had been obliged to look after her sanitation and similar matters, she might never have seen Commissar Loris.

CHAPTER II

Friend Loris and Friend Vilinsky

The people made way for Commissar Loris in token of his authority as he made his way into the pre-revolutionary palace of the governor general of Kazan, which with its arsenal had been more potent for ages than any of her saints. The soldiers of the People, such is the manner in which the customs of servitude survive, saluted respectfully. For he was the head of the government of the dictatorship of the proletariat in Kazan, and was now coming to attend and preside over its meeting.

He had an elegance about him that not even his old Cossack uniform could take away. His red, rather full lips were curled, and his nose turned up in something like a sniff as if at some bad smell. This is really what it was; and those who construed the expression to be one of contempt for his yokefellows did him less than justice; for to be scornful of one's fellow-workers in the time of Terror is not altogether prudent, and there were some who could find no other explanation.

The contrast between him and the half dozen men with whom he went into conference lay mainly in his smart elegant appearance, the mien of the man of the world—that world that had passed away, perhaps for ever.

The others seemed to feel this, and to show by their blunt rough ways that they were not favorably impressed by these appearances of aristocracy; all but one young man with a stooped form and the thick glasses of the student, whose manners remained what they had been when his political theories, for the first time apparently realizable, took him into the Bolshevist camp. Among the bluntest, roughest and rudest of these new dogs of war, was a man in a peasant's smock. He was Tovarisch Vilinsky, who, somewhat ahead of his order, we have seen inspecting the house of Krassin—and its occupants.

For an hour or more the group remained in session. Clerks took down memoranda. Papers were sent for. Dossiers were examined. Stenographers took notes. Frowning through his bushy brows, Commissar Vilinsky, after the routine matters before the meeting had been disposed of, suddenly made the point that the people's interests would be more efficiently served if Commissar Loris should remove his headquarters from his railway car to the palace. Commissar Loris, in a consultation with the pale student—a consultation that he suddenly made more earnest—seemed to fail to hear.

"Tovarisch Loris," said Vilinsky, "I am discussing a matter in which I think you may be interested."

"I was engaged," said Loris; "what is the matter to which you refer?"

"I was making the point, Tovarisch Loris," he repeated, "that it would be better if you were to transfer your headquarters to the center of our government, this palace. The people's interests, it seems to me, would be better served."

To call each other "Tovarisch" was almost obligatory. "Tovarisch" means "friend," and is the verbal badge of the Russian revolution, as "citizen" was of the French.

"There is something in what you say," replied Loris. "I am considering it, Tovarisch Vilinsky."

"It would be more convenient, Tovarisch Loris," continued Vilinsky, "for other members of the government."

"But there are advantages also," said Loris, "in my remaining where the people whom we serve have learned to find me. It should be, should it not, a question purely of the thing which is best for the people?"

There was a sense of antagonism in the air. At Loris' statement the pale student nodded assent. The others seemed non-committal. Vilinsky passed, as if to avoid the issue, to the overcrowded state of the city, and the urgent need of more housing facilities.

"These bourgeoisie," he shouted, striking the table with his fist and growing red in the face, "even under the dictatorship of the proletariat, still crowd the proletariat into the street! The parasites! While they sleep on beds of down, we lie on the stones of the pavement!"

"I thought Tovarisch Vilinsky was better housed," said Loris sympathetically.

A smile went round. Every one there knew of the entire floor of the chief hotel of the city which Vilinsky had commandeered for himself and his immediate retainers.

"You know what I mean, Tovarisch Loris," he cried. "The people sleep on stones! This must not be!"

"You are quite right," replied Loris. "We," with a slight emphasis on the pronoun, "have a right to protest against the necessity of sleeping on stones. The bourgeoisie are increasing every day by hundreds. They come by boat, by rail, by vehicle, and on foot, because of the horrible living conditions in Moscow, Petrograd and other cities; and because for many of them, this is the old seat of their families. They claim to be crowded, too—"

"And you," said Vilinsky ingratiatingly, "see in their crowding a reason for not disturbing them?"

"Allow me to finish my statement, Tovarisch Vilinsky," said Loris. "They claim to be crowded; but their standards of crowding are not those of the proletariat. They have much room to spare. If we do not find a remedy for the conditions of which Tovarisch Vilinsky speaks before winter, there will be much suffering and many deaths. It grows worse daily. And most of these returned bourgeoisie are secret plotters against our rule of liberty and equality. These secret treasonable societies which these papers"—picking up a dossier from the desk—"describe. Their lives are justly forfeit to the state for treason, and, when they are imprisoned, or their forfeited lives are taken by the people, their rooms will be available for the proletariat! Is not this suggestion worth considering, Tovarisch Vilinsky?"

Every one but the pale student nodded. Loris had the genius for the practical. He had won the members of the government to his side, as he had done many times before, by giving voice to the idea which appealed to them. Vilinsky saw that he was losing ground in what was becoming a rivalry with Loris.

Korean Pockets Due to Spread of Christianity

Christianity is responsible for one change in Korean dress—the use of pockets, according to Mrs. Roy K. Smith of Chairyung, Korea, who says: "There were no pockets in the old Korean coat, but the Christian needed a place for his Bible, for coming to church without a Bible is practically unknown in Korea. Following American example he made a large pocket in his jacket, and later several on a sleeveless coat or vest for his Bible and other prize treasures. But it is not enough to carry the Bible in one's hand or pocket. We have many who carry great sections, even whole books, in their heads and can recite without a mistake long passages. One man walked a hundred miles to recite the Sermon on the Mount to his pastor."

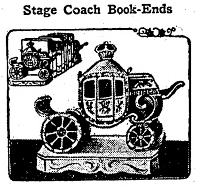
Things That Are Nice for Christmas Gifts

"To Baby," Highchair Cushion

Did you ever see anything so "cunnin'" as this "bunny cushion" for baby's highchair? You can buy the material all stamped and ready to work, either dainty pink or pale blue, and you may choose between bunnies, bow-wows, pussycats and sundry other "pet" subjects. Then all to do is to embroider their painted features, pad the material with downy cotton or wool batting, then knot here and there same as if making a comforter. There's no doubt Mr. Santa Claus will be having to work overtime to get enough cushions ready before Christmas for babies north, south, east and west, who will be wanting this "booful" present.

✿ ✿ ✿

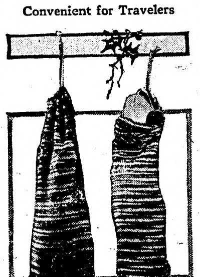
Stage Coach Book-Ends



From all indications Santa is going to make a specialty of giving stagecoach book-ends this Christmas. They are too clever for words, these bookends, which stand a decorative little coach at each end of a row of books, for the stagecoach, be it of royal lineage like the one pictured or of thoroughly American pioneer descent, is taking the place of the at-one-time favorite ship as a decorative feature in the home.

✿ ✿ ✿

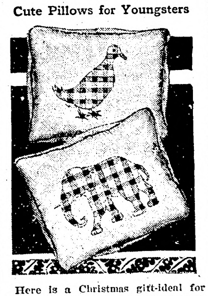
Convenient for Travelers



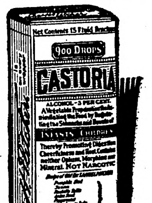
Scuffed shoes, slippers and "mules" are one of the problems of light traveling. No one likes to carry too much luggage, so the knitted "shoe case" of soft, lustrous durene cotton, as pictured, makes a most attractive Christmas present.

✿ ✿ ✿

Cute Pillows for Youngsters



Here is a Christmas gift-ideal for youngsters—pillows made of sateen or percale, appliqued with animal or birds cut out of gingham as pictured. Being washable, mothers will welcome them in the nursery. Santa Claus specially recommends this type for "pillow fights."



Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

Readily obtained at any drugstore, the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature and the name Castoria on the wrapper like this:

My Friends: Correct Your Eating Faults and Lose Your Fat With Kruschen Salts

Yes; I'm forty-five today—built like a race horse, my friends say—and I know I feel 10 years younger than I did three months ago—and I'd hate to tell you how much fat I lost with Kruschen.

I call Kruschen Salts the "magic salts" because when I was fat and wretched, despondent and half sick all the time—it took only one bottle that I bought for 85 cents to liven me up—put ambition and energy into me—make me feel years younger and with the help of a change in diet show me how to lose the fat I was so ashamed of.

Cut out pastries and desserts—go easy on potatoes, cream, cheese, and butter—eat lean meat, chicken, fish, vegetables and fruits and never fail to take one-half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

Every drug store worthy of the name in the World sells Kruschen Salts—an 85 cent bottle lasts 4 weeks—not much to pay for buoyant health.—Adv.

FAMOUS Doctor's Way to move the Bowels

Do your bowels fail you occasionally? Are you a chronic sufferer from constipation and its ills? Then you will be interested to know of this method which makes the bowels help themselves.

Dr. Caldwell specialized on bowel ills. He treated thousands for constipation. The prescription he wrote so many times—which has been tested by 47 years' practice—can be had of any drugstore today. Its pleasant taste and the way it acts have made it the world's largest selling laxative.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is a skillful compound of laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other mild ingredients. Nothing in it to harm even a baby. Children like its taste. It acts gently, without griping or discomfort. So it is ideal for women or older people. But even the most robust man will find its action thorough, satisfying. The quick, certain benefits millions are securing from Syrup Pepsin proves a doctor knows what is best for the bowels.

Next time you feel bilious, headachy, bloated, gassy, or constipated take some Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and see how fine you feel the next day—and for days to come!

"Those Crazy Americans"

One day in July, 1917, a working party of the Eleventh engineers, one of the first units of the A. E. F. to arrive overseas was busy building a road for an advance of British troops. Busy with pick and shovel they had left their rifles some distance behind them.

Suddenly a strong force of Germans, all heavily armed, burst upon the scene and, seeing this small force of unarmed laboring men, swept forward to what they believed would be an easy victory. But they didn't know that these were men of a corps of the United States army whose motto is "Essayons," French for "Let's Try."

To the surprise of the Germans, these unarmed men instead of taking to their heels, rushed forward yelling and brandishing picks and shovels. American fists crashed into Teuton faces and sent their owners sprawling. Rifles were jerked out of the astonished Germans' hands and turned against them. All in all, it was a fine rough-and-tumble affair. Within a few minutes the engineers had routed the enemy with heavy loss, suffering only a few casualties themselves.

Thus early began the experience of the Germans with "those crazy Americans," who didn't know when they were licked. As time went on their first impression of the Yanks, gathered from this contact with the engineers, included also the infantry and the artillery. In September, 1918, it was reported from the French front that "many of the Boche prisoners, when asked what they think of the American troops, speak somewhat as follows: 'They aren't soldiers; the infantry is drunk and the artillery is crazy.' They don't care for the way the American infantry goes out and collects hostile machine guns and they think batteries which fire for 24 hours a day have lost their reason entirely.

"An important German officer who was captured was asked if he wanted particularly to see anything. 'Yes,' said he, 'I want to see your automatic artillery.' The captors were puzzled until it developed that the American 75s had been firing so fast that the Germans thought they were new inventions that worked like machine guns."

A Valuable Muleskinner

In one of Rex Beach's stories, he has that inimitable character of his, Old Bill Joyce, declare: "Now a good mule driver is the littlest, orneriest speck in the human line that's known to the microscope, but when you get a poor one, he'd spoil one of them cholera germs you read about just by contact." But if Old Bill had listened in on a conference which took place at Camp Kearney, Calif., during July, 1917, when thousands of men were being trained for service "over there" he might have revised his estimate. Certainly it was a jolt to the self-esteem of some of the professional men who (at first) had a high idea of their worth to their outfits.

Two battery commanders of an artillery regiment were engaged in a heated argument. Overhearing part of it, the regimental adjutant undertook to adjust their differences.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"He's trying to get a man away from my outfit," replied Captain No. 1.

"Well, I offered him a fair exchange," declared Captain No. 2.

"Who's the man, anyway?" asked the adjutant.

"A muleskinner and a darned good one," said Captain No. 1.

"What are you going to give him?" asked the adjutant.

"A banker and two salesmen," replied Captain No. 2. Then in a sudden burst of generosity, he added, "And if he insists, I'll throw in a lawyer to boot."

Not Localized

And now about those cooties of the A. E. F.

Twenty times more soldiers had them, it is estimated, than were bothered with rats and other pests peculiar to army life. You didn't have to be in the line to attract the coots. The S. O. S. had 'em, too, and extraordinary care was taken at Brest and other points of embarkation, as a result, to see that all soldiers returning to America were properly deloused.

On board ship countless arguments arose, when men had nothing but their scalps to scratch, about "cooties I have known." One of these returning home arguments was aboard the U. S. S. South Dakota, between a soldier and a marine.

"Where'd you find the most of 'em?" inquired the doughboy, referring to cooties.

"Brest," said the leatherneck.

"Cripes!" returned the doughboy. "I had 'em all over me!"

Onion Is Fastidious

The lowly onion, popular as a food even back to the days when the pyramids were built, may be common, but it is, nevertheless, a highly particular vegetable, so far as growing conditions are concerned. It requires especially soil of high fertility and well drained. It will not grow if weeds be present, and it needs cold, moist soil while growing and warm, dry conditions at maturity

Sound Sleeper

While a guest at a Watsontown (Pa.) inn, Harold McNutt, of Baltimore, slept for almost an hour unmindful of a fire in the mattress under him. During the night the hotel clerk thought he detected smoke. He investigated and found that it was coming out of McNutt's room. He forced the door and saw clouds of smoke coming from the mattress, although flames were not yet visible. He dragged the sleeping man out of bed and tossed the mattress out the window.

It is an everlasting duty, the duty of being brave.

Anyway, the self-made man hasn't anyone to blame but himself.

Recalling a Case of Doughboy Nerve

I was attendant in a hospital in France and a doctor who had just been relieved from front line duty was dressing a patient who had lost both legs, and recognized him as a man he had attended at the front. The doctor turned to me and stated: "Delaney, this fellow has more nerve than any man I've ever seen. I crawled to him one night on the Meuse-Argonne front and found him sitting in the mud with one leg underneath him and one dangling on the side. I gave him an antitetanus and found both legs so near amputated by a shell fragment that there was nothing holding them but the tendons. I opened my instrument bag and severed the tendons from the left leg and started bandaging the stub. When about half through the man asked me to hurry, as several of his buddies were laying around calling for help. He had picked up my scalpel and severed the few tendons and remaining flesh that held his other leg on, and asked me if there was anything else that he could do to hurry my work so that some of his comrades could be relieved. That's what I call nerve." The patient only smiled as the doctor talked on to me, and then remarked: "It hurts worse now than it did then, doctor."—Rudicel Delaney, Five Hundred and Forty-third Engineers, V. W. F.

Not Sure

Lee Shubert, on his return from France, talked to a reporter about the French ratification of the Mellon-Berenger war debt settlement.

"Nobody seems to know," said Mr. Shubert, "either here or in France, whether this settlement ought to be liked or disliked.

"Public opinion on the question reminds me of the bachelor.

"'Are you married?' they asked the bachelor.

"'Alas, no, thank heaven!' he answered."

Like Hammerfest in Norway, Prussia has a village upon which the sun never shines during the winter. The name of the community is Forstlangswasser and it is located in the Giant mountains. One of the best vacation stories is about Fritz Kreisler. The famous violinist spent his vacation in Maine one summer, and hired a guide. Mr. Kreisler had his own ideas of a vacation. The French-Canadian guide explains very well what kind of a holiday that was.

"I no und'stan' heem. He pay me five dollar a day to be guide. He no hunt, he no fish, no climb mountain, all he do he sit all day an' play dam' fiddle."

There are 36 pictures worked on the quilt, each characteristic of some phase of early California life and each picture has the embroidered signature of a pioneer.

Minnesota Population Shows Small Increase

Final population figures for Minnesota have just been issued in bulletin form by the Census Bureau. The population of the State on April 1, 1930, was 2,563,953, which represents an increase of 176,828, or 7.4 per cent, as compared with the enumeration in January, 1920. This is the smallest rate of increase in any decade of the history of the State, and the smallest numerical increase since the decade 1850 to 1860.

In 1849, the territory of Minnesota was organized from the area now comprising the State and parts of what is now North and South Dakota. In 1858, Minnesota, with its boundaries as at present, was admitted to the Union as the thirty-second state. The enumeration of 1850, taken while it was still a territory, showed 6,077 inhabitants. During the ensuing decade the population was increased to 172,023, or a rate increase of 2,730.7 per cent. At each successive census the rate of increast has declined, but the largest numerical increase was revealed by the census of 1890, when the gain was 529,510, or 67.8 per cent.

The total land area of the State is 80,858 square miles, and the average number of inhabitants per square mile was 31.7 in 1930, as compared with 29.5 in 1920.

A copy of the first series population bulletin for Minnesota, giving the number of inhabitants in each county, township, city, village, and borough, may be obtained by writing to the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C.

Cause of Low Grain Prices

Ineffective distribution rather than overproduction is largely responsible for existing low grain prices, according to L. R. Roberts, treasurer of the Minnesota Wheat Growers.

"So long as there is a hungry mouth that goes unfed," says Mr. Roberts, "there may possibly be overproduction, but there most certainly is faulty distribution. The hunger and distress that is world-wide today does not speak very well for 'the best marketing system ever devised by man,' as friends of the private grain trade have repeatedly declared that system of marketing to be. In an emergency of international proportions it has failed utterly, as it has always failed, to take any effective steps to close the gap between producer and consumer. Its sole interest now is, as it always has been, to keep unimpaired its own zone of operating charges and profits, regardless of either the producer or the consumer. The relative prices of grain at the elevator and of bread at the table tell eloquently that the private grain trade and its associated industries do not regard either producer or consumer.

"No manufacturing industry of record has yet risen to greatness and prosperity with the sale of its products in other hands other than its own. Farming is no exception to that rule. The economic salvation of the farmer lies in self-organization and self-control of his industry and of the products of that industry."

Have You a Job?

It has surely been a great many years since those of us who are so fortunate as to have the means to provide the comforts of life had cause for greater thanksgiving than we have this Thanksgiving.

Many hundreds of thousands are out of work, and have been for a long time past. The majority of these have been asking alms. No one knows what will become of them during this winter, unless those who have, will share of their means to help those who now have nothing.

Conditions, close times, drouth, etc., have worked a severe hardship on the Christian Home Orphanage at Council Bluffs, Iowa. It is unable to meet the demands made on it, and with winter at hand, and calls for help from scores who are absolutely without food or shelter, rapidly increasing as colder weather approaches, appeals are made to good people everywhere to come to the aid of this national child-saving institution. Let those of us who are working and earning, share at this Thanksgiving season with the unfortunate ones.

The Christian Home Orphanage is non-sectarian and is supported wholly by the voluntary gifts of the people. The Home was established in 1882.

If possible help this work to the extent of your ability at Thanksgiving.

Address the Christian Home Orphanage, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Dad Has The Keys

DAD? What's he? Aw, he's the person I go to for the keys to the car."

This sums up — all too completely — the whole relationship between some fathers and sons. But this kind is few, after all. For a renewed warmth of comradeship seems to be developing, and speaks well for the future.

Dad holds not merely the keys to the car, but also the keys to his boy's success in life, if he uses them wisely. The ideals of thrift and credit—the basis of financial integrity—are usually copied from Dad.

The condition of a boy's Savings Account is a splendid index of his father's influence on Character in the Making.

To be a Healthy Woman watch your Bowels!

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients. It doesn't sicken or weaken you. No restrictions of habit or diet are necessary while taking it. But its action is thorough. It carries off the sour bile and poisonous waste. It does everything you want it to do. It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all druggists keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

Boiling Water

While water is being boiled it is in motion caused by the expansion of the water nearest the source of heat. These particles rise, and the cooler and heavier particles from above move into their place, setting up what are called convection currents through the water. This process continues until all the water is at a uniform temperature.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

Too Late to Save Them

Armistice day is a day of "elevens." World war hostilities ceased on the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month of the year. To that series may be added one more eleven—the story of the 11 American soldiers for whom the Armistice came too late.

On the afternoon of November 12, an afternoon that was crisp and dry as if in mockery of the gloomy, wet days of the last fighting, surviving members of the Third battalion of the One Hundred and Third infantry gathered around an open grave on the slopes of the Cote de Caures in the Meuse-Argonne region. In it, shoulder to shoulder as they had fought, lay the bodies of 11 American soldiers covered by an American flag.

The previous day their comrades of the One Hundred and Third had found the bodies of the little group for whom the Armistice came too late. Its commander, Lieut. Herbert Peart, was sitting beside a tree, a bullet through his head. In one hand was a pencil. In the other was a piece of paper on which was written "Captain Cabot: 7:10 a. m. Am held up by machine gun fire on left. Have located four of them. Also on my right—" There the message ended in a scrawl.

About him lay the bodies of his ten men. The roster of their names is typical of the cosmopolitan make-up of the A. E. F. They were the following: Corp. Leon leBonville, Privates Charles Worth, Frank Klavikowski, J. McGiven, John Elliott, F. R. Snow, Albert O. Abraham, Charles W. Bargiall, William Whitney and Moses W. Neptune. They had died fighting together only a few hours before the Armistice was signed and a few hours after that event they were being buried together in the same grave.

The Corpse That Came Back

Battery D of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth artillery, Thirty-third division, was moving up toward the front by train from Besancon. During the night journey a horse became frightened, broke its halter rope and proceeded to make things lively in that car for all concerned. Private McAllister tried to catch the horse, whereupon the wild-eyed animal planted its heels in Private McAllister's chest, gave a mighty push and Private McAllister went sailing out through the side door into the night.

It was some time before the accident was reported to the major who stopped the train and sent telegrams back, directing searching parties to look for the corpse and give it proper burial. Eighteen hours later Battery B passed that way and saw the body still lying along the track, whereat there was much indignation at the negligence of the French who would allow the body of an ally to lie uncared for.

But that night a bedraggled soldier appeared in Battery D's camp, staggered up to Lieutenant Plantz and saluted, "Sir, my name's McAllister," he said, "I have the first sergeant's permission to say that I didn't go A. W. O. L. A bloody horse kicked me out of the car. I kinda got hurt and stayed in the ditch all night, but I flagged a troop train this morning and came in. And, and, lieutenant, (and here the speaker's tone was abjectly apologetic) I'm sorry about it but I couldn't help it. I sure tried to take care of it, but I didn't know the horse was going to boot me. I'll sure pay you for it, lieutenant." "Pay me for what?" asked the puzzled officer. "Why, you see, when that bloody horse kicked me out the door and I landed in the ditch I broke the globe on your flashlight," replied Private McAllister!

Swank

When you think of swank, you remember the British. Their officers excelled in immaculate dress, disregard of personal danger and the sort of nonchalance that reached for a fag in the hottest moments.

Sing ho! then for the tiny but spic-and-span Guards officer assigned to a company of Australians, back of the lines south of Amiens.

His dress was complete and satisfying, even to swagger stick and monocle the day he fell the soldiers in for inspection for the first time. Even the Aussies, hard-boiled as they were, gulped a moment over such sartorial perfection.

The soldiers were properly impressed. When the swanky one appeared next day he found each Aussie wearing a monocle, staring blandly through it at strict attention.

"Ha!" exclaimed our immaculate "leftenant" after the first shock passed. He plucked from its eye his own monocle, flipped it high in air and caught it in the socket as it came down again.

"Try that, you blighters!" chortled the little officer triumphantly. And he turned proudly on heel and walked away.

It's Jolly Pastime—Sleeping in Cell!

San Francisco.—C. V. Phelps, twenty-six, Alameda, thinks sleeping in a cell is a jolly pastime. As a result he's still in the cell at the Alameda city jail instead of appearing in court to answer to a drunkenness charge.

Phelps, irate jailers revealed, stuffed the cell lock with broken matches, pins and papers. When they came in for him the lock refused to open and officials were forced to call in a locksmith.

Phelps sat on the cell bench and chuckled. They left him in to see how long he'd chuckle.

TORCH MURDERER IS CALLOUS FIEND

Laughs at Groans as Woman Burns to Death.

Sylva, N. C.—One of the most callous torch murders in this state's history was recounted to police by a young girl who witnessed it.

J. K. Privett of Ninety-Six, S. C., the alleged killer, is in jail awaiting trial on a murder charge.

The story was told by the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mrs. Had Brown, also of Ninety-Six, the victim of the slayer's cruelty.

Mrs. Brown and her daughter were driving near this town with Privett when their car upset on the road. The girl and Privett were thrown clear, but Mrs. Brown was pinned under the machine.

The girl made a frantic effort to get her mother out of the machine and then turned to Privett for aid.

Calmly pushing her back, she said, he lighted a cigarette, flipped the match into the gasoline spilled when the car overturned and watched the machine burn.

According to the girl, he found himself a comfortable seat on the bank of the road, puffed on the cigarette and laughed as he heard the injured woman groaning beneath the automobile.

Fearing a fate similar to her mother's the girl nevertheless continued her frantic efforts to extricate her mother and then ran for help. She was brought here by motorists, and police captured Privett.

A checkup of the past lives of the pair is being made in an effort to find a motive for the killer's cruelty.

One police theory is that the pair had been intimate, that Privett was tired of their relationship and that he seized the opportunity to get rid of the woman in what could look like an accident.

Seek Gambling Thrill; Routed as Ship Burns

Long Beach, Calif.—Four hundred thrill seekers are safe ashore after having found far more excitement than they had bargained for on the gambling boat Monfalcone, anchored two miles off Huntington Beach.

Fire started on the floating casino recently, while a capacity crowd danced and played at the elaborate gaming tables on the upper decks. Amid great confusion, small fishing boats and coast guard cutters rescued all aboard just before a great burst of flames completely engulfed the Monfalcone.

Fishing boats in the vicinity were the first to reach the burning vessel and removed a large part of the crowd before the first coast guard cutter arrived. The fishing schooners, jammed to capacity with terrified passengers, carried their loads to the Johanna Smith, another gambling ship anchored a mile away.

The fire started from a minor explosion caused by a broken gasoline line on the motor which furnished power for the ship's lighting system. Two men of the crew who were at work on the line were burned.

Al Galli, a dealer at one of the gambling tables, suffered from exposure when he leaped over the side of the ship to rescue a friend who had dived into the sea at the first alarm. Both men were pulled from the water by coast guardsmen.

Damage to the Monfalcone was estimated at $50,000.

Here's Whiskered Theory on Eugenics Problem

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for every-day use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

Posterity's Debt to Loggers

The lumber pioneers first built tote roads and later logging railways—built the railways into rugged mountains and through quavering muskegs and swamps. The lumberman's early tote roads later became the roadways of prosperous agricultural regions—now the magnificent hard-surfaced automobile highways traversed by millions. The crooked, logging railways in many instances have become the trunk lines of great common carriers. The log rafts were the first craft which navigated thousands of miles of rivers and streams and the lumberjack loggers the first river men.

Surprise for Washington

George Washington was a lumberman. He conducted lumbering operations at different places on the Atlantic seaboard. As a lumberman, a woodsman, and a surveyor, Washington knew the value of trees. He would be surprised could he now see what tremendous depletion of our forest resources has taken place in 200 years, says the American Tree association of Washington. As a statesman, with the future of his country ever in mind he would be a most earnest advocate of the restoration of our forests wherever economically possible. He would realize that the nation must become forest minded.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan, with the purpose of requisitioning the place for government use. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home.

—3—

"Good!" he exclaimed. "But it will not work rapidly enough, Tovarisch Loris. We must make them sleep two and three in a bed as we—as the common people do, when they can get beds at all. A suite of rooms to a person—it is a crime, I tell you, a crime!"

"I agree," assented Loris, "that it is an abuse which must end. Tovarisch Petrov, what was that case of which we were speaking together?"

"I have it in my hand," said the student, holding a packet of papers close to his near-sighted eyes. "It is a report on a family named Krassin."

"I know them!" said Vilinsky. "They have a house almost as big as this palace! What is the nature of this report, Tovarisch Petrov?"

"It deals with their house, and with the family. The house seems, from what can be said without a domiciliary visit, to be well occupied by members of the family, which is extensive. The old woman who is really the head of the family asserts that it is full. She is a very vigorous person, Mrs. Krassin."

"I know," said Vilinsky.

"The immediate family," went on Petrov, "consists of the mother of whom I have spoken, the father, who is said to be a helpless invalid, a former judge—"

"I know!" exclaimed Vilinsky.

"A daughter, a young girl, and a son—"

"Ilya Krassin," said Vilinsky bitterly. "A young peacock of an aristocrat. A former officer in a Guards regiment. I know!"

"It is suspected," continued Petrov, "that Ilya Krassin is engaged in secret plotting with the enemies of the proletariat."

"Of course he is," exclaimed Vilinsky.

"Naturally," remarked Loris, "if he was an officer of a Guards regiment! I regret," looking at a magnificent watch, "that I must now take my departure. I think we have had a good meeting. This Krassin family, and all the important houses of which we have had reports, will bear further investigation. Let the necessary measures be taken at once!"

The commissar, who had made that amiable suggestion as to thinning out the occupants of the palaces by executions, was subject to certain physical revulsions of feeling which seemed to have no moral parallel in his mind. He was disgusted, as he swept through clouds of dust, his motor car flying with no regard to safety through the wind-swept pulverized filth of the city.

The statue of the poet Derzhavin was piled about the base with dreadful garbage. The huger statue of Czar Alexander III, liberator of the serfs, who now were in process of being set free over again by Liberators Lenine and Trotzky, was unapproachable.

Yet, the krepost or citadel, from which he was now making toward that car of his in the railway yards, with its wall running from tower to tower of the five by which it was dominated, was an impressive sight, enclosing as it did a wide space from which the great cathedral and numerous churches lifted golden domes in testimony to Christ, and the red-brick Suyumbeka tower which attracted to its two hundred and fifty feet of height the eyes of every Mussulman, who venerated it as the birthplace of one of his saints. Full of the mystery, the stern stress of Russian history was this great jewel of a place in the center of Kazan, where these historic buildings were grouped about the old krepost and governor's palace, now occupied by a new tyranny; but Loris' car, as it moved out past the ragged sentry at the gates, plowed through a slough of filth that not even the summer sun and heat had been able to bake from disease in mud to disease in solid form. Bolshevist Kazan was remarkable in this: It was much more foul than czarist or republican Kazan had been. To anyone not actually employed in scavenging, its filth was inconceivable, in a great many ways.

And as the commissar passed the Teatralny square in which stood the fine structure in which Kazan's permanent grand opera had been housed, he noted again the extent to which it had been damaged by the gunfire of the Czechs, when they had occupied the old town.

"A pity!" he thought; "though Tovarisch Vilinsky would not be much interested. He means to go higher in our new government. . . . I never thought I should care much about being the rung of a ladder . . . not for such as he . . . not for anyone. . . . I wonder why he is so much interested in that Krassin family. With him, it must be one of three things: money, revenge, woman. . . . And of course, the welfare of the masses!"

He found a numerous group of people about his car as he alighted and crossed the platform, to none of whom did he pay the slightest attention. He found awaiting him in the car itself, its only occupant so far as the public room was concerned, an old woman of the Tartars, so numerous in Kazan. She was not merely old—she was ancient, but she stepped as lightly as a bird. She made a spot in the room, with her bright dress of yellow and red made up of many flounces, like a gorgeous rug; and as she moved the string of copper and silver coins which hung from her neck, wrists and hair made music which brought to one's mind visions of desert-girt cities and streets of bazaars away off beyond the Caspian. They tinkled louder, as she made the obeisance of the days of old as Loris entered.

"It is you, grandmother," said he. "I wanted to speak to you."

"It is I, son," she replied.

"There is a family, once a great family, of whom I want knowledge."

"In Kazan province, my son?" she said.

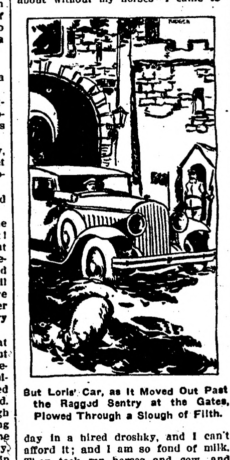
"In Kazan city," said Loris.

"Then it is simple," replied the Tartar woman. "What is it you wish to know?"

CHAPTER III

Inside the House of Krassin

"Oh, they are dreadful, dreadful!" exclaimed the Princess Khaborovskaya. "The Bolsheviki, I mean—they have mobilized horses and cows; and see how it affects me! I cannot get about without my horses—I came to-day in a hired droshky, and I can't afford it; and I am so fond of milk. They took my horses and cow, and did not even give me money for them, but only a piece of paper. Can I drive the piece of paper? Will the piece of paper give me milk? I almost lost my senses. If I had not stopped to think of the possible consequences, I should have said something very sharp to them. I had had those horses ten years—just think! It was difficult to feed them—but they were such nice horses! I loved them! And I do so miss the milk!"



But Loris' Car, as It Moved Out Past the Ragged Sentry at the Gates, Plowed Through a Slough of Filth.

It was in the salon of the house of Krassin, and the people passing in and out, lounging and sitting there were the ones of whom Commissar Vilinsky had spoken at the session of the Kazan government.

They were not a very dangerous looking gang. The little princess who spoke was Mrs. Krassin's "little old cousin," who had moved in exalted circles, and was now with alternate indignation and smiles making salon talk of the loss of her horses and her cow.

She was of "an honorable age," in spite of which she was a ball of human quicksilver, bright, ever-moving, irrepressible. She had seen as a woman the growth of Mrs. Krassin up through the age if not the charm of maidenhood to become a formidable personage at the age when girls love to be wooed as clinging and defenseless; yet she was younger in spirit than Mrs. Krassin, and commented upon the new state of society as volubly as she had done on Mrs. Krassin's marriage to a man who was only of the smaller nobility—Judge Krassin.

The little princess took in the new situation which confronted Russia and the Russians, so far at least as its surface went, more quickly than did her cousin, if not quite fully. She was affected almost to the point of extinction by each new enormity of the Bolsheviki, felt keenly the attacks on her Old world traditions and conventions, made a great to-do about each when it was a fresh topic, and next day would be quite recovered and her old voluble and not uncheerful self again. A pleasant, harmless gossipy old lady was the princess, who never in her life had done an inelegant thing, and scarcely a wrong one—the two being to her practically identical.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Insect Pests Persistent in Onslaught on Grain

Even when grain has been harvested, despite the onslaught of various insect pests, the product is not free from attack. In fact, some of the most serious damage is done to grain after it has been placed in storage, for the insects which attack at that time bore from within. The larvae are inside the grain seed and their presence is not disclosed until the damage is done.

Any one of 46 species of insects may damage stored grain. With the exception of the aforementioned major pests—the rice weevil, the granary weevil, the Angoumois grain moth and the lesser grain borer—all stages of these insects feed principally on the outside of the kernels. Their presence is readily detected and they can be removed from the grain by fanning and screening. They do not usually attack grain that is unbroken and in good condition, but quickly follow after the attack of one of the major pests and help complete the work of destruction.

FOR COLDS—ALKALINIZE YOUR SYSTEM

Doctors everywhere are prescribing this new treatment for colds:

Begin when you feel a cold coming. Take a tablespoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, morning, noon and night, the first day. Do the same second day. Then only at night.

Colds reduce the alkalinity of your system. That's what makes you feel achy, feverish, weak, half-sick. Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is alkali in harmless, palatable form. It checks the symptoms of colds by restoring the alkalinity of your system.

Relieves sour stomach, indigestion, gas, over-acidity. All drugstores.

Way to Start Fire

"I have discovered a fine way in which to start a fire in the grate," a man of family observed. "Heretofore it has been somewhat of a task to get paper and kindling and charcoal and coal. Now all I do is clean out the grate just enough to give a draft. Then I put in three or four moth balls, then some charcoal and then a few lumps of coal. I light the moth balls, and in a short time the charcoal is aglow, and it is only a few minutes until the coal is crackling. I got the idea of the moth balls from a hunter friend of mine who always carries a half-dozen or more in his hunting coat for use in the woods if he has to build a fire. The wind won't blow out a burning moth ball, and a fire is certain with one match."—Detroit News.

Man's Feathered Friends

The importance of birds to the forest is usually overlooked, although it is commonly stated that birds are tremendously important to agriculture. In forestry little attention has been paid to birds destroying harmful forest insects. This is probably due to the fact that the quantity of insects destroyed by birds is not widely known. Accumulated evidence, however, shows that birds consume enormous numbers of insects at the season of the year when such destruction is of most economic benefit.

Small Girl Probably Right, but Not Polite

"We need have no fear for the future of America as long as our young folks remain normal," says Judge Lindsey, "We criticize our so-called 'flaming youth' and justly so, but the kiddies are just as wholesome and as natural as they ever were.

"A fashionable Denver woman gave what she intended to be a very select party for her five-year-old daughter. It wasn't to be a children's party, but a gathering of little men and women.

"But the children wouldn't have it that way. They laughed and fought and romped just like ordinary children. Finally one little chap went up to his equally small hostess and said:

"'Gee whiz! My mother has telephoned three times for me to come home. What do you suppose is the matter?' And to the fashionable mother's consternation her tiny super-daughter replied:

"'I guess she wants you to get home before you bust.'"

NEW FARM ENGINE HAS A "BUILT-IN" HEATER FOR WATER

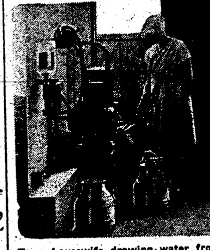
Running of Engine Furnishes Water for Washing Milking Utensils.

A gasoline engine with a "built-in" heater that heats water for washing the milker while it runs the milking machine or performs other tasks, is a new development in dairy farming.

The engine differs from the usual type of farm engine in that it is patterned after the modern automobile engine, according to the De Laval Bureau of Dairying. Extremely simple in construction, the engine is about as fool-proof as a piece of mechanism can be, and capable of being run by anyone without the slightest mechanical knowledge. An efficient magneto delivers a hot flaming spark at all speeds, a carburetor of novel design makes for starting ease in any weather, and an automatic governor control makes attention or manipulation on the part of the operator almost unnecessary.

Water Heater Is Built In.

But the unique feature of this engine, and one sure to be appreciated by the man who uses the milking machine, is the water heater built right into the engine. This consists of a four and a half-gallon tank which is connected to the cylinder water jacket of the engine. When the engine is being run, the water used to cool the engine circulates through and around the water jacket and heater tank and becomes heated to a temperature high enough for use in washing the milker or other dairy utensils. This takes place without mechanical assistance, and the result of thermo-syphonic action—warmest water rising to the top—the very same principle used in auto radiators. A convenient drain cock at the bottom of the water heater enables the water to be easily drawn into a pail.



Farm housewife drawing water from built-in water heater in new type of farm engine.

The economy and convenience of this water heater will appeal greatly to every dairy farmer, according to the De Laval Bureau. It makes for cleaner milk because it makes easy the cleaning of the milking equipment after each milking. The fact that there is a sufficient supply of hot water on hand for use immediately after milking also saves labor by reducing the time required to thoroughly wash the milker. The bother and expense of heating water on the kitchen stove or some other place is eliminated, and the water has no chance to cool off because it does not have to be carried far, the engine necessarily being located close to where the milking is done. And all this—and this is probably the best feature of the heater—is accomplished without any added expense because the water is automatically heated during the period in which the engine runs the milking machine.

Has Other Uses, Too.

After it has been used for milking, the engine can be run to operate the cream separator, the churn, the farm lighting plant or any other equipment coming within power range. Tests have shown that the operation of the engine is so smooth and its governor control so definite that when used to drive a lighting plant not the slightest flicker is noticeable.

BANKERS TO HOLD GREAT CONVENTION

Cleveland, Ohio, has been designated for the 1930 annual convention of the American Bankers Association. This organization, which numbers about 20,000 banks with $65,000,000,000 in assets, is annually the nation's most important financial event. The attendance ranges between five and ten thousand.

Cleveland is especially significant in the history of the Association's educational traditions since it was in this city, when the organization last met there in the year 1899, that the original resolution was presented looking to the formation of an educational section. This subsequently resulted in the American Institute of Banking in which are now enrolled 35,000 bank men and women engaged in the study of the technical and scientific phases of the business.

ELECTION NOTICE

The Annual Village Election will be held on Tuesday, December 2nd, 1930, between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. of said day. Said election will be held in the village hall.

All village officers will be elected, with the exception of one Councilman (Theo. Ness) who holds over for another year.

The Village Council has been requested to grant a license for operating a pool or billiard hall within the corporate limits of the village of Holt. In order that the Council about to be elected may be guided by the wishes of the people in this matter, the following question will be placed on the Caucus Ballot:

"Shall the Village Council grant a license for the operating of pool or billiard halls within the limits of the Village of Holt?"

YES
NO

GEO. FRICKER, Village Clerk.

Deer War Over

The wild deer hunting season is now over and as far as we know all the sportsmen who left this locality in search of the fleet footed tribe have returned home again.

The home boys did not fare so well this season as two years ago when each man got his deer. Even so, it is better to be able to check in alive after the season then to get pottted out in the woods and get a rush call to start pushing up daisies.

At Greenbush a man was shot on Monday and last week a St. Paul man was killed at Roreau. In all to-date about 20 men have been shot in the state during the deer season to say nothing about other accidents which put a lot of men in the hospitals.

"Off Flavors"

Aside from being frozen, winter cream shows a big assortment of off flavors.

There is a tendency to store the cream in any available cool room, such as the pantry, basement, or closed porch.

Any cream so kept will soon develope musty or smothered flavors, and will not go as Land O'Lakes.

A good plan is to keep it the same in the winter as in the summer, in the cooling tank, and stir it while it is cooling after separating.

Dad Has The Keys

DAD? What's he? Aw, he's the person I go to for the keys to the car."

This sums up — all too completely — the whole relationship between some fathers and sons. But this kind is few, after all. For a renewed warmth of comradeship seems to be developing, and speaks well for the future.

Dad holds not merely the keys to the car, but also the keys to his boy's success in life, if he uses them wisely. The ideals of thrift and credit—the basis of financial integrity—are usually copied from Dad.

The condition of a boy's Savings Account is a splendid index of his father's influence on Character in the Making.

Strongest

"Gerald suffered with his stomach and bowels until he was listless and weak," says Mrs. B. E. Geren, 822 W. Main St., Oklahoma City, Okla. "Now he's the strongest boy I know. I gave him California Fig Syrup because Mother used it. It increased his appetite, regulated his bowels, helped his digestion."

Nothing could be more convincing than the way thousands of mothers are praising California Fig Syrup to show how it acts to build-up and strengthen headachy, bilious, half-sick, constipated children.

Your doctor will approve the use of this pure vegetable product as often as impure breath, coated tongue, listlessness or feverishness warn of constipation—or to keep bowels open in colds or children's diseases.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan, with the purpose of requisitioning the place for government use. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Loris promises to investigate.

She was mourning her horses and cow, so low had her possession fallen in number and value, to a young man named Vladimir, one of those young men who had flocked to Kazan from the capital, because he was a citizen of the place—and because he was drifting. Sitting in salons was the great occupation of the Russian nobility at this time—as in fact, it had always been. Historians of the French revolution describe the Knitters in the Sun, who scarcely paused in their knitting as they counted their "one, two" and so on as the guillotine rose and fell. The antithesis of the Knitters in the Sun are the Sitters in the Salon.

The young man Vladimir listened attentively to the princess. He had slipped into the Krassin house by a gate on the back street the night before, and wore defiantly the uniform with its soft golden epaulettes of his old regiment. Defiantly, for they were banned by the Bolsheviki. He would have sung "God Save the Czar" in public if occasion had called for it. The wearing of the forbidden insignia was characteristic of his bold reckless contempt of the usurpers of the power of the Russian people and of his class—the vaunt of race. He answered the princess as if she had been placing before him a matter of high statecraft.

"The new way," said he. "It won't last long."

"I am glad you are so hopeful," said Colonel Boyarsky. "I hope you are right, Vladimir. And you, my dear princess, are no worse off than others. They have taken almost all the animals in Kazan under this thievish decree!"

The colonel wore no forbidden insignia. He had come from Petrograd to his old family seat here, because his occupation in Petrograd was gone in these Leninized days, life there had become so hard, and he had hoped that the grain, fruits, fowls and other provisions of his Kazan lands might keep in that old, delicately nurtured body the breath of a life, which, strange to say, was still of value to him. Courtly, soldierly from the crown of his gray head to the soles of his not very well-shod feet, his beard trimmed like that of Nicholas II, his erect form, and manner elegant almost to excess, might serve as an advertisement of his rank to any servant or oppressor of the proletariat who might catch a glimpse of him. A typical Sitter in the Salon.

The Sitters in the Salon had always talked—and always talked elegantly and usually rather well—of those in power. They did so now, as we have heard; but Mrs. Krassin and the princess soon managed a little aside on the phase of the subject which related to Ilya Krassin, Mrs. Krassin's son, and his peril under the Soviet power. The mother refused to admit that there was any peril; but, though to a stranger she would have seemed as cool as when she was surrounded by her great friends and her corps of submissive servants in the old days, her intimates surprised a frightened look in her eyes from time to time, as she patted her graying hair and made her habitual gesture of courtesy toward one of the speakers.

"I beg your pardon," said she to Colonel Boyarsky. "I did not quite understand what you were saying to Vladimir."

"I was saying," said the colonel, "that this fearful scourge of human beasts, if I may express myself so strongly, is taking on new peril to everything good in this Loris—and the rabble under him. It is hard to enumerate the consequences."

"They are very numerous," said Mrs. Krassin. "They and the refugees from the German front are simply packing the town full."

"I do not mean the number of them," replied the colonel, and he would have been proud to know how much like Nicholas II he looked as he made his characteristic flourish with his hand, "but the effects of their control. Nor the material effects, either, though they are very evil—"

"I agree with you there," said Mrs. Krassin, as if to evade a facing of the real subject of the colonel's words. "I suffer some of these material consequences. The people on my lands are behaving very badly. Some of them actually claim that they own the lands! But others are bringing in a part of what they took from us, and are, I am sure, giving a part of the loot to the Bolsheviki, trying to act so as to be safe, whoever finally wins, I suppose. I should be desperate if I did not have about two years' provisions in the refrigerators and storerooms. What we are coming to I can not imagine."

She was plaintive over her evil plight; she was triumphant because it was no worse; and she was courteous according to the old hospitable ethics of her class in thus giving her guests the assurance that there was still plenty for all. It was a characteristic speech. As for the complaint in it, all the landowners had acquired the habit of speaking like children or servants conscious of injustice and abuse; and back of it all was a sense of impending scarcity, even with all their supplies on hand. If the Nile could think, it, too, would complain on becoming conscious of the fact that the rainfall in Abyssinia and the lake region had permanently ceased, and that when the water already coming downstream should fail there would be no more—and no more Nile.

Why should Mrs. Krassin refrain from complaining at a similar catastrophe? She had been a Vaturlin; and all the Volga valley knows that the Vaturlin family have been great people since the Tartar invasions. By birth they were of the higher nobility—some members of this and other old families maintained among themselves that they were better born than any of the royal family.

They had always controlled things through their ownership of lands, and their powerful organization. Their men had always presided at the local military mobilizations. They had controlled a majority of votes in the zemstvo, and held many honorable offices, serving always without salary.

They were conscious of having devoted themselves to the state, of having made sacrifices, of having rendered valuable service and duty to the nation. Whatever may have been their public virtues, they felt virtuous and unselfish. Whatever they received from the old order came to them like the light of morning or the rain from heaven, as a part of the natural scheme of things.

Had it not always been so? Why should not Mrs. Krassin have two years' provisions laid in, even in this time of scarcity? Was not her brother a Vaturlin, an elected marshal of the nobility? Did she not have near relatives who held high diplomatic posts, who had been officers of the Guards, who were in confidential places in the ministries in Petrograd? Was not her uncle a secretary of the interior? Was not her cousin a freilina at the court of the Empress Mother? Why should she not live in plenty and security with the homage and service of everybody paid to her as it had always been? There was no answer in this salon. The Bolshevik revolution with its oligarchy did not bring an answer to this fearful question of inequality of human beings. In the house of Krassin, they were the queries of knaves, fools, assassins and lunatics.

And yet, with all their ability and training in public life, these people of the upper nobility were the first to suffer in the revolution. In the first fall of a government to the forces of the revolution, they were in a majority; and then came the second coup—the loss of their lands.

They were down and out before anyone else fell. The banks, the merchants and the manufacturers held on for two years or so after what Vilinsky called "the Krassin gang" were already down and done for, had they only known it. Before the revolution most of them had gloated over criticism of the old government, the imperial family, or, for that matter, over any government or power, and now they sat in their salons and talked bitterly of the old times; yet nobody could say how they might have escaped ruin. The Dice of Destiny were loaded against them: not only against their fortunes and their bodies; their very souls were on trial.

First Brick House in Quaker City Preserved

On Lansdowne drive, in the West park, near Thirty-fourth street and Girard avenue, stands the first brick house built in Philadelphia, says an article in the Philadelphia Record.

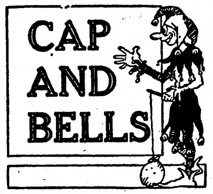
William Penn built it for his daughter, Letitia, when they lived at Market street between Front and Second. The founder was a man of simple habits and he ordered the house built plain and small, of red brick, two stories high, and with a small rear addition. It was the first house in the city to have a cellar and a garret.

For many years it stood on Letitia court, while other structures grew up around it almost hiding it from view. For a while after Letitia's death it was used for a tavern.

Finally in 1883, as an outcome of the historic interest it inspired during the celebration of the bicentennial anniversary of the founding of Pennsylvania, it was carefully taken down and re-erected on its present site in the park.

Desert Aster a Beauty

In Painted canyon is found the desert aster—superlative one of all western composites bearing the much-used name of "aster,"—lavender-rayed, with yellow center, and two or three inches across. And with enough irregularity to give it an air which we can only satisfactorily describe as chic. It is a perennial, with a low woody base, a generous annual growth of slender herbaceous branches, and a liberal dower of foliage.

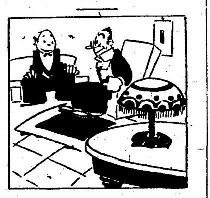


THE RECITAL

The lengthy recital had drawn to a close, ice cream and cake had been served, and the teacher was bidding the students good-by. One of the little performers had brought her small brother with her. As he was about to leave, the teacher beamingly asked: "Well, Bobby, did you enjoy the recital?"

"Yes," answered Bobby, "all but the music."

AN OVERSIGHT



Howell—So you are married?

Powell—Yes, but it was contributory negligence on my part; I kept calling on the girl all through leap year.

A Computation

A man once joined a fishing club,
It was his dearest wish.
It cost him twenty dollars
Every time he caught a fish.

His Big Fear

Wife—I notice that you cut an article on "How to Live to Be a Hundred" out of the magazine. Why did you do that?

Hub—I was afraid your mother might read it.—British Columbia Star.

Aren't You Proud?

"Sweetheart, do you think your father will object?"

"No, John, I'm certain dad won't interfere with our marriage. He always gives in to my worst whims."—Exchange.

An Ambiguous Compliment

Young Sappe—I've just inherited $100,000. Ain't I the lucky dog?

Miss Dill—Right now you're a little immature. But you will be one if you live long enough. You're started that way.

Odds Against the Men

"Is there a war between the sexes?"

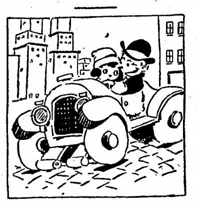
"If there is, the men don't stand much chance. Some fellows surrender every time they see a pretty girl."

Whew!

"Did you know your wife very long before you married her?"

"Oh, yes. I've known her since we were the same age."—Echoes.

EASY TO GET AROUND



She (to new acquaintance)—Do you have any difficulty going round curves?

Autoist (demonstrating at once)—Not the slightest, my dear.

Looking Forward

By some future railway genius
The records will all be broke.
He'll invent a noiseless whistle
And discover smell-less smoke.

The Fishless Fisherman

"So you took a day off from your work and went fishing?"

"Yes," replied the man who insists on being cheerful.

"Have any luck?"

"Certainly. A day off is luck enough."—Washington Star.

Might as Well

"What have you done with the 'Home Hints' in your magazine?"

"Abandoned them for a snappy series on cabaret life."

Smartest Man

Delmonte—Why don't you and Bilkins go into partnership?

Melachrino—He was engaged to my wife before I was. You don't suppose I would take a smarter man than I am for a partner, do you?

Victim Was Sore

Motorist—I've been driving six years, and this is the first accident I've had.

Victim—Yes, but what made you pick on me"

A Wife for Asa John

By GENEVRA COOK

MISS LUCY LEAVITT touched her sister's shoulder. "Susan, did you notice that Asa John walked home with Mrs. Wilson's Olive tonight?"

"Yes," nodded Susan Leavitt heavily.

"Olive Wilson is only twenty, Susan."

"And Asa John is thirty-nine."

"May and December."

"Hardly that, Lucy—May and September, I should say."

"And Asa John is a confirmed old bachelor."

"Doesn't look like it if he is hauling Olive Wilson around." said Susan, and dropped off into the nap from which Lucy's gossip had aroused her.

When Asa John locked the store door that night, he looked wistfully across the village street toward the post office where a group of young people made merry over the coming of the evening mail. He did not hear Olive Wilson's laugh for she was a quiet little thing and very ladylike, so thought Asa John with the weighty judgment of his thirty-nine years.

By this time Asa John was walking slowly toward the river road and just as he stepped into the cool shadows, three women joined him with apologetic jokes and laughter—his twin sisters, Lucy and Susan, and their bosom friend, Amelia Baxter.

"You and Amelia go on ahead, Asa John, Lucy and I will come along after," said Susan. "The river certainly looks lovely tonight."

"I adore it," gushed Amelia, with an arch upward flash at Asa John's tall form. "Don't you think the river road is romantic, Asa John?"

"It has that reputation," replied Asa ponderously.

"Remember when we all went to school together?" chirped Amelia brightly. "When we came and went by this road because there was always something doing? Remember, Asa John, how you saved Mamie Wilson's life that winter when she fell through the ice and she said she was going to marry you when she grew up?"

"And Asa John told her not if he knew it," supplied Lucy.

"Humph!" said Asa John.

Susan sighed. "Well, we're all middle-aged and Mamie Wilson married Ben Jones Wilson and there's Olive, their only child going to marry—a pretty creature but only twenty!"

"Olive going to be married?" shrieked Lucy.

Really!" gasped Amelia.

"Who is she going to marry?" asked Lucy.

"Mamie said Olive told her yesterday—that she was going to marry the nicest man in town if he'd have her!"

"That might be most anybody," commented Amelia, her quick eyes on Asa John's disturbed countenance.

"I guess Mamie knows who Olive means—you know that handsome young fellow that works for Asa John?"

"Not William Norton!"

"Yes," panted Susan as she hastened to keep up with Asa John's long strides. "Don't hurry so, Asa, William is a nice boy, isn't he?"

"No one better in the whole town," said Asa John.

"There, who should know better than Asa John, when William has worked for him for two years?"

Amelia patted Asa John's gray coat sleeve. "Asa John, you know very well that William isn't the nicest man in town, don't you?"

"Humph!" grunted Asa John impolitely, while Miss Lucy and her sister clung excitedly to each other. Amelia had long cast a predatory eye upon their good looking bachelor brother, but she had never "pounced" on him like that before.

At the corner, where the river road swerved to join the village street, they parted, Amelia disappointedly walking on with Lucy and Susan while Asa John returned along the river road for a quiet pipe, he said.

Strolling back along the river road, Asa John Leavitt did not notice the white gleam of moonlight on the river, nor hear a whippoorwill singing heavily in some near wood. His thoughts were unhappily brooding over the absurdity of a man of his years falling in love with the brightness and youth of Olive Wilson, the daughter of his old schoolmate.

As he neared home again, people were coming out of the church, Wednesday evening prayer meeting was over and as he threaded the little groups giving greeting here and there, he saw Olive Wilson dismissing William Norton. "No, thank you, William," she was saying, "I can get home quite all right—I see Mr. Leavitt coming and he lives next door."

"So you are going to be married to William," observed Asa John at last, and he told her what he had heard. Olive burst into a trill of happy laughter.

"Of course not—I never dreamed of such a thing. William is entirely too young!"

"Too young—for you?" gasped Asa giddily.

"I was joking with mother and told her I was going to marry the nicest man in the village," Olive hesitated, "but it was a joke. The nicest man would think I was young and foolish."

"Nonsense! I wish I was the nicest man!" said Asa John boldly.

"Why," stammered Olive, "of course you are!"

Russian scientists have found that honey bees in northern regions have shorter tongues than bees farther south and they attribute this to an adaptation of the insect to the task of nectar gathering which differs with different plants and climates.

Nearly all the makings for a Thanksgiving dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Punkin, the Sweet Potato family, the little Apples and the leading character in the Thanksgiving drama.

King Turkey on Path to "Glory"

To the martial music of brass bands 10,000 Thanksgiving turkeys march down the broad street between the gaily decorated buildings as the cheering multitude applauds the strutting battalions. For Turkeyville—any one of the half-dozen Texas towns which help supply us with rare meat for the festival holiday board—is celebrating the one red-letter holiday of the year.

Row upon row until their lines stretch into the far distance in shimmering colors of red, white and bronze come the multitude of turkeys. Fluffy white privates, bronze corporals, coal-black lieutenants, dull red sergeants and gold-bedecked majors and colonels push out their wishbones a little farther as they pass the mayor's review stand and add a bit of swagger to their gait.

On and on they march, until a mile or more of the trotting turkeys have passed up the main street, ever getting closer and closer to that ignoble fate that makes this truly the "march of death" and reach the end of that long and treacherous maneuvering which insures to the American consumer his Thanksgiving turkey. While admiring throngs to the right, applauding people to the left, cheer the turkeys on, the leaders are marching through the gates of the large dressing plant into the very "jaws of death, Earle W. Page writes in the New York Evening Post.

All Hail King Turkey.

Among the harvest festivals of America, "Turkey day" stands out unique, linking the Pilgrim Fathers' love of the tender, juicy breast of wild turkeys with the modern popularity of this piece de resistance of the annual holiday table. On this day, the turkeys are hailed as the absolute monarchs they will later become formally upon the throne of the American Thanksgiving dinner table. For this is Turkeyville, in the heart of Turkeyland—a land of magnificent distances, vast grain ranches and a wealth of climate, which makes the empire a natural ranging country for the most beautiful and profitable of our farmyard fowls.

Each town in Turkeyland has its turkey dressing plant, to which all turkeys intended for the holiday table, for many miles about, head early in November. While a few are brought in motor trucks, most of the thousands each plant prepares for market are driven in great flocks, after the fashion of trailing western cattle to market.

A dozen men are required to handle these large flocks, and shelled corn is scattered to the leaders to keep them moving. When night comes a stop is made under a grove of trees, where the fowls may rest. Early the next morning the journey is continued, a man driving ahead in a cart and scattering handfuls of corn now and then, to keep the leaders headed in the right direction.

Thus it is that, during the two or three days prior to the big "turkey day" celebration great flocks of turkeys are being driven over many roads toward the town. Sunrise of the morning of the big event finds a host of turks ready for the final dash down the main street to the dressing plant. It also finds the multitude of King Turkey's hinterland gathered along the street to participate in the celebration.

After the flock has paraded into the large corral of the dressing plant, and the army of killers, pickers and packers have started in dead earnest to wind up the season's work, that the refrigerator cars of dressed turkey may start on their long journey across the continent, the milling multitude enjoys all manner of pastime, from real "turkey trot" dancing to gay ceremonies characteristic of the Southwest.

In the days of the Pilgrims, flocks of wild turkeys strutted in unrestricted pride and splendor through the forests of New England. Doubtless the red man introduced the early settlers to the creamy taste of the white and the succulence of the dark meat of the fowl. From that good day to the present the turkey, either wild or tame, has continued to occupy the place of honor at the American Thanksgiving dinner.

Its Name a Mystery.

Just why this fowl should have been named "turkey" in the English language no one seems to know. The realm of his sultanic majesty had no more to do with the introduction of the bird into polite society than did Greenland. The real turkey is a bird indigenous to North America and was from here introduced to the rest of the world.

The name possibly may be explained by the peculiar call of the mother to her chicks, which sounds very much like "tur-r-k, tur-r-k, tur-r-k." At any rate, there is no relation between the bird and the country of the same name.

The turkey was a favorite fowl among the aboriginal inhabitants of America. It had its habitat all over that vast area, where grew its favorite food—Indian corn. When Cortez, in 1519, reached the realm of the Aztecs, Montezuma entertained him with royal splendor, and among the delicious viands set before the Spanish invaders was roasted turkey.

North of the Rio Grande the turkey was well known and the adventurous Coronado found it among the cliff dwellers and other tribes he met on his expedition through what is today Texas, Arizona and New Mexico.

The wild turkey is credited with being the progenitor of all kinds of turkeys the world over. Ornithologists accept the view that all turkeys have descended from the three forms known today as the North American, the Mexican and the Honduras varieties. The fowl found in certain jungles of South America and known as the curassow, although sometimes called the South American turkey, really belongs to a different family.

The North American turkey—father and mother of the whole tribe—is the original species of the eastern United States, according to experts of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. Its colors are black, beautifully shaded with a rich bronze, illuminated with a lustrous finish of coppery gold. All this emblazons the plumage with a distinctive brightness, and in the rays of the sun the burnished appearance comes out with striking brilliancy.

Wild Birds Still Thrive.

To this day wild turkeys may be found in some of the most unsettled sections of their former range, especially in the wooded and mountainous regions of Arizona, Mexico, Texas, the large swamps of the Gulf, in Tennessee and the Carolinas. The Great Smoky National park boasts large flocks of wild turkeys. Their nests are discovered occasionally and the eggs given to farm hens or turkey hens to hatch, but the chicks, although mothered in a strictly modern way, revert to their wild habits when but a few weeks old.

The present demand for Thanksgiving and Christmas turkeys is so enormous as to make the business of raising, transporting and selling this giant fowl a large enterprise. Carloads of turkeys start reaching market about the middle of November and continue well into December. Should there be a surplus at Thanksgiving, those unsold are held under refrigeration for Christmas.

ATWATER KENT RADIO with the GOLDEN VOICE

"I know what I want"
"So do I"

... and it's going to be an Atwater Kent. What we want is performance, and so far as we're concerned there's only one choice.

We want the Golden Voice of the new Atwater Kent—good, clear, consistent reception, without a lot of noise. We want power enough to bring in distant stations. We want a dial we can read easily from any position, without straining our eyes—that new Atwater Kent Quick-Vision Dial. We want the new Atwater Kent Tone Control, so that we can bring out the low notes or the high notes as we please.

We want a radio that's always ready to go when we come to the end of a day's work. We want the kind of dependability that Atwater Kent is famous for. We want a radio from the maker who insists that farm people shall have just as good performance as city people.

We want an up-to-date radio, with all the newest worth-while improvements—plus Screen-Grid, from the manufacturer with longest Screen-Grid experience. We want a really good-looking radio—one we can show with pride when friends come in.

We're going to put our money where our faith is, and that means one of the new Atwater Kents. When we go into town tomorrow, we're going to stop at a dealer's and order an Atwater Kent. We know what we want and we're going to get it—NOW.

The new 1931 Atwater Kent with the Golden Voice is built for either all-electric or battery operation. That's another reason why rural families all over the United States prefer the new Atwater Kent.

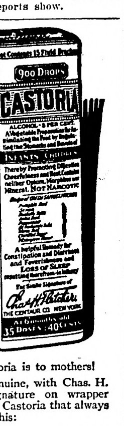
Fretful DAYS Restless NIGHTS ...give child Castoria

FUSSY, fretful, can't sleep, won't eat.... It isn't always easy to find just where the trouble is with a young child. It may be a stomach upset; it may be sluggish bowels.

But when little tongues are coated and there is even a slight suspicion of bad breath—it's time for Castoria!

Castoria, you know, is a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and children. When Baby cries with colic or is fretful because of constipation, Castoria brings quick comfort, and, with relief from pain, soothes him to restful sleep. For older children—up through all the school years, Castoria is equally effective in helping to right irregularities. Just give it in larger doses. What a comfort Castoria is to mothers!



Get the genuine, with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper and the name Castoria that always appears like this:

Lonely Life Savers

A lonely vigil is kept by coast guard and lighthouse crews at Big Sable point north of Ludington, Mich. They live in complete isolation the year round. Finding of coins and other antiques by different members of the crew indicates that the point was visited by early explorers. Three years ago a big canoe was unearthed but was washed away before crews could rescue it. Recently Albert Howard, in charge of the coast guard station, found an ancient Spanish coin in the sands near the beach. It bore the date of 1731, and was picked up only ten miles south of the point where Pere Marquette died on May 18, 1675.

Olson Will Purge Capitol

According to a news report from St. Paul, Governor-elect Floyd B. Olson has decided to remove all but two persons holding important appointive offices whe he assumes the duties of the state's chief executive.

Charles M. Babcock, commissioner of highways, and Earl Brown, chief of the highway patrol, the report said, are the only persons in important possitions to be retained. Those scheduled for removal are:

N. J. Holmberg, commissioner of agriculture; Garfield Brown, commissioner of insurance, A. J. Veigel, commissioner of banking; W. A. Smith, liquidation examiner; S. W. Gillam, commissioner of securities; D. L. Pomeroy, deputy commissioner of insurance; Henry Rines, state comptroller and member of the Big Three; A. J. Peterson, budget commissioner and member of the Big Three, Gen. Walter F. Rhinow, director of the state bureau of criminal identification.

H. W. Austin, commissioner of purchases, the report stated, is the only member of the Big Three—the commission of administration and finance—whom Olson is considering retaining.

Olson, according to the report, has made known he will reorganize the state securities department, removing "those at the bottom as well as at the top." His plans are to reorganize it into a department functioning much along the line of a trained police department, with a personal composed largely of trained police officers.

Olson has promised, the report said, that he would be guided largely by recomendations from agricultural groups regarding the commissioner of agriculture while he is understood to be planning upon seeking a new bank commissioner from the rank of independent bankers.

Judge Grindeland Retires

The resignation of Andrew Grineeland, judge of the fourteenth judicial district, and one of the oldest jurists in the state, was announced last week.

Judge Grindeland announced his resignation at his home in Warren on the occasion of his seventy-fourth birthday. A number of his friends in the northwestern corner of the state honored him at a dinner.

Resignation at this time makes it possible for Judge Grindeland to draw his full salary until the end of his present term, which expires in 1935, and thereafter to draw half pay the rest of his life.

Judge Grindeland was born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, Nov. 20, 1856. He was graduated from the law department of the University of Iowa in 1882 and the same year settled at Warren to start his law practice. He served in the state senate in 1899 and for several years was probate judge of Marshall county.

He was appointed a judge March 24th, 1903, for the fourteenth district, which comprises Kittson, Roseau, Marshall, Norman and Mahnomen counties. He was re-elected five times.

Governor Theodore Christianson has appointed Attorney Julius J. Olson of Warren to succeed Judge Grindeland.—Ex.

Pitt Man Wins State Title

According to word just received from W. E. Morris, Livestock specialist at the Univerity Farm, Frank Passi of Pitt, Minn. has just been awarded the distinction as the Champion Sheep Flock Master of Minnesota. Mr. Passi raised 117 lambs from 67 ewes and brought them up to an average weight of 91.6 pounds at 135 days of age. This gave him 159.8 pounds of lamb per ewe. His nearest competitor, Charles Mann of Caledonia in Houston county had 136 pounds of lamb per ewe, raising 91 lambs from 55 ewes to an average of 81.6 pounds. George Woolet of Bankton, another entry in the contest, placed fourth in the class of 25 to 50 ewes by raising 62 lambs from 46 ewes to an average of 80.4 pounds.

——Baudette Region.

Election Quiet

The village election held here on Tuesday was a rather quiet affair. Only 66 of the 94 voters in the village went to the polls to cast their vote for the local officeholders.

Hjalmer Peterson who has been president of the village council since in March 1929 was reelected to that office. Geo. Fricker was reelected as clerk and A. L. Carlson as treasurer. The two officers will now hold their jobs for two years instead of one as before.

C. L. Sandberg was reelected as councilman for three years and Sam Lorentson was elected for two years taking the place of Einer Loven who had served for two years.

H. O. Hanson was elected as justice of the peace for two years and R. B. Perry for one year.

Constable elects were Joseph Nelson for two years and Olaf Ness for one year.

The Question regarding the village council granting a license for operating a pool hall in the village was defeated by a vote of 20 for it and 45 against.

Commercial Club Meeting

A Commercial Club meeting will be held in the Bank Monday evening as 8 p. m. It is very important that every man in our village should come to this meeting and help with the program that is to be outlined.

~~The question as to whether or~~ not we are to have a skating rink, will also be settled at this meeting and we hope to have the support of every man on this matter.

Play Tonight

Don't forget about the High School play "And Mary Did" to be given at the school auditorium to-night at 8 o'clock.

The seventeenth annual Red River Valley Rural School spelling contest will be held during the week of the Winter Shows on February 13, 1931. Spelling lists have already been forwarded by the Winter Shows Management to the county superintendends in the following Northwestern Minnesota counties: Becker, Clay, Clearwater, Kittson, Mahnomen, Marshall, Norman, Ottertail, Pennington, Polk, RedLake, Roseau and Wilkin. It is expected that representatives from each of the thirteen counties will enter the final contest.

The 1931 contest will be in charge of the following committee: Adolph Stenseth, Ada; Miss Erba Pouliot, Red Lake Falls, and E. E. Billberg, Roseau.

Last year eleven-year-old Morris Engelstad, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Engelstad, Thief River Falls, Pennington County, was declared the champion speller of the Red River Valley.

Steam Rig Pulls Out

Harry Engen and Martin Davidson have signed up a 10 year lumber sawing contract with a party by the name of McGillery northeast of Shilling, Beltrami county, and have this week been busy getting their equipment ready. They purchased a Case steam engine from Iver Larson and will use that for power.

Mr. Davidson started out on the 65 mile trip to the camp with the engine on Wednesday. They mounted a Ford motor on the steamer and used that and belt in driving the big engine instead of steam power as it is to much trouble to get water along the road since the ditches froze up.

Congress Again in Session

The short session on the 71st Congress got under way on Monday with a lot of "lame ducks" making their appearance for the last time in that great gathering of men with silk hats, not much to do and big pay for your vacation organization.

"Off Flavors"

Aside from being frozen, winter cream shows a big assortment of off flavors.

There is a tendency to store the cream in any available cool room, such as the pantry, basement, or closed porch.

Any cream so kept will soon develope musty or smothered flavors, and will not go as Land O'Lakes.

A good plan is to keep it the same in the winter as in the summer, in the cooling tank, and stir it while it is cooling after separating.

BEFORE secret suffering breaks out in open revolt—before the little home is irretrievably shattered by a husband's strong pipe—can't something be done? Certainly. THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan, with the purpose of requisitioning the place for government use. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Loris promises to investigate. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fianace.

It sometimes takes a huge iceberg a long time to break up; but when it does, woe to them who have vested interests in its perpetuation. The Russian iceberg was sure to break up when it was floated by the stream of time into warmer waters. Before these noble families saw their danger, the flood of revolution was running so strong that there was no possibility of successful resistance to even its worst excesses. They were done for before they knew it. As these people sat in their salon and talked so plaintively, though they did not know it, they were already an extinct class. They might talk to each other, but nobody else would listen to them.

Their best qualities rendered them helpless. They were as a class intelligent, highly educated, cultured; but having always been people of affairs, they were too practical, too reasonable, and at the same time too egotistical, to get a hearing while every one else was fervidly enthusiastic over the New Age which was dawning, carried away by false hopes and false confidence, or stark raving—all in a state of exaltation. So these nobles went about with the expression of people enduring much and defenseless.

It was only recently that they had begun to conspire against what they could not openly resist; so that Loris was sensible in saying that Ilya Krassin, being what he was by birth and training, was probably a conspirator. Young men of his class were daily slipping out of Kazan on foot, disguised in the uniforms of common soldiers, to join the anti-Bolshevist Cossack forces.

And this was what Vladimir meant when he assured the old princess that such enormities as the loss of her live stock would not continue long. This was what Colonel Boyarsky had in mind when he tried to talk to Mrs. Krassin of the consequences of the new life taken on by the Bolshevists under Loris. And this was the darker issue which Mrs. Krassin avoided. She had a son.

"There is something worse," said the colonel, "than the penury to which we are coming—to which we have arrived. Our lives, even now, are in danger."

Mrs. Krassin half rose from the divan on which she always sat, and looked about at the company, with a little exclamation, as if she felt a physical pang. She looked at the two or three young men beside Vladimir, at three or four women, dependents of the family who were present, at a group out in the hall whom she could see through the door; and as she saw her daughter Musia entering, giving a smile to the company, and a hand to Vladimir, who bowed with a little clinking of his spurs, she dropped her voice as if to prevent the young girl from hearing. Mrs. Krassin's little cold brown eyes took on a look of terror.

"I am so afraid," said she, "for my son Ilya!"

"But he is so free from blame," protested the princess, "even in the eyes of the Bolsheviki—from blame of any kind, my dear."

"Very true!" said Vladimir.

Mrs. Krassin darted a sharp glance at the young officer. Was there something sardonic in his speech? She suspected at first that there was: but as he resumed his seat nested down in a high chair, he looked so innocent and smiled so pleasantly that her half-suspicion was disarmed.

"Ilya," she stated, "has shown good judgment, and he has never mingled in politics; but yet I am afraid for him. They will say among themselves that he has been a former officer and belongs to one of the old important families. Yet, he has always been very careful."

"Extremely careful," with that disarming smile. "If caution will save him, he is safe."

"You know, Vladimir," said Mrs. Krassin, turning her imposing head toward Vladimir and honoring him with another scrutiny, "I have never approved of secret organizations. For the first thing, you are too few."

"Well," said Vladimir lightly, "perhaps so; but permit me to remind you that many great things begin small. The Volga is a brook in the government of Tver; and nothing, my dear aunt, is in my opinion small which takes in the spirit of old Russia!"

"It is of course possible that you are right," admitted Mrs. Krassin, with as much sarcasm and impatience in her voice as it was proper to use under the circumstances, "—barely possible. Perhaps my mind is unduly prejudiced against you young people and your imprudent methods."

"Prudence!" ejaculated Vladimir, with a note of passionate earnestness in his voice—very extreme in manner for the salon. "Pardon me!"

"I am an egotist," she went on, with a wave of excuse to Vladimir; "and also a mother. I don't want my son embroiled."

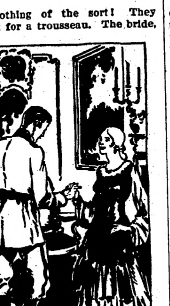
Vladimir smilingly moved over by Musia, who sat engaged on some bit of work which she carried in her hand. Mrs. Krassin sat during a very long pause, with her head bowed—a long pause during which the princess fidgeted. She had something to say, but did not wish to break in upon Mrs. Krassin's thoughts. They were winged thoughts, beating against the bars of the prison in which this revolution had imprisoned her domineering soul. She was thinking of Vladimir's tone as he spoke of Ilya's caution while he and these other boys were taking their lives in their hands every day. Oh, if she could ever get these canaille of the proletariat under her feet! Oh, for one hour's return of her old power! If once such men as Vladimir could win! And then her caution returned.

"Nevertheless," she said, "I am afraid they will arrest him just because he has been an officer and has done his duty as such. We must be diplomatic!"

"You may not know," exclaimed the little old princess, taking advantage of the pause which followed this, "that they took all the table linen of my grand-niece, Nina—and what do you suppose they wanted it for?"

"Perhaps for table linen," suggested Vladimir.

"No—nothing of the sort! They wanted it for a trousseau. The bride, a washerwoman, was marrying a high Bolshevik official. And such people to take away my horses and cow!"



Musia Entering, Giving a Smile to the Company, and a Hand to Vladimir.

Vladimir laughed aloud. "Pretty good, pretty good!" said he.

Mrs. Krassin looked at him rather fixedly, and saw a blond Slavonic head; slightly curled hair; kindly blue eyes; smiling, dare-devil face. She looked away suddenly for fear that a guest might catch the disapprobation in her regard.

"Where are our old good manners?" she asked of herself, more displeased with Vladimir now than for his hints at Ilya. "Laughing aloud in that rude way!" As the princess went on to assure him that he wouldn't laugh if he were in Nina's place, Mrs. Krassin changed the subject.

"Have you seen this Loris?"

"Not I," said Vladimir. "I am seeking to be as little in evidence as possible as far as he is concerned."

"Oh, yes," said the colonel, "I have seen him. He has an interesting appearance—an aristocratic look. The rest of his gang look like his valets. People are talking about him and wondering as to his origin."

"Looks like an aristocrat?" Mrs. Krassin repeated the words as if she thought them important. "I don't suppose that Loris is his real name. I wonder of what nationality—does the name Loris mean anything, I wonder?"

"May be an Armenian," suggested Vladimir, "though of course the name isn't Armenian."

"Neither does he look like one," said the colonel.

Telescope Traced Back to Seventeenth Century

By the aid of a grant from the Rockefeller foundation to Leyden university enough funds have been collected to enable the university observatory to build its own telescope at Johannesburg, in South Africa. As we know, many of our scientific instruments had their origin in far-off centuries, but surprisingly enough the telescope does not seem to have been developed until the Seventeenth century. Although the famous traveler, Sir Richard Burton, claimed that the telescope was known to Arabian scientists many years before this time, the father of the modern instrument was produced in 1608 by Hans Lippershiem of Middleburg. At once the importance of the invention was realized, and telescopes were on sale in Paris within a year. Galileo, the famous astronomer, heard of the Dutchman's invention, and immediately made a telescope himself, and on the first night that he used it, in 1610, discovered three of Jupiter's moons. A year later Kepler invented the astronomical telescope.

JAMES G. MORRELL was a graduate of two American universities and a French one. He had a Bachelor of Arts degree, a Master of Arts degree, and a Doctor of Laws degree. He spoke four languages fluently, and knew the piano, violin, and organ, all three of which he played with brilliancy, to say nothing of such lesser instruments as the guitar and banjo.

When he was twenty-five, his patrimony consisted solely of his magnificent education and what natural talents were so generously his.

The senior Morrell, his father and sole surviving relative, had died a week after he had lost his enormous holdings in a Wall Street crash.

The incredible sequel to that procedure lay in the fact that young Morrell, instead of feeling the crush of sudden poverty, realized within himself a sense of elation and release, that at first was incomprehensible to him. What had happened was that a vagabond, who had all his life been imprisoned by circumstance, felt himself suddenly freed.

For the first time in his carefully designed life, the young Morrell dared to admit to himself that he despised the profession of law that had been mapped out for him as the son of his wealthy father; that he despised the social routine in which he had been born and bred; that he was a free-lance at heart and that at last he was at liberty to be himself.

That is how, during the next five years in the Bohemian quarters in practically every large city and seaport the figure of James Morrell was to become a familiar one. The tall slender young fellow, cultured, nonchalant, but a vagabond in dress and manner of living, became a wanderer in the various Bohemias of the world. A small ukulele, his only bit of luggage, he tinkled for a living.

James Morrell wandered from capital city to capital city, from seaport to seaport, from Shanghai to Seattle; from Seattle to Boston; from Boston to Trieste; from Trieste to Constantinople; from Constantinople to Rome; from Rome to Paris; from Paris to Marseilles; and so on and on, tinkling away on his ukulele for which, in return, he received his simple board and lodging.

For the first time in his carefully cultivated, extremely sophisticated young lifetime, James Morrell was happy. A vagabond. A minstrel. New scenes, new peoples, new pastimes. No struggle for existence because existence could be so simple. The world was what you made it. Young Morrell had made his a playground, a careless garden in which to sun himself. Big business, big destiny, big responsibility passed him by. There was never anything but loose change in his pockets, a loose jingle in his fingertips and a nonchalance in his heart.

James Morrell, Jr., who had been reared as the only child of a millionaire, turned gratefully to Bohemia.

It was in the Bohemia that is New York's, some five and a half years after the death of his father, that young Morrell walked into a situation that was to deter his footsteps from their willy-nilly wanderings.

Tinkling away his evenings in a Greenwich Village cafe, where he received in return a cot in an attic and his three meals a day, young Morrell met and fell in love with a girl named Rachel Taylor, eighteen, bizarrely beautiful, and an art student in the quarter.

She was the daughter of a coal merchant in Pittsburgh and her foray into Bohemia was the equivalent of a year abroad after a finishing school.

The spirit of Bohemia was no more the spirit of Rachel Taylor, than the spirit of Madagascar.

Young Morrell was not to know that until after he had married her. He fell in love with her in the physical environment of Bohemia; he first beheld her in the candle-lit shadows of garret studios and cellar cafes. To him she was drenched with this spirit of vagabondage, and it must be said for Rachel Taylor that she believed herself to be filled with that gypsy instinct.

They were married on the capital of two dollars and forty cents between them, and the young troubadour felt himself on the pinnacles of romance. For the first year they lived in a garret, while Rachel painted futuristic ladies on satin cushion tops, and tried to sell them at women's exchanges, and James tinkled his ukulele for their evening meal and the slant roof over their heads.

At the end of the second year, with their romance lying in ruins about them, James, no longer able to withstand the importunings of a wife who was with child, accepted a position of apprentice in a Pittsburgh law office, which had been obtained for him by his coal merchant father-in-law.

That is the beginning. If ever a man was predestined for commercial success that man was James Morrell. As his father-in-law, who had in the beginning secretly despised him, put it, everything that Morrell touched turned to gold, and the curious part of it was that it did not seem to be due to any genius that the fellow brought to his work.

There was something of a chained wild beast about Morrell. He endured his success in much the same way he endured his environment, his wife, and even his child. He saw it piling up about him and he let it pile. He stood in the courtroom declaiming in behalf of the great corporations he represented, and it sometimes seemed to him that some one on the outside of him was doing the speaking, while he, the shell of an individual, stood there caring not at all.

It could almost be said of James Morrell that he did not turn a hand, considering the magnitude of his so-called achievements. He had an eye for the law, and a tongue that could, on the proper occasion, grow eloquent, but so had other men of less success.

When she was thirty, Rachel Taylor, who loved the life of creature things, creature comforts, and creature magnificence, saw herself slowly climbing toward the very pinnacle of such attainments.

James Morrell was easily the foremost lawyer of the state to say nothing of the prospects of political power and position which lay ahead.

They used to say laughingly of Rachel Taylor Morrell that she had more than once referred to her husband as the future President of the United States.

Be that as it may, there was no doubt that the beautiful reddish eyes of Rachel were directed toward the seat of the mighty which she expected Morrell one day to occupy. One aspect of realization came to her in a vicarious way while James was still in his highly successful role of corporation lawyer. The lovely daughter of the James Morrells, Annice, aged eighteen, eloped one day in a hydroplane with the only child of one of the great oil magnates of the world. In Rachel's opinion, that was the greatest plume in the cap of the Morrells that had yet been planted there.

Ten years later, the two grandchildren of the James Morrells had been presented with a trust fund of five million each by their paternal grandparents, and James Morrell had fastened on his wife a lifetime income that amounted to over one million a year.

Two months subsequent to this legal act, the cities of Pittsburgh and New York awakened one day to headlines announcing the mysterious disappearance of James Morrell. Secret searchings had been going on for over a period of weeks before the general alarm was finally given out to a disquieted world.

After months of publicity, searchings and expeditions of secret service men to various parts of the world, the publicity was suddenly hushed up.

Mrs. Morrell resumed her haughty impressive life as social leader. Newspapers, for one reason or another, left off their playing up of this meaty story of disappearance of James Morrell.

It was whispered about among those "in the know" that it had cost Mrs. James Morrell a king's ransom to thus stamp out the conspicuous happening of her husband's disappearance.

The truth of it, of course, was that James Morrell had finally been ferretted out, playing his ukulele in a fantastic harbor cafe at Marseilles.

After one conference with her husband, Rachel Taylor Morrell, who had a good head on her, realized the futility of attempting to bait or lure or threaten her husband back into his proper setting. As she talked to him in his slit of a room in Marseilles, she realized that here was a man twenty-five years younger than the one who had left her a few months before; here was a man who had grasped back his happiness after it had all slipped from him; here was a beloved vagabond in his proper setting.

James Morrell is pretty well forgotten now, even by Rachel who divorced him and is married again.

He may be found tinkling his way through the different Bohemias of the world. His ukulele is always with him and his worldly possessions are the few pennies that jingle in his pockets.

Just a Customs Incident

She was watching the passengers of an ocean liner as they opened their bags for inspection.

"What have you to declare?" the customs officer asked of the timid little woman.

"I have only a silver tray I bought," she replied as she delved into her bag. "You see, I had to bring something to my daughter, and I didn't have much money . . . I didn't buy anything else, it cost such a lot."

She presented the tray to the man with a little spirit of pride. "Pretty, isn't it?"

The man looked at it and looked at the woman. "But, madam, it is so evidently not silver . . . er, that is, yes, I suppose it cost quite a lot. There's no duty; you see, you are allowed to bring in a hundred dollars' worth."—New York Sun.

Forest Waste Alarming

Both the supply of timber and the expected growth fall far short of the needs of the nation, writes E. P. Meinecke in the Journal of Forestry. Devastation of productive forest land through forest fires and destructive logging, promoted by waste in the woods, in manufacture, and in use, is progressing at an alarming rate. The main difficulty in dealing with the decline of American forests lies in the chaotic condition of the lumber industry which controls four-fifths of the forest lands of the country. This condition is due partly to oppressive state taxation but mainly to internal disorders of an economic nature arising from land speculation and ill-advised financing in the past.

Lucky Find

When we find some slight help makes a marvelous improvement in a child, we wonder why we hadn't thought of doing it long ago.

Here's a good example: "My little girl was doing fairly well," says Mrs. M. Seitenbach, 5605 Emile Street, Omaha, Neb., "but I noticed she didn't eat right and didn't have much energy.

"Our doctor had recommended California Fig Syrup, so I gave her some. She improved so much I wonder I didn't do something for her stomach and bowels before. She has a good appetite and digestion and plenty of energy, now."

To point up a child's appetite, increase energy and strength, assist digestion and regulate the bowels there's nothing like California Fig Syrup. Doctors advise it to open bowels in colds or children's diseases; or whenever bad breath, coated tongue, etc., warn of constipation.

Proposed Status of Salomon in New York.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE names of Thaddeus Kosciusko and Casimir Pulaski, the two Polish soldiers who fought in the Revolution, are familiar to most citizens of the United States, but it is doubtful if the name of another Pole, Haym Salomon, means anything to more than one out of a thousand Americans. Yet his contribution to the cause of American liberty may in some respects be considered infinitely greater than those of the other two combined.

The invaluable services of this Polish Jew, whose financial genius was so vital to the Revolution's success, have always been known to the scholars of that struggle, but the difficulties of obtaining reliable information have kept this inspiring story from the public and the efforts which have been made to pay appropriate tribute to his memory have, for some unknown reason—unless it can be attributed to the proverbial ingratitude of republics which so easily forget their debts to some who labored mightily in their cause—been defeated for more than a century.

Fortunately for the cause of Truth there has appeared recently a biography of this man which enables us to see him in his true stature as one of the really great figures of the Revolution. It is the book "Haym Salomon and the Revolution," written by Charles Edward Russell and published by the Cosmopolitan Book corporation.

Salomon was born at Lissa in Poland in 1740. At the age of thirty he joined in the fight to resist Russian domination of Poland, was associated with Kosciusko and Pulaski in their heroic but futile effort and like those two, was forced to flee from the country. He first made his way to England but soon left there and came to America, arriving in New York in 1772. Salomon had had considerable training in business before leaving Poland and he quickly established himself as a broker and commission merchant in New York city. The opportunity lay at hand for him to make a great fortune but he hindered his chances for that by one act. For the freedom-loving Pole almost immediately allied himself in the strongly Royalist colony of New York with a "disreputable and discredited" organization, called the Sons of Liberty, who as early as 1734 had banded together to resist oppressive acts by the British crown.

He was a worker in their cause at the outbreak of the Revolution, and late in 1776 he was one of a number of the Sons who were imprisoned by the British, accused of having started the fire which swept New York soon after the defeat of Washington's army on Long Island led to the occupation of that city by Lord Howe. Salomon was lodged in the Provost and to be held there meant certain death for many a patriot during the reign of Cunningham, the brutal master of the British prisons in New York.

Among the British troops were thousands of Hessian mercenaries who could not speak a word of English. When it became known that Salomon could speak German (he was also a master of French, Polish, Russian and Italian), he was put in better quarters and used as an interpreter to the Hessians by the British. Eventually he was released on parole. Even while a prisoner he was working in the patriots' cause for, unknown to the British, in his talks with the Hessians he was urging them to desert and pointing out to them the boundless opportunities which lay in the new country for them when the war was over. More than that he was taking advantage of the fact that was regarded as a "trusty" by the British, passing by their sentries freely and going pretty much where he pleased, to aid in the escape of American prisoners. After his parole, he was able again to engage in business, using this as well as his interpreter duties for the British, as a cloak for his activity in behalf of the patriots.

For two years Salomon led a seemingly peaceful existence, although there was never a moment when his life was not in danger of being ended before a firing squad or at the end of a rope if the British had suspected what he was about. Then suddenly in August, 1778, Sir Henry Clinton received word that Washington was plotting to burn the city, and Salomon was arrested as the chief agent in the plot and returned again to the Provost. Details of this imprisonment are lacking, but it is believed that he was condemned to death but managed to escape from the prison shortly before the day of his execution. How he did it is unknown, but it is believed that he bought his way out of the prison and then used his familiarity with British posts and British guard methods to escape from the city.

At any rate he next appeared in Philadelphia and there the most important part of his career began. Although he was penniless, he still had his native energy and his knowledge of commerce and finance. So he immediately opened an office and began to deal in bills of exchange and other securities. By this time France had come into the war on the side of the Americans and French money was coming into the country. Philadelphia was not only the capital of the newly-created United States but it became a prosperous business and shipping center. In its prosperity Salomon shared.

But this prosperity was not shared by the infant government, for the financial policy of the Continental congress had been a blundering one from the start. By 1779 it was having serious financial difficulties. By 1780 the situation was even more critical. By 1781, with a treasury deficit of $1,600,000, it was desperate. It was desperate because the Revolution seemed near to collapse. On the first day of the new year the entire Pennsylvania line mutinied and started from Morristown for Philadelphia to force congress to relieve their distress. They had not been paid for months, they were in rags and they were half starved. Two weeks later the New Jersey line also revolted.

Congress managed to head off the revolt and soon afterwards took steps to salvage what seemed to be a lost cause. Robert Morris, whose financial genius Washington had discovered early and upon whom that leader had leaned heavily in more than one crisis, was called to lead congress out of the financial morass. It was a formidable task which faced Morris in his newly-created post of superintendent of finance and a part of our admiration for the men who faced the bullets and bayonets of the British on the battlefield in the struggle for liberty should be reserved for this man who fought his fight far from the firing line and fought it with what must have seemed overwhelming odds against him.

He was "beset with a thousand difficulties and perils," writes Russell. "He used up all his own credit; always he was at the end of his resources, often he was at the end of his wits. Help from abroad came in fragments and slowly. When it arrived it was in the form of bills on Paris, chiefly on the great French banking house of La Coulteulx and company. These reached Morris (sometimes) from various sources, and he must needs turn them into current money before they could be of use to him. In other words he must sell these bills for what he could get for them, gather up depreciated state currency and try to keep going. . . . His position was virtually at the mercy of brokers and yet set against them. The government and the government's officers could never go huckstering the government's bills up and down the Coffee House. Brokers were indispensable, but they were reputed, probably not without reason, to be cormorants; all except one."

That one was Haym Salomon. Morris' unpublished Diary, upon which Salomon's biographer draws heavily for his information, is filled with references to his dealings with Salomon, and all of them reflect the highest credit upon him as a patriot and a man. "One thing is made by the Diary as plain as daylight," writes Russell. "Haym Salomon is the pivot of the whole business. He stands in the breach; he keeps back the massed attacks that make for bankruptcy; everything depends upon him. It is Haym Salomon this and Haym Salomon that. On some days he makes six or seven visits to consult with the superintendent. Forty times, according to the testimony of the cashier (of the Bank of North America, which Morris established), between August 1, 1782, and the time Morris goes out of office, Haym Salomon comes to bat with his timely check. No matter where he gets the money; he gets it and it is this money that saves the day.

"He sells bills when no one else can sell them. More than that; he sells without gouging, without profit, even. Other brokers continue to harass the superintendent by underselling the market and hampering the sale of his bills. He has no trouble from Salomon. . . . One other great service he performs, though to this day no one has noticed it, nor given the slightest credit for it. With a magnificent disregard of his own interests, he endorses the paper of the broken-backed government. No one else will do this. The government's credit has ebbed and ebbed until it has sunk from sight. Everybody knows it is gone; sagacious men believe it will never return. Salomon endorses its paper and its officers' paper, and its Allies' paper, and makes himself personally liable for all. We have the evidence; no need for speculation or surmise."

All of this was, of course, after Cornwallis' surrender. Contrary to popular belief the affair at Yorktown did not end the Revolution. Great as was that victory, the patriot cause was still in danger and none realized that more than Washington who immediately after receiving the surrender began making plans for the next season's campaign. He could not realize that his victory had dealt the British ministry a blow from which it could not recover and that it was paving the way to peace. That was still two years away, and before it could be realized there was still much yet to be done. And, of course, the doing of that had to be financed. So the burden of making good the victory of Yorktown fell upon Robert Morris and his friend and helper, Haym Salomon.

It is impossible to estimate the full text of Salomon's contribution to the cause of liberty in terms of such intangibles as moral support and fostering the will-to-win. But there is a definite record of his tangible contribution, great in itself but smaller in importance than the intangible. For the records show that Salomon advanced in specie to Morris at various times and in various sums a total of $211,678, and although it can not be proved definitely that all of this was his own money, it is probable that most of it was. But the main fact is that he placed that money in Morris' hands when it was most needed and when few others had sufficient faith in the cause to risk even a fraction of that sum.

And his reward? He died January 6, 1785, when he was only forty-five years old. There is no doubt that the hardships he suffered in the British prisons and in his labors for the Continental government shortened his life. He was supposed to be rich, but after his death it was found that he was virtually a bankrupt. He left a widow and four children facing poverty. He had given his all to the cause of liberty. "He died without formulating any claims for reimbursement for the sums he had advanced," writes Russell. "In the opinion of later investigators he had entire confidence that when the government should be established, it would pay its obligations to him.

As for his "entire confidence" that the government would pay its obligations to him, they were never realized. For more than 80 years his heirs tried to get some recompense from congress but they never succeeded. "A republic soon forgets!"

Noted English Writer Won't "Play" Typewriter

When I was in London in 1928 John Galsworthy showed me the manuscripts of nearly all his books. He cannot dictate and cannot play the typewriter; thus they are all in pen and ink, and their commercial value must be prodigious.

Prof. Carlton Wells of the University of Michigan calls my attention to an article in a review, quoting the Manchester Guardian, as follows:

"They are worth a small fortune and they are certain to appreciate greatly in years to come. No other English writer, with the possible exception of Shaw, has such a vogue abroad, and almost every month sees an advance in the prices of his first editions.

"Galsworthy is one of the few modern authors who write everything in their own hand. He once told me that he found it impossible to think with a typewriter in front of him, and he raised his eyes in mock horror when I mentioned the dictaphone.

"In his study at Hampstead all his manuscripts are carefully preserved in a row of red morocco boxes shaped like book covers. Those he has presented to the British museum are to be seen in the Greville room."—William Lyon Phelps in Scribner's Magazine.

RADICAL CHANGES TRANSFORM BANKING

National Commission Sees Changing Opinion on Branch Banking Issue—Studies Group and Chain Banks.

NEW YORK.—Modification of the attitude of bankers on the long disputed branch banking question is forecast in a review and report covering rapid changes going on in banking issued here by the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. The report, however, after referring to recent proposals that national banks be given branch banking powers within the business territory surrounding their location, declares that "we do not believe that so-called 'trade-area' branch banking is likely to gain the support of any large percentage of the banking fraternity."

The commission says that the "most important development that has affected American banking in recent years involves the rapid growth of multiple banking organizations in the form of group, chain and branch banking systems," and adds that "we present this report as an unprejudiced economic study and have no theories or policies to urge at this time." The statement says that the commission's information indicates there are now 269 group or chain bank systems, which control 1922 banks and $15,285,000,000 in aggregate resources, and that there are only six states and the District of Columbia where it does not find any group organizations.

The Commission's Investigation

"We have been in touch with the managers of many important bank groups," the report says. "Aside from the obvious economies of centralized operation and control a number of these organization heads very frankly tell us that they do not feel that the system has been in operation and tested long enough to justify them in making positive or sweeping statements as to its advantages or disadvantages compared to unit banking.

"The Banking and Currency Committee of the House, which is conducting an investigation into banking developments, has called a number of operating heads of some of the great group systems. These men declared that they found, under certain conditions, definite operating and economic advantage in both group and branch banking over independent unit banking. Some thought group banking was only a transitional stage, that branch banking was preferable and if it were permitted on an extensive enough scale they would change their groups over to branch systems. Others held that group banking was preferable.

"Some held that the ideal plan was a combination of the two with group bank units for localities strong enough to support complete banking institutions and with branch offices extending further into the smaller places requiring banking services but not large enough to support complete banks. Several of these who advocated multiple banking declared that nevertheless they believed there would always be room for vigorous independent unit bank competitors.

Government Officials Express Views

"The Comptroller of the Currency recommended that national banks be given branch banking powers within 'trade-areas.' The Governor of the Federal Reserve Board appeared to be in general agreement with the Comptroller. He said there were 24,645 banks and 3,547 branches, a total of 28,192 banking offices; that in this total, 6,353 offices were either branches or bank members of groups, or both, leaving 21,839 banking institutions that might be definitely termed independent unit banks, having no branches and in no way connected with group affiliations. He said all the banks had total loans and investments of $58,500,000,000, of which the group and branch systems held $30,000,000,000, or more than half.

"He opposed nation-wide branch banking at present but said that ultimately if bankers became trained and experienced in the larger technique of 'trade-area' banking he thought it would in time evolve nation-wide branch banking under control of relatively few banks, but he did not believe this would mean monopoly or lack of competition. He favored branch over group banking which, however, he said represented an economic development along 'trade-area' lines and would spread unless something else were substituted and thought 'trade-area' branch banking would serve this purpose.

"It is the intention of the Commission to develop its own studies in these questions, watch carefully every move that is made and every bit of information that may develop in this connection and keep itself prepared to give an unbiased and accurate statement of the facts of the case whenever that is desired," the report concludes.

Federal Reserve Pays Government

In the fifteen years since its establishment in 1914, aggregate net earnings of the Federal Reserve System's twelve regional banks have amounted to $515,216,000, of which $90,672,000 has been paid to the member banks as dividends, representing 6 per cent annually on their contributions of capital to the reserve banks, while $277,434,000 has been added to the surplus of the reserve banks and $147,110,000 has been paid over to the Federal Government as a franchise tax.

"Off Flavors"

Aside from being frozen, winter cream shows a big assortment of off flavors.

There is a tendency to store the cream in any available cool room, such as the pantry, basement, or closed porch.

Any cream so kept will soon develope musty or smothered flavors, and will not go as Land O'Lakes.

A good plan is to keep it the same in the winter as in the summer, in the cooling tank, and stir it while it is cooling after separating.

Dear, Oh Deer!

A story has been going the rounds in the exchanges about a certain game warden up in the Baudette country. The story stated that this game warden went out in the woods a few days before hunting season to look around a little and there to his surprise he found 14 nice deer hung up. He at once thot of a way to get paid for these deer and drove a spike into the head of each deer and went back to town to wait for further developments.

The season for hunting deer had been open only a few hours when a whole flock of hunters came back to town with their trophies. The game warden checked up on the deer these poor sportsmen had and, he was again shocked to find that they were the same ones he had put spikes in (not railroad spikes) a few days before.

This made the game warden pretty mad and he stretched out the long arm of the law and confiscated the deer and fined these poor hunters $50 and costs for having in their possession deers which had been shot before the season and which was bought as some told later.

Now as far as this story has gone it has sounded possible but, we just read one using all of the facts mentioned above with the exception that this game warden was up at International Falls and that he had found 50 deers the same way. He also caught the buyers and took their deer.

This last story got out wrong as we heard the other night that some game warden had found 67 deer hung up in the woods. He did not caary a keg of nails with him so he was almost stuck for some secret way until this idea dawned upon him. He took his knife and drilled out a little of the gold filling in the left upper eye tooth of each deer. This fine gold dust he took with him to town and waited for bigger and game. It came to light when a nice bunch of doctors, lawyers, salesmen and others went out and bought these deer. You see they were wise to this spiking business and drank their stuff clear. This of course gave them more nerve then they were built to withstand. After inspecting their deer closely for marking, one of the gang suggested they take a deer each and go to town in a big army. (In union there is strength).

It all worked fine until they were going to ship their deer home. Then the big boy with the gold dust (not one of the twins) appeared on the scene and started to compare his gold with the fragments left in the drilled teeth of the deers. It was the same substance. This resulted in all these sophisticated nimrods being taxed a hundred berries each and their deers were supposed to have been given to a charity organization along the border.

If these stories gets any wilder than this one is now, we want congress to appoint an investigating committe on why Deers are so Dear.

Scandal Gang Preys on Women

Police and Stool Pigeons in Ring That Collects 5 Million a Year.

New York.—A vice ring so powerful that it does not need nor permit the aid of corrupt magistrates and so well organized that it card indexes its women victims and collects $5,000,000 a year has been uncovered by investigations sifting the by-products of this city's municipal graft, it was learned recently.

The ring, according to information being investigated by Isidor J. Kresel, who has charge of the appellate division's inquiry into the Magistrates' courts, consists of stool pigeons, some members of the police department, certain court attaches, lawyers, and bail bondsmen.

The ring preys upon indiscreet women, some of the victims being of prominence, it was charged. Married women, show girls, night club hostesses—any women with money or jewels or lacking either but having beauty—are likely under certain circumstances to find themselves "framed" on charges of immorality.

Story Told by Stool.

The disclosures concerning the vice ring came at about the same time that a Special Sessions court was reversing the conviction of Mrs. Emma Hammerstein on a charge of vagrancy or immoral conduct last June before Magistrate Earl Smith.

Mrs. Hammerstein had been found guilty of improper conduct on the testimony of a policeman. The widow of the impressario had insisted all along that the charges against her were framed. Her case had been under investigation for several months.

The story of the $5,000,000 vice ring came from a Broadway "stool," whose name has not been revealed, but who is called "The Dove" among night life initiates.

A woman known as "Madame Adler," who is said to own three establishments, one in midtown, one in the 70's and another in the Harlem black belt, is mentioned as a leading character in the easy morals-easy money racket. "Madame Adler" is said to have disappeared and the investigators are conducting an undercover search for her as a witness.

"The Dove," stool pigeon for the police at a flat salary of $60 a week, told the sordid inside story of the vice racket for reasons not yet revealed. He was found recently in a midtown hotel, where his comfort was looked after by a butler and a man servant. "The Dove" told Kresel, it was learned, that for fifteen years he had served the police vice squad. The $60 was just coffee money, the investigators learned, for "The Dove" had an arrangement whereby he received $10 for every woman turned over to certain members of the vice squad. Not all of the details of the vice racket were made public, but it was said "The Dove" had amassed at least $500,000 for his work and that he also had received splits from attorneys, bondsmen, and court attaches.

How the Racket Works.

The vice racket, as "The Dove" is said to have explained it, works like this:

He or one of his mob invites a woman to an apartment or hotel room. A little later the vice squad arrives. The woman is arrested. The man in the case vanishes. The bail bond company is called. Then a lawyer appears. Finally the case is quashed with the aid of court attaches. Then comes the shakedown. In one instance, it was revealed, a woman paid out $1,500 to the ring.

If the woman has no money she is permitted to put up her jewels. If she has neither money nor jewels, but is attractive, she is turned over to the ring's "hostess" to earn enough money to "pay off."

As the result of evidence obtained by the investigators, it was learned, subpoenaes have been sent out to a score of women who have been victims.

Military Training and Industry Merged

Moscow, U. S. S. R.—Under an amended law on military service, thousands of young men will serve their terms in Soviet industrial enterprises, combining industrial with military training.

Men assigned to this military-industrial division will be under regular army discipline and subject to the usual military rules. After the completion of their terms they will be urged to remain in the industries. It is hoped in this way to develop a large class of skilled labor and administrative personnel for the growing Soviet economy.

Cult of Laughter Disbanded by Police

Budapest.—A new religious sect has come to grief in Debrescin, Hungary. The cult of the sect was laughter and members were encouraged to roar with mirth when they attended services. Unfortunately the excellent tonic values of this new religion failed to find favor with the police and the sect was disbanded for irreverence and general lack of seriousness.

The women, members of an arts class meeting with Mrs. C. H. Carpenter, wife of the minister, were in the middle of their instruction when the bolt struck the house, almost demolishing the living room and slintering the furniture. The splinters struck Mrs. Menery and Mrs. Holmes.

71,000 Indian Children Being Educated by U. S.

Washington.—With the opening of school this year 71,000 Indian children throughout the United States enrolled for classes.

Of this number, 38,000 are in public schools, the remainder being educated at government schools located on the various reservations, and at missions and private institutions in the country.

Approximately 5,600 children are living at their homes and attending government day schools on the reservations. These schools are largely for smaller children and constitute the first step in the education of the Indian child. Boarding school is the next step, where, at the expense of the federal government, a more advanced training is given.

The 71,000 Indian children now being educated in United States schools represent those who are physically and mentally able to receive learning. An effort is being made to enroll the remainder, about 9,000, who are either married, ill, or defective.

Married Women Holding Jobs Alarm Germans

"DADDY"

By FANNIE HURST

(©, 1930, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

IF THERE ever had been any doubts in the mind of Al Koken as to why the slim flower girl named Dot Feverill had married him, he was not entitled to them.

Dot herself, although too young to realize much of her own psychology, had never treated him with any more than the affectionate solicitude of the very young toward one who is considerably older and benign.

When Dot Feverill was twenty-one, as lovely as a jonquil, and with a voice that promised to be an operatic one, she developed a spot on her lung. There was nothing of the conventional "angel" about Al Koken. He was a fat, middle-aged stock broker, who had come to know Dot through a friend of his, a business manager of one of the largest operatic companies in America. Her case was pathetic, her beauty appealing, and her plight appalling.

It was Koken's money that sent her to Arizona for two years; it was the pudgy little hand of the fat old bachelor that wrote out the generous monthly checks.

Dot's recovery was only partial. Her condition responded to the high, clean western air. Her health did improve greatly and the old beauty flowed back into her face. But at the end of two years, when she returned to New York to resume her work, the sad truth revealed itself that there were only certain climates where Dot could thrive. The old lung condition began to reassert itself; she began to wilt again.

Humbly, reverently, secretly and deeply in love was Al Koken. It is doubtful, had the return of Dot to a state of health been a permanent one, that this deep-rooted love of Al for Dot would ever have found voice. He was a timid soul, kindly, naive to a degree that was incredible.

For a man-of-the-world, at least of-the-world to the extent that a successful broker on Wall Street is bound to be, he was as uncomplex as a child in certain of the ways in which you expect the average man to be versed. Al Koken had attained his bachelorhood (he was fifty-six when he met Dot) without more than a half dozen women having crossed his path, and those half dozen casually. There are more men like that in the world than we realize, chiefly because their stories are too eventless to project themselves.

The quality of gratitude that Dot Feverill gave Al Koken transcended even her own understanding. From her teens, life had been a precarious performance for her. Hers had been the perilous and somewhat melodramatic position of a really beautiful girl, without parents, obliged at an early age to get out on her own. The gift of a voice asserting itself had not made her position any easier. So many things could have happened to Dot which did not, chiefly because when she was barely in her twenties a man of the caliber of Al Koken had providentially crossed her path.

How it came about, after her return to the east from Arizona, and the subsequent relapse into ill health, that Al Koken was finally to find the courage to ask her to marry him was never clear in his own mind.

She seemed so beyond his reach; she seemed so out of his ken. From the first day he had clamped eyes upon her, he had realized that, and had felt humbly grateful for his capacity to serve her as a friend.

In any event, the pathos of it gave Al Koken the courage, and into the safe retreat of this kind man's sheltering arms there crept gratefully the wounded and the frightened Dot.

The marriage that resulted was one of those built on passionate adoration on one side and grateful, sweet humility on the other.

The happiest day in Al Koken's life was when he closed his affairs in the East, pocketed a large nest-egg of the money he had earned and saved throughout the long years of his bachelorhood, and turned his face, with the frail, lovely one of his bride, toward the more benign climate of southern California.

As Al Koken used to say to himself in the period that followed, those precious first years of his marriage contained more happiness than any one man had a right to expect of a life-time. The Al Kokens took up their abode in what was literally a castle in the air; a luxurious Spanish villa that hung from a mountainside that faced the placidity of the Pacific ocean.

And what happened subsequently was understandable to him, because in the depth of his happiness he was still capable of a strange wisdom; the wisdom of realizing the inevitability of what was to come. It was not that the lovely Dot loved him less, or that her gratefulness to him as her "Daddy" ever wavered. The sentiment which was inscribed in her sweet, scrawling hand on a photograph of herself that hung in his room, "To my darling Daddy from a grateful Dot," was none the less sincere because one day, one inevitable day, Dot was to answer the call of youth to youth.

A young engineer surveying on the mountainside strolled into the den one afternoon for a drink of water, which Dot herself served to him out of a dipper made of a gourd.

The subsequent thing that happened was as natural as the sunset dipping into the Pacific or the beautiful soaring of seagulls about the castle-in-the-air, or the sound of Dot's laughter before it became tinged with the pain and the ecstasy of what was happening to her.

Al, tied into a knot inside of himself with the pain of it, was conscious of the setting of the sun of his dream almost before the first shadows had come to assert themselves; Al knew that Dot and the young engineer were drifting and carrying with them his happiness, almost before they knew it themselves.

And the heartbreaking part of it was that she fought so against it, struggled with her little strength; and yet from the first she was helpless. One who knows inner tragedy might surmise with what complete heartbreak, what devastating wretchedness, Dot might have carried on her part of the compact with Al, had it not been for the delicate and subtle wisdom of the fat little man.

He saw it coming, and he braced himself; more than that, it was his initiative that was finally to bring about the collapse of his marriage. He made easy for these two young people that which without his assistance would have been intolerably difficult. He placed their happiness in their hands. He did the unthinkable, he stepped out of his paradise that another might step in.

And yet in his heart, Al Koken's shrewdness again asserted itself. He knew that in reality, whether he remained in it or out of it, actually his paradise was finished. His song was sung.

In the young engineer Dot had met her mate and had responded to the mysterious call.

Al Koken lives by himself in a small bungalow down near the sound of the sea. Dot, married to the young engineer, lives in another castle-in-the-air that overhangs another crag of another mountainside.

Her adoration of Al Koken is something that has never diminished, but on the contrary has increased. Her picture still hangs on his walls, "To my darling Daddy from a grateful Dot." The quality of her happiness with the young engineer is impeccable. There is but one fly in their ointment. As the babies come and the responsibilities grow, financial pinch is upon them.

Sometimes Al wonders to himself why he does not settle upon the young pair a substantial life income, but in his heart he knows why. Every so often, full of sweet distress at her mission, Dot comes down to the little bungalow by the sea secretly, asking her incomparable friend for the largesse of a loan to tide them over a bad spot in their finances.

Al waits for these occasions a little relentlessly.

To him, there is nothing in the world left to give him happiness but the sound of her voice appealing to him, "Dear Daddy—please—will you help us just this once more—"

All Oceans Denoted by the Term "Seven Seas"

Today the term "the seven seas" embraces the Arctic and Antarctic, the North and the South Atlantic, the North and the South Pacific, and the Indian oceans. At one time in Europe it signified (1) the North sea; (2) the White sea; (3) the Baltic sea; (4) the Mediterranean sea; (5) the Adriatic sea; (6) the Aegean sea; and (7) the Black sea. If used at the ime of the Dispersion no one knows what it designated; but, in Classic times, the seven seas were: (1) Mare Internum—the Mediterranean; (2) Mare Aegaeum—the Aegean, east of Greece; (3) Mare Adriaticum—the Adriatic—(4) Mare Tyrrhenum—the Tyrrhenian, between Italy and Sardinia, Corsica, and Sicily; (5) Mare Ionicum—the Ionian, between Greece and southern Italy, the land of the Siculi (Sicilians); (7) Mare Sardoum—west of Sardinia and Corsica.

East of Suez the seven seas are (1) Caspian sea; (2) Aral sea; (3) Okhotsk sea; (4) Japan sea; (5) China sea; (6) Arabian sea; (7) Red sea. In Polynesia are the following: (1) Celebes; (2) Sulu; (3) Java; (4) Banda; (5) Arafura; (6) Coral; (7) Timor. In the Western hemisphere we have (1) Bering sea; (2) Beaufort sea; (3) Greenland sea; (4) Lincoln sea; (5) Baffin sea; (6) Caribbean sea; (7) the Yucatan channel, called by the Mexicans "Mar de las Antillas."

George W. Stimpson says, in his "Nuggets of Knowledge" (p. 161): "The seven seas is a figurative term denoting all the seas and oceans of the world. . . . It was part of the vernacular of several nations long before some of the oceans named were known. . . . The seven seas are referred to in the literature of the ancient Hindus, Chinese, Persians, Romans and other nations. . . . To the Persians the seven seas were the streams forming the Oxus river; the Hindus applied the name to bodies of water in the Punjab. Near Venice, Italy, is a group of salt-water lagoons which the Romans called Septem Maria, the Latin phrase for seven seas."—Literary Digest.

MACHINE AGE THREATENS MAN WITH DESTRUCTION

Fosdick Says Unless Social Sciences Advance With Other Sciences, There's Little Hope.

New York.—Has man a chance to survive the machine age he has created? Or is he changing his physical world so rapidly that he will be annihilated as were the saber-toothed tiger and the mastodon?

Raymond Blaine Fosdick, writer on political and social problems and a brother of the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, declares that unless the social sciences are advanced to a place of equality with physics, chemistry and biology, there isn't much hope.

"We have utilized our growing acquaintance with the laws of nature to harness new forces and transform the physical world about us, but the scientific study of the human being, of the springs of his conduct, and of human relations, has not been pushed with anything like the same eagerness, and with little of the same technique," Mr. Fosdick says in Golden Book Magazine.

"In spite of his new weapons and of his increased powers, man himself remains as he was and always has been—irrational, impulsive, emotional, inherently conservative to change, bound by customs and traditions which he will not analyze, the victim of age-old conventions and prejudices.

"Except for a certain urbanity, the good nature and good temper of the herd, modern man is probably not far removed from his paleolithic ancestors. Science has exposed this paleolithic savage, masquerading in modern dress, to a sudden shift in environment which threatens to unbalance his brain."

Among current ideas that must be scrutinized and revalued, Mr. Fosdick says, are the conceptions of patriotism and of industry. "Once patriotism was a unifying force that brought order among small conflicting groups," he declares. "Today, in the world-wide society of mankind, it has become a disintegrating force."

He believes industry has upset the scale of human values, for it no longer is one element of life, but the whole of life. "Industry was made for man, not man for industry," he says.

Mr. Fosdick sees the way out in "a fundamental reappraisal of things that have hitherto been regarded as more or less sacrosanct" and in a public opinion "conscious of the growing disproportion of civilization and eager to encourage creative work in the sphere of human relationships."

Plenty Of Time For Christmas

By W. L. Gaston

THEY had a good time Christmas at the Mackey home; in fact they had several good times—more good times than needed. Mr. Mackey had a prosperous insurance business down town. His son, Frank, was a deputy in the city clerk's office and his daughter was a confidential clerk in one of the big law firms.

Mrs. Mackey was housekeeper and homemaker. She was president of the Ladies' Aid society and in addition to other duties, was organist for the church choir.

Christmas was coming, in fact was only a few days off. An energetic clock agent was in town selling electric clocks. The Mackeys needed a clock so it was easy to sell Mr. Mackey one as a Christmas present for his wife. The agent inquired about the family, and in a day or two he had sold a clock to the son for his mother, and the daughter bought one, confident that a clock would be just the present her mother would enjoy.

The members of the Aid society were interviewed and a clock was bought for their president, Mrs. Mackey. Of course, the choir wanted to express their appreciation of their organist and they bought a clock and sent it to the Mackey home marked "Do not open until Christmas eve."

On Christmas eve all the packages were brought in and the family gathered around the tree to inspect the gifts that old Santa had brought. That generous old soul handed Mrs. Mackey five good electric clocks. There was some little tinge of chagrin, but it could not be helped. Mrs. Mackey kissed them all and said playfully that she was going to have the time of her life.

The next morning, as Mr. Mackey was dressing he looked out of the window and saw the clock agent hurrying toward the depot. A hundred yards behind him came one of the Mackey neighbors. Mr. Mackey hailed the neighbor and said: "Stop that man ahead of you; I want to see him, I will be right up." When the neighbor reached the depot, the train was ready to start and the agent was climbing aboard. The accommodating neighbor pulled his coat and informed him that Mr. Mackey wanted to see him. "I can't wait," replied the agent, "but I know what he wants. He wants one of these clocks." "If that is what he wants," said the neighbor, "I can take it to him. How much is it?" "Fifteen dollars," replied the agent.

The exchange was soon made and as the train pulled out Mr. Mackey came running all out of breath. "Has that man gone?" he exclaimed addressing his neighbor. "Yes," replied the neighbor, "but that is all right, I got the clock for you. Here it is, you can hand me the money any time."

Red Coals And Christmas Eve

By Mary Graham Bonner

THE children had gone to bed, their stockings were all hanging by the fireplace. They were filled now. And two persons were sitting in front of the fire talking.

"Shall I put on another log?" he said.

"No, we had better not sit up much longer. Let's just stay until the red coals become dull," she answered.

Every Christmas eve they had sat like this when the house was quiet, after the stockings had been filled, after the tree had been trimmed.

It was becoming cooler since the fire had almost gone out, but their chairs were drawn closely up before the shining andirons.

"You always polish them so beautifully for Christmas," he said. "You never grow tired of making everything as lovely each succeeding year."

"And you never grow tired of appreciating—perhaps that is why I can always take such an interest," she said.

"The andirons shine with fresh brilliancy each year," he said.

"Like our love for each other," she added. And then, for fear he might think she was a little too sentimental for one whose hair already had many streaks of gray she added:

"You make me so sentimental, you darling."

He put his hand on hers.

"It has been a hard year—all the years have their struggles, but every year, as I sit with you in front of this old fire it seems as though there is nothing that I want in this world."

They were straightening up the room now. Everything was in its place. The presents were under the tree, the small toys were poking their jolly little selves out of the stockings.

"I think the thermometer will show zero before morning," he said. "I'll give the furnace an extra poke."

She waited while he went down into the cellar, and as he came up, and then went to lock the front door—the flickering lights from the stars and the bright white of the snow gleamed through at them.

"It's so beautiful," he said. "Let's take a look at it."

He put her heavy coat around her shoulders and together they stood out in front of the house for a moment.

"You always," he told her, "have been my guiding star."

And she put her hand in his and smiled through slightly moist eyes. He was so willing to praise, so willing to say those things when he thought them, that it had made her, she knew, the sort of a person she was.

Each of them lived up to the praise and love the other gave.

The glow of the Christmas fire warmed their hearts throughout all the year.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan, with the purpose of requisitioning the place for government use. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Loris promises to investigate. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expresses fear for her son's safety.

—6—

"They bear pseudonyms," said Mrs. Krassin, "like the actors they are."

"What an American friend of mine," said a young man near the door, "would call bad actors."

The company did not understand this American slang well enough to give it more than the smile called for by politeness.

"Some people," said the colonel, as if telling a secret, "think that Loris is not a Bolshevist at all, but an agent provocateur."

"One hears everything," said Vladimir. "I would suggest, however, that the time has gone by when the Bolsheviki need any further provocation."

"An old friend of mine," put in the old princess, "saw him—Loris—as he passed in his motor car. I want to tell you about it. He gives me his word that he saw this Loris long before the revolution, and that he went by a different name, but he couldn't think of the name, and he believes he was a prince! What do you think of that?"

Vladimir laughed as if in enjoyment of some great joke. These speculations and surmises seemed to amuse him vastly.

"He might be a Georgian or a Circassian," said the colonel, "or some of those peoples."

"Oh, in that case," said Vladimir, "he is in all probability a prince. I served in the Caucasus, and I give you my word one dared not throw a stone into a crowd for fear of hitting a prince!"

"Ridiculous!" said the princess.

"Very!" replied Vladimir. "I thought so at the time."

"I do not think this matter of Loris' origin so unimportant," said Mrs. Krassin. "But, prince or not, I shall keep my movables packed. I never wear my diamond earrings any more. I prefer to be on the safe side."

"Where there is a safe side," said Vladimir.

There seemed to be nothing more to talk about, even for idle people; and there was nothing but idleness left for the Sitters in the Salon, save for these new plots and conspiracies. The midday sun played on the old furniture—on porcelains, bronzes, heavy silks, and on the carpet woven in Little Russia by the work of a generation of women on one piece of art. It flickered on the carved mahogany doors, on the gilt of the frames of engravings and paintings.

It was a picture of Old Russia—this group of people in their heavy chairs, seemingly fixed in their surroundings and inseparable from them: the last touch upon a great canvas now finished; or a dissolving view of a great historic object hoary with age and touched with the pathos of decay. The visitors one by one went away. Mrs. Krassin parted with them with polite inquiries about friends and relatives, and gave to each her pleasantest smile—a slightly wooden smile it was, which she had standardized for use on all such occasions.

"Where is Musia?" said Vladimir, as he looked about before withdrawing. "She was here a moment ago."

"Musia?" replied Mrs. Krassin. "One never can tell where she is. As one's children grow up, they sometimes seem strange to one. I think the revolution has changed our young people."

"Youth always looks extravagant to the preceding generation," said the colonel, as he prepared to go out with the princess. "To look so is Musia's privilege—and her greatest charm."

The group, over whom hung impending doom, had broken up. Mrs. Krassin still sat on her divan alone, wondering why she and her daughter were not closer to each other. Nothing had happened between them. She had not even pressed the project of Musia's marriage with Vladimir, which had for years been tacitly arranged, and which, Mrs. Krassin felt, ought to take place now. It would permit her to devote herself to the task of piloting Ilya through this time of peril with greater singleness of purpose. And while she so mused, Ilya himself rushed into the room.

"Mother," he cried pantingly. "I have been insulted! I have been robbed! A Bolshevik beast in a peasant's smock took my motor car! I will not endure it!"

Mrs. Krassin's eyes were cold no longer—they were filled with the fierce tenderness of a tigress whose cub is in peril. She rushed to him and threw her arms about his neck.

"You must be calm, my darling," said she soothingly. "You must not indulge in revenge. We must be diplomatic!"

"But I have been questioned like a moujik by this traitor! I have had to skulk through the streets on foot—and I was followed—me an officer of the Guards! And I know who the miscreant is. He is that fellow who was a thieving steward on our estate, and who went to prison; and—"

Ilya threw off his mother's embrace and turned to the window. He was weeping with humiliation, and trembling as with fright. He did not wish for his mother to see him in this condition, and moved toward the door.

"And did this man," said Mrs. Krassin, "—what name did they call him—Loris?"

"They called him Vilinsky—Tovarisch Vilinsky—what difference does it make—I'll kill him!"

"Now, let us be diplomatic," said Mrs. Krassin soothingly. "Let us use our brains. Did this scoundrel recognize you?"

"I do not know nor care!" cried Ilya; but ruled by his mother's earnestness he went on. "Yes—I believe he knew me. Yes, I am sure he did!"

CHAPTER IV

An Invasion by the Hun

On the day when Tovarisch Vilinsky paid Musia Krassin the compliment of asking her to play for him, he had no idea of acting the part of the Hun and invading the sacred House of Krassin. He was sweeping like a dust cloud through the streets of Kazan in his motor car when the idea occurred to him as he passed it.

"Is not that the house of the bourgeois, Krassin—the one we just passed?" he asked, turning to a clerk who was with him.

Revolutions make changes in languages as well as in governments—and in souls. The Krassins were as far as possible from what was before the revolution called "the bourgeoisie"; for they were not middle class, nor tradespeople, nor mean, nor vulgar, nor commonplace. But now they were all called bourgeoisie—all above the proletariat. Or below them: for there were some who saw the old prophecy coming to fruition, when "every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low," but if also it meant that "the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain," which part of the prophet's message was rather lost sight of. Tovarisch Vilinsky was certainly a strange agent for the world's rectification.

"Yes, Tovarisch," replied the clerk very respectfully, "that is the Krassin house."

"Turn back!" commanded Vilinsky. "I want to take a look at that house, and at the people in it! I may need that house; and I should like to see how this band of bloodsuckers live."

A maid heard the sharp and impatient ring of the bell and made breathless speed to open the door—and stared in amazement at this man in the peasant's smock with his peasant followers standing before her.

"Go to the back door," she commanded. "This is not for such as you!"

Her indignation turned to amazement when Vilinsky and his men, paying not the slightest attention to her reprimand, pushed by her into the hall, throwing the door wide open, and walked calmly in, down the hall and through rooms, looking at everything with sneering curiosity, befouling the rugs and floors with dirt from the streets, fingering precious things, like a party of barbarians strolling through a palace of ancient Rome.

Nobody sought to prevent them. Vladimir and the other young men were nowhere in sight. Ilya Krassin was in his rooms. The invaders were not asked why they came. The house was in paralysis. They on their part asked no questions and sought no directions. They paid no attention to any of the stupefied inmates of the house. They were calm, curious, impudent, like tourists strolling without understanding through the cathedral of some alien and despised faith.

Quaker Meeting House

At Coolham, in Sussex, England, there is a picturesque old Quaker meeting house known as "The Blue Idol." Tradition says it was built of the timber of one of William Penn's ships. The grave of Penn's daughter Letitia is in the adjoining burial ground. But why is the building called "The Blue Idol?" It is a strange name suggesting rather the contents of an eastern temple than the rendezvous of a quiet God-fearing people. Originally it was called "Little Slatters," and it acquired its present mysterious name towards the end of the Seventeenth century.

Unfair

For centuries men have had all the breaks. Now it is the women who get them. Apparently the struggle for equality gave the wheel of life such a turn that it actually reversed itself. Prof. John Hanna evidently had this in mind when he said:

"Equality before the law is a resounding slogan for the seal of a great commonwealth but it has no particular application to breach-of-promise cases. A man's broken heart is worth nothing."

Historic Monument to French Hero in Danger

News from Paris states that there is a possibility that the citadel of the little town of Blaye in southwestern France may be taken off the official list of historic monuments, and that the destruction of its ruins will follow. Here Charlemagne buried Roland, who had died in defense of the great king's rearguard at Roncesvalles. The great ivory horn of Roland, which he sounded—too late—to bring Charlemagne to the support of his rearguard, is a famous legend. Roland's own sword is shown at Nuremburg; the warrior himself was interred at Blaye. In the famous "Song of Roland," the ancient poem that tells the heroic tale, Roland is depicted as a national hero, who resisted the attacks of the Saracens. The true Roland was a warden of the Breton marches, who died fighting against the Basques, when in 778 they attacked and defeated Charlemagne's rearguard at Roncesvalles in the Pyrenees. The citadel at Blaye was built in the Seventeenth century by Sebastien Vauban, the great French military engineer, who was responsible for most of the fortifications of France that were constructed during his lifetime.

Record Telephone Call Sent Over the Oceans

The longest commercial telephone call on record, from Sedalia, Mo., to Sydney, Australia, was announced by the American Telephone & Telegraph company as having been made through its new overseas telephone service. The connection covered a distance of more than 15,000 miles. Due to the time difference between the two points the speaker in Australia talked at about 2:00 a. m. on a recent Tuesday morning, while his words reached the listener at Sedalia, a fraction of a second later, at 10:00 a. m. Monday, there.

The call went by wire from Sydney to the local radio station. There it was amplified and sent to London, switched to one of the regular transatlantic circuits and forwarded to New York through the Bell receiving station at Moulton, Maine, and was thence sent by land lines to Sedalia.

Cycle of Hard Luck

Over a period of about a year, here is what has happened to ten-year-old Leland Luenberger, of Gouverneur, N. Y.: Severe cut on his knee playing football, forced to remain in hospital for two weeks; injured in automobile accident and returned to bed; was forced back to bed with measles; while suffering from this disease he contracted the mumps and scarlet fever; recovered and incurred bad cut on his foot while on vacation. Now he is confined to an easy chair until that wound heals.

Holt to Have Skating Rink

The members of the Holt Commercial club met in the bank building on Monday evening to elect officers and committees and to transact business. H. O. Hanson, who has had the honor of being president of the local club for the past four years, was again re-elected to head that organization.

R. B. Perry, superintendent of the local school, was elected secretary-treasurer of the club. The Club took upon itself the responsibility of sponsoring a public skating rink in our village. There is no cleaner sport than skating and it should be up to every family to see to it that they pay one dollar towards the maintenance of such a place for their children to play.

A dance will be given Saturday December 20th for the benefit of the rink. Tickets will be sold at all the business places in town for the dance and also season tickets for the rink. Either ticket costs one dollar.

We hope that when you are called upon to pay your dollar for membership fee in the commercial club, that you will all give it with a smile and that those who do not wish to belong to that, will buy either a dance ticket or a season skating rink ticket for a dollar.

Co-operate with the Club all you can and we assure you that any time anything comes up that you may want a little help with, we will stand ready to co-operate with you. An organization of this kind in a small town is a big thing, and we hope to find you all very much willing to assist with the work of getting a nice skating rink fixed up before the holidays.

NOTICE!

Will all those who have any of the new hockey sticks or know where there are some, kindly bring them to the News office or let us know where we can find them.—Holt Commercial Club.

CHECK AND DOUBLE-CHECK

Health of boys and girls is carefully checked in many Minnesota counties through the program supported by Christmas Seal funds. During 1930 a total of 27,698 pupils in Minnesota schools were given health inspections, a report of the Minnesota Public Health Association shows.

Children were further protected through special nutrition demonstrations, clinics, fresh air camps, and an intensive campaign to interest and inform them about health.

- Testing of School Children for Tuberculosis
- Chest and general public health clinics
- Public Health Nursing Service
- Tuberculosis Surveys
- Health Inspection of School Children
- Early Diagnosis Campaigns
- Unceasing Campaign of Education
- Publication of a magazine, posters, pamphlets, press articles
- Fresh Air camps and nutrition classes
- Medical Research for cure for Tuberculosis.

"Tuberculosis deaths have been cut in half in 20 years," says an appeal from the Public Health Association. "Yet 1441 Minnesota people died last year of this preventable and curable disease."

N. S. A. News

With the closing of the fall term of the Northwest School of Agriculture on Friday of this week, students from fifteen Northwestern Minnesota counties and adjoining territory in North Dakota and Canada, will return to their homes for the usual two weeks Christmas recess.

From the standpoint of attendance, scholarship, and achievements, the past term has been one of the most successful in the history of the institution. Epoch making events included the dedication of the new fireproof Physical Education building, and the opening of the new library, which were special features of the Home Coming celebration held the latter part of October; the opening of the new auditorium early in December; new attendance records on Home Coming day and Parent's Day; and the winning of the School of Agriculture football championship for 1930.

According to Registrar J. W. Mlinar, the Senior and Advanced classes are the largest in the history of the school with over one hundred eligible for graduation next spring. Many new students have already reserved rooms for the winter term, which will open for registration on Monday, January 5. Mr. Mlinar states that special classes will be arranged for beginning students, and credits earned during the winter will apply on the total required for graduation.

Farm House Burns

Martin Johnson, farmer living southeast of here suffered a big loss on Tuesday afternoon of last week when his farm house burned to the ground. He had just let the insurance run out and saved very little of the household goods so the loss was total.

2,000,000 Pound Fish Caught in Lake o'Woods

An increase of 25 percent over last year was the record of the fish catch on the American side of Lake of the Woods, according to figures compiled by District Warden Dick Willems.

The catch amounted to 2,196,601 pounds as compared to the 1,668,980 last year. This will be slightly increased when the report of one or two more fishermen comes in. In spite of this increase there was a reduction in the revenue due to lower prices. Last year the average for all kinds of fish was 7½ cents per pound, while this year it was only 5½ cents. Receipts this year were $119,382.56 as compared with $124,108.96 a year ago.

Distribution of receipts were as follows: Pike, 729,563 pounds, amounting to $80.540.19. White fish, 10,941 pounds, $1,670.01. Tulibees, 888,419 pounds amount $18,810.02. All other kinds 576,668 pounds sold for $18,361.35.

The average prices per pound were: Pike, 11 cents; whitefish, 15 cents; tulibees, 2⅛ cents, and other kinds, 3¼ cents.

There was a notable gain in the pike catch this year. This is due to the planting of fry in the lake. 20,000,000 pike were planted this year and it is expected as many will be put in next year. An indication of what might be expected in the future can be judged from the fact that in one day's lift one pound netter returned to the lake 1,200 undersized pike which were unharmed.——Williams Northern Light.

Farm Bureau Watch Lawmakers

Members of the Minnesota Farm Bureau are indicating an intense interest in the state legislature affairs and through county Farm Bureau legislative committees will keep in close touch with the workings of the state legislature this winter. Also in some instances, members of the county legislative committees will be delegated to sit in at meetings of the legislature in St. Paul, where they can keep in touch with events and work for or against proposed laws that affect Minnesota agriculture.

Winona county is taking the lead in this matter, having already appropriated a sum of money with which to finance the trips of its legislative committeemen, says A. J. Olson, president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

To the People of Holt:

We like to call your attention at this time to the fact that at the present time there is a whole school of all kinds of peddlers making house-to-house calls in the village, trying to sell you the same merchandise as our local business places are handling.

How do you expect our local businessmen to give you credit and, then, when a peddler comes along you pay him the cash?

Be loyal to those who stay in business here and accomodate you in the summer as well as in the winter. Shoo the peddlers away and patronize the home business establishments, for it is the owners of them that bear the brunt of the taxes and also help to keep up the town so it will be fit for you to live in.

All the peddlers look for is your money. They are not very particular about the quality of the merchandise you buy from them as they are not going to stick around and hear you kick.

The merchants in Holt can get you anything that you want and, the Butcher here sells fresh fish and meats of all kinds twelve months out of the year.

All postoffices will be closed all day on Christmas. No mail will be distributed or delivered on Christmas Day. Mail your Christmas parcels early.

We again call your attention to the big Old Time Dance which the Holt Commercial Club is staging here tomorrow night, Dec. 20th for the benefit of the local skating rink.

We hope to have you all with us as we expect to have a good time at this annual get-together party.

Mr. Overum, with the assistance of the high school boys, has done some fine work in clearing the snow and grass off the rink the past week. We are sorry that it could not be flooded at once, due to the fact that the mild weather and snow has kept the ground from freezing hard enuf to hold water yet.

As soon as it is cold enough, the water will be put on as fast as it will freeze properly.

Loud Mouth Is Closed by Gang

Hoodlum Talked Too Much and Pays Penalty With His Life.

Milburn, N. J.—Joseph Hamley, amiable 220-pound slot machine racketeer, whose tendency toward garrulity was a fatal violation of the etiquette of crime, was slain near here recently, the police believe, because he knew who shot Jack (Legs) Diamond at the Monticello hotel in New York on October 12.

According to information police have obtained as the result of the slaying of Hamley, whose booming laugh and ready handshake carried him from the obscurity of a repairer of slot machines to a part ownership of 800 of them, Diamond was shot as the result of trying to "muscle in" on the Jersey slot machine territory of a former henchman, Irving Wexler, better known as Waxie Gordon.

Result of Slot Machine War.

Police have learned definitely, it is said, that not only did the loquacious Hamley know who shot Diamond, but he also knew who took Abe Figura, former roommate of Diamond, for a ride on October 11, the day before the chief was shot in the New York hotel. They say that both shootings were the result of the Jersey slot machine war and that Hamley was killed by the same men, who were fearful that he would indulge his penchant for talking to police or to anyone else who would listen to him.

Hamley's story, police say, is the story of an ambitious fat man who talked himself into something good and then "talked himself to death." It was his somewhat ponderous if good-natured wit which made him a favorite of resort keepers in Hudson, Bergen and Passaic counties as he traveled through that territory "repairing" machines. His art consisted of turning nickel machines, which were legal since they requite their players with a roll of mints, into "two-bit" machines, which are illegal since their players obtain nothing if they lose.

Hamley Meets Figura.

It was on one of his trips a year ago through his territory that he met Figura, Diamond's right-hand man, who was surveying the country with a view to turning a profitable deal for Diamond. He felt that the slot machine racket wasn't being properly developed, according to police, and that Hamley with his knowledge of the trade might be valuable.

He arranged a meeting between Diamond and Hamley, it is definitely known, in fact, Hamley himself was the authority for it. There the ambitious fat man convinced Diamond that he knew the trade, knew where slot machines should be placed. He invested a small bit of money, police say, and was declared one of Diamond's partners, a distinction of which he was inordinately proud.

For a time Hamley was happy in the consciousness that he had arrived, had made good. The first thing to disturb his serenity was a conversation with a representative of Wexler's.

"What do you mean by trying to chisel in on our racket?" he was asked, according to police.

The good-natured fat man was panic-stricken.

"I'm just a hired man," he stammered. "See Figura or Diamond. They are my bosses and I take orders for them."

Soon after this conversation, Figura was taken for a ride and his bullet-riddled body was found near Harrison the morning of the day Diamond was shot. Two days later Hamley received a cryptic message through the mails which added to his unhappiness. It had been mailed in Paterson, and said:

"You are on the spot, Windy."

A few days later his bullet-ridden body was found by a New Jersey policeman.

One of the doctors ran forceps down the infant's throat and pulled. Out came a whole fish. The infant quickly recovered.

English Seaplane Makes Speed of 140 M. P. H.

London.—Bit by bit new facts about the two large sea-going aircraft soon to be used by the royal air force experimental base for marine aircraft at Felixtowe are becoming known.

The short Valetta, said to be the largest floating seaplane in the world, flies almost daily over the River Medway at Rochester.

It is now known that the Valetta has flown a little more than 140 miles an hour, and has carried a total load, including the structure, of more than ten tons.

The other partner in the new British flying couple is the Blackburn Sydney, a military flying boat with three moderately supercharged water cooled Rolls Royce 500 horse power engines. This craft is also a monoplane and is designed in a slightly different form as a flying boat air liner. With the exception of the fabric covering the superstructure the aircraft is built entirely of metal. Nine tons constitute the total weight of the loaded aircraft, which cruises at a speed of about 100 miles an hour. The craft can cruise from four to eight hours, depending on the load carried.

BLOODY AUBURN PRISON CHANGED SINCE REVOLT

Trouble Makers and Hardened Criminals Have Been Deprived of Their Power.

Auburn, N. Y.—Auburn prison, nearly a year after it experienced one of the bloodiest riots in prison history, has taken on a new appearance.

The century-old institution appears much the same on the outside, with the exception of new additions, but inside the entire scheme of things has been altered.

New forces are at work. Trouble makers and hardened criminals have lost their power. Some are in "solitary." Others have been transferred to Clinton prison, Dannemora, and to other state institutions.

There have been many mechanical changes. New systems of doors have been installed. The prison is not as open as it once was, for doors separate different sections of the institution, much on the same plan as a ship.

The open stairway, leading from the first floor to the basement, where Principal Keeper George Durnford was shot to death, has been closed with steel walls. On the fifth tier in the south wing walls are now bare of mirrors. Ernest Pasevi and Steve Pawlak, two of the slain ringleaders, made good use of mirrors to watch the progress of their pursuers.

The application of paint has brightened up the prison considerably. In the south wing, where the riot last December reached its climax, the bullet marked and blood-splotched walls have been covered with pumpkin yellow paint.

The mess hall has been painted white, as have the hallways leading to it.

Discipline is strict, and when a convict disobeys orders or causes trouble swift justice follows. Solitary confinement, and all that goes with it, is the penalty.

Work on Giant Airship Is Progressing Rapidly

Akron, Ohio.—The dirigible ZRS-4, or the Akron, is rapidly taking the shape it will present when launched in June, 1931. The ZRS-4 will represent the greatest undertaking in the history of lighter than air craft—the largest airship in the world.

The framework will be completed by January, according to plans.

The ZRS-4 is not being built along the graceful lines of the Graf Zeppelin, but its construction represents the latest and safest in dirigible design.

OLD TESSAULT HAVING HER DAY

By FANNIE HURST

(©, 1930, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE manner in which Anna Tessault entered into what was practically to be her life work, was typical of the way in which the average life finds its major activity. Anna Tessault just drifted into the business which was ultimately to take on quite important proportions in the community.

In the days when Hollywood was little more than a bit of garden coaxed out of the edge of the desert, Anna Tessault was a dressmaker.

Her father had been a gold rusher, who had left a family stranded on a mortgaged ten acres of orange grove.

It was Anna Tessault's boast that she had made dresses for the first handful of motion picture stars, back in the days when the vast industry was an infant in swaddling clothes.

That was probably true. There was a signed photograph of Mary Pickford hanging in Anna Tessault's walls, and one of a great robust clown of a fellow, named "Bunny."

Anna Tessault had been in at the birth of the industry, all right. Her mind was an archive for annals. She could tell you the births, the marriages, the scandals, the deaths, the successes, the catastrophes, the ups and the downs, throughout the history of the film colony.

"Ask Tessault," if you are in doubt about the birthday of a film star—if anyone, in this day and age, can be in doubt of anything concerning the public and private life of a film star.

"Ask Tessault," if you want to know who, back in 1909, had married whom, and in what picture it was that Norma Talmadge made her first outstanding success, and what has become of Pearl White.

Ask Tessault.

To ask Tessault, you were obliged to visit her beautiful and exclusive wide-frontage gown shop on Hollywood boulevard. The rugs in the sumptuous interiors of Anna Tessault's three-shops-in-one, almost tripped you by the highness of their nap. Mirrors sent you walking into yourself on all sides, and nothing so mundane as a gown or a fur scarf or a bit of hat was permitted to strike the eye, until you had waddled across the many feet of expensive frontage into the softly lighted french-gray showrooms, where mannequins paraded in an octagon room of mirrors, and displayed the latest skillful wares of Tessault.

Tessault was a character. And strangely enough, in a land where the mere suggestion of old age is a badge of ignominy, Tessault had allowed herself to grow old furiously. She was full of lines, deep ones that furrowed her face, and her hair, which it is true she had tinted as it struggled to become gray, fitted her head like a grim wig of fluted copper—hard—unrelenting.

There was a fierce look of a bird about old Tessault. She reminded you of a weather-beaten eagle. There was a certain grandeur to her big, bony figure; a certain power to her hooked, aquiline profile. You respected her for the arduous story of her accomplishments, the long, hard road from the early days of her struggle to keep over the heads of herself and frightened mother and sisters the tiny house set in the ten acres of mortgaged orange grove.

Anna Tessault had won out in a big, fine fashion. Her shop was one of the most exclusive on the West coast. A corporation had offered to buy her out at an astonishing figure. She was to be reckoned with industrially. The entire motion picture colony claimed her, affectionately, as its own. The most brilliant, the most feted, the best dressed of its satellites, rolled up to the triple frontage of her shops. For twenty years, the life of old Tessault had been devoted to helping create beautiful woman, and in that period there had been little time to devote to beautifying herself.

The old eagle was a gaunt, grim figure, full of years, full of fatigues. And she had one major weakness.

If in her powerful makeup there was the soft spot of an Achilles' heel, it lay in her secret irrepressible, dominating love of personal adornment.

Tessault loved finery! Love of it had first prompted her to hang out the little dressmaker shingle in those days when the community was in its infancy. True, the years had given her precious little time to indulge that predilection. People said to her, with amusement, that she was the worst dressed woman in Hollywood. She had no time. The quick times of affairs were too fast for her. Sometimes, late at night, Tessault would find time to wind a bit of gauze around her grim old hair, or to hold up against her square and bony chest a bouffant frock designed for some one young and lovely. But, in the main, Tessault stumbled into her clothes of a morning, too rushed to give them thought, and out of them of an evening, too tired to care.

And so the years marched by, and the life-time of Tessault, who so loved finery herself, was irrevocably given over to bedecking others. Not without pride, mind you. The clothes designed by Tessault and hung on to the beautiful young bodies of the motion picture girls were gazed upon, not by thousands, but by millions.

What designer in the history of the world, old Tessault used proudly to challenge, could boast so large a public as hers? For every frock that left her workrooms, millions were to gape and admire. Nightly, as Tessault laid her weary head upon her pillow, whole firmaments of eyes were feasting on the creative machinations of one Tessault. The lean rack of Tessault's body had denied the caress of the sheer things she loved, but on the other hand it had been granted her to create them for others.

There was consolation in that, and there was a sense of service. Tessault had given happiness to countless thousands, appeasing their eyes, counteracting the daily drabness of life, illuminating the screen with the genius of her desires.

And yet in the end that was not sufficient. The suppressed, inhibitive cravings of this bony, capable, grim-faced woman were to battle their way to the surface.

When old Tessault was sixty-four, to the stupefaction and hilarity of a young and rollicking Hollywood, the incredible happened. An old man named Renning Wyland, who had made an enormous fortune in a brand of chewing tobacco, moved to the West coast, built himself a big marshmallow Moorish palace on a crag overlooking the Pacific, stocked his garage with sixteen motor cars of an imported make, bought up twenty city blocks surrounding his estate, maneuvered to have a street named for him, met, fell in love with, and married, all within a week, Anna Tessault.

It was a ten-day wonder. It was a newspaper headline wonder. It was a West coast wonder.

And, strangely enough, they were mated with a rightness that was impeccable.

A maid and a bachelor, both of them a result of barren, hard-working lives, had come together in the twilight.

The girls for whom Tessault had sewed throughout the years, lavished her with gifts. The press of the West coast celebrated the nuptials of the grim old pioneer.

Late, but not too late, Tessault found herself confronted with the precious assignment of designing and creating her own trousseau and no June bride ever went to her wedding filmier or finer.

She was married in ivory satin, old lace, and the beautiful children of the beautiful people of the screen cast California poppies before her long, narrow feet as she strode up the aisle to the altar that had been erected in a rose garden.

The scent of orange blossoms drenched the summer scene in sweetness; bridesmaids with famous screen names formed a semicircle in pastel colorings as the ceremony was intoned.

Tessault was living a reality that far surpassed her years of dreams.

The Renning Wylands are living out that twilight in the superb seclusion of an estate that runs parallel to Wyland avenue. Old Tessault has sold the business, although it still bears her name.

There are those who say she has gone rather "queer." She dresses so outlandishly. Day after day, as she and her husband drive along the shining boulevards, or dine in the chic public restaurants, Tessault appears in toilettes and costumes that snag the eye, challenge the attention. More than ever, she is one of the local sights of the community. Instead of the drab old eagle, Tessault, still with the old eagle face, appears now in costumes thirty years too young for her. Bouffant frocks of the type she, herself, would design for sweet eighteen. Pastel little hats, audacious furs. Old Tessault, at almost seventy, dressed after the fashion of eighteen. Bizarre, exotic and almost ridiculous.

Yes, people say that old Tessault has gone a little "queer." Renning Wyland, who loves her, knows better. Secretly, he deplores her public appearances in toilettes that make them both seem ridiculous, and yet, neither by word nor manner, would he have her know it.

Old Tessault is having her day. More than anything else in the world, Renning Wyland wants her to have it.

And so, together, they go through the twilight a little ridiculously.

Unexpected Modesty

John Haynes Holmes of the Community church in New York, has a favorite story which he tells on occasions. It is the tale of a young fellow who was taking the entrance examinations at a theological seminary. One of the questions was in two parts: (a) Name the major prophets; (b) name the minor prophets. Here was a poser, but he had a stroke of inspiration which surely qualified him for his chosen profession. What he wrote at this point on the examination blank was, "Who am I to make distinctions?"—The Survey.

"Fruits" and "Vegetables"

In discussing what are fruits and what are vegetables, one must distinguish between the popular and scientific definitions of these terms. Certain fruits, in the scientific sense, like cucumbers, tomatoes, peas, beans, squash, pumpkins, eggplant, are popularly called vegetables because of their ordinary table use or their taste, while such a true vegetable as the rhubarb is popularly called a fruit. In this popular usage, beans are considered vegetables.

The Moral of It

The Hatry financial crash in London, a nine-figure crash, led President Grace of the Bethlehem Shipping corporation to say in an interview:

"Hatry was a fine young chap—for that matter he's still young—and he did splendidly, working like a slave, for ten or twelve years. Then—good-by.

"Hatry's case shows us why the highroad to success has so few travelers. Nearly everybody gets lost trying to find short cuts."

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan, with the purpose of requisitioning the place for government use. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Loris promises to investigate. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expresses fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward.

Even Mrs. Krassin, sitting in state on her divan and gazing on them in indecision, perplexity and fear, attracted no more attention than a single sharp glance from Vilinsky, as if he were wondering whether or not he were recognized. He took his stand in the middle of the room, feet wide, hands on his hips. He inspected the premises like a buyer at an auction, or a prospective tenant looking the place over critically. And as he walked about, the little clerk followed with a portfolio and notebook, trotting about his master first on one side and then on the other, like a little dog likely to run between Vilinsky's legs and be rebuked or struck for it, his back bent in servility. They talked about the room; Vilinsky pointed to the windows with the remark that the curtains were too dark.

"This room will do for the reception room," said he. "But it will have to be altered according to your notes. And have more mirrors. I like mirrors—and those other things I told you about—have you the memoranda?"

This conversation did not sound like the talk Mrs. Krassin had expected from a man in a peasant's blouse; but on second glance, the man did not look like a peasant. It was a perceptible length of time before she was impressed with the sense of insult and degradation which swept over her at their insolence; and then her face flushed, and her hands clenched. The blood of a thousand years of rulership flew in hot rage to the very ends of her fingers, and flooded her brain. She partly rose, then sank back into her chair, as her caution returned. Where was Ilya? And as another inspection aroused her suspicions that this was that very thievish steward who had had Ilya followed to his home, perhaps—she put her pride under her feet quickly.

"May I ask," said she, approaching Vilinsky, "what it is that you desire here?"

Vilinsky did not take even the trouble to look sneeringly at her. He was a master of insult. He threw a glance at her over his shoulder, and resumed his inspection of the palace.

"They," said the clerk, using a servile form of expression, and bowing with admiring pride toward the commander, "are looking at this house—for themselves."

"I scarcely understand," said she to Vilinsky, "what your clerk can mean."

"If they like the house," said the clerk, after Vilinsky had indicated that he meant to pay no attention to the lady's question, "you will have to move out."

"Within eight hours!" exclaimed Vilinsky, promptly.

"But we have no place to go," protested Mrs. Krassin, still incredulous as to the genuineness of the threat. "And I could not move my belongings in so short a time."

"Your belongings!" said Vilinsky, with his back toward her. "You won't have to move your belongings, as you call them!"

"Tovarisch Vilinsky," said the clerk, "will choose what he needs. You can then take away what is left—if there is anything."

"But," Mrs. Krassin began to protest.

"But!" shouted Vilinsky in mimicry. "Enough of you! Bloodthirsty parasite! You have lived—lived while better people have been starving—or in prison! Now is our time to live, and to choose. I have no time to argue with you!"

"If you are to get out," went on the clerk, "you will receive an order."

"Our house registry book," said Mrs. Krassin in her most diplomatic tone, "has just been returned from the militia. I request you to look at it, so that you may see how many people are living in this house at the present time."

"It's not worth while," snapped Vilinsky with an impatient motion. "My time is too precious. Now, this room," addressing the clerk, "put down as my private office. And this—but this is a room we have seen before. Who can show us this house, so we may not lose time by getting lost ourselves?"

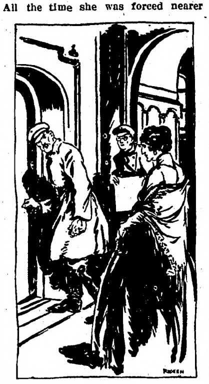
"I shall be glad to show you," said Mrs. Krassin, still diplomatic, and with all her hostess' dignity.

Vilinsky looked at her with something like amusement.

"Lead on," said he with large jocularity. "Maybe we'll keep you on as housekeeper. I should like that!"

And then began that strange tour through the old and labyrinthine establishment, the end of which we have seen in Musia's suite. Always Mrs. Krassin, like the hen-pheasant concealing her nest and her fledgling, sought to evade the necessity of surprising Ilya in his room. She thought of protecting no one else. She entered the rooms of Vladimir and the young men, the discovery of whom would have been like the unearthing of a treasure to Vilinsky, with no attempt to give warning, and finding them deserted, she merely explained that they were occupied by members of their extensive family who had taken refuge in Kazan. All the time she was vainly seeking some way to convey a message of warning to Ilya in his room.

Sometimes Vilinsky opened the door to a room which Mrs. Krassin said he had seen, to find out whether or not she was deceiving him. Always he found that she had told him the truth. All the time she was forced nearer and nearer to the necessity of going into her son's room, and of thus bringing him and this Terror face to face. It filled her with dread. Vilinsky had shown his ferocity in his behavior to her; and she remembered what Ilya had said when she asked him if Vilinsky had recognized him as one of the family at whose complaint he had gone to prison so long ago. "Yes, I believe he knew me! I am sure he did!"



"Enough of You! Bloodthirsty Parasite!"

Was there in her mind the secret thought that if Vilinsky once was introduced into her daughter's room he would forget this dreadful quest for Ilya which she suspected? She could not have told you if she had tried, probably—and she would not have tried. Whatever may have been in the mind of that agonized and perplexed mother, she now played the card she had been holding back as she reached Ilya's door. she walked calmly past it and stopped at Musia's.

"How about this door, old lady?" asked Vilinsky, pausing at the entrance to Ilya's suite.

Again she was diplomatic; she allowed a slow smile of half contempt as if at his ignorance and stupidity to curl her lips.

United States Mails

The Post Office department says that mail is dropped in the box, picked up by the collector, and placed on the facing table in the post office. It is then picked up with all the stamps arranged according to the size of the envelope and run through the canceling machine. The mail is then taken to a primary distribution case and there assorted into various boxes; then taken to a state case where it is distributed according to offices in the state and tied out in bundles according to train schedules. When it reaches the office to which it is addressed it is distributed by clerks to routes in the city by numbers, each number representing a city carrier. The city carrier on his next trip delivers the mail to the street address of the party addressed.

ALLEGED SLAYER OF FIVE JAILED

Caught After Two Days Hunt of Countryside.

Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.—Hunted for two days in the bush country near Smoky Lake, 80 miles northeast of here, George Dwernchuk, alleged slayer of five persons on a lonely farm near Smoky Lake, was captured here a short time ago.

For 48 hours provincial police and a posse of neighbor farmers scoured the countryside near the Walanski home for Dwernchuk, who is alleged to have slain four members of that family and a neighbor farmer.

According to information received at Alberta provincial police headquarters here, Constable J. Christophers picked up Dwernchuk, while he was loitering near the depot in Vegreville, Alta, 60 miles northeast of here and only about twenty miles from Smoky Lake.

Recently a man armed with a 12 guage shotgun entered the farm yard at the Walanski home, shot and killed John Walanski, his wife, their invalid daughter, Mary, sixteen, and seriously wounded Mrs. Anna Huchaluk, mother of Mrs. Walanski. The aged woman died in a hospital in Smoky Lake several days later.

Fleeing the scene of his crime, the slayer started down the road, where he met John Darichuk, a neighbor farmer, driving along in his wagon. Darichuk was shot dead, his body being found in the wagon box when the unguarded horses reached the farm yard.

Dwernchuk, who has operated a store in Edmonton for about two years, left here recently for Smoky Lake. On reaching the home of some friends there, he is said to have borrowed a 12 gauge shotgun, ostensibly to start on a hunting trip.

It was a 12 gauge shotgun that was used to kill all five victims.

His Lucky Star Winks Clue to Stolen Auto

New York.—When Lee Wick's automobile was stolen from his home in Brooklyn, he notified the police. Nothing happened. Wick asked neighbors if they had seen the car. Still nothing happened.

Anyone else might have shrugged his shoulders, recalled the thousands of cars stolen every year, collected the insurance, if any, and bought a new model. But not Lee Wick, who is a musician by vocation and a student of astrology by avocation. He consulted his brother, Clarence, also a sky seer, and they sought the answer in the stars.

They were impressed by the proximity of the Gemini twins to the Chariot; the significance of Sirius, the dog star, and the contiguity of Venus in the ascendant. By pouring over charts and graphs they figured this:

"The car is southwest of the point whence it was stolen and hard by a large body of water."

The Atlantic ocean is the largest body of water near Flatbush, and the brothers sped together to Coney Island, proceeded west on Surf avenue, and voila, there was the missing chariot with two men, by Gemini, near and a radiant girl, a veritable Venus, munching a hot dog—Sirius, no less!

The Wick brothers saw the light. They called a policeman, who arrested John McCarthy and Edward Stanko, Brooklyn. Venus was permitted to go into eclipse. The accuracy of the astrological arrest was assured when the prisoners pleaded guilty before County Judge Conway.

Wagon Falls 26 Feet, but Boy Is Only Bruised

Kingston, Canada.—A boy and the driver of a horse wagon narrowly escaped serious injury when the horse ran away here recently and fell a distance of 26 feet into a quarry, dying instantly.

When he saw that his bolting horse was headed for the quarry, A. McGregor, Russell street, carter, leaped from the wagon, suffering no injury.

A moment later horse and wagon tumbled into the quarry. It was soon discovered that a youngster who had been riding in the wagon with McGregor, had clung to the vehicle, but with the exception of minor bruises had escaped injury in the fall.

"Stop" and "Go" Light Issue in Youth's Death

Memphis.—Whether a traffic light was red or green when Thomas F. Queen, Jr., eighteen, pedaled his bicycle to death a few months ago, will decide a $53,000 damage suit the youth's father has brought against G. D. Perkins, driver of a car which crashed into the youth at a street intersection. Perkins said the boy crossed the street on the danger signal while the green light showed up for his automobile.

Mother of Four Babies

"Although I am only 22 years old, I have four babies to care for. Before my first baby was born my mother urged me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was so terribly weak. I had to lie down four or five times a day. After three bottles I could feel a great improvement. I still take the Vegetable Compound whenever I need it for it gives me strength to be a good mother to my family."—Mrs. Vern L. Dennings, 510 Johnson Street, Saginaw, Michigan.

Primitive Methods of Transport in Mexico

Although air travel is common in Mexico today, other modes of transportation are not so well developed; for flying frequently is the only way to travel over areas where railroads and roads have never been built.

On many of the recently built Mexican roads one may see every variety of Mexican transportation represented, from a pack on the back of a woman and the laden burro or mule to an oxcart, an automobile with a railway train near by or a trimotor plane overhead. Modern transportation, while present, is new, and old native methods are still in use.

Human transportation was for centuries the only kind; and, as a result of thousands of years of development, it is still an art in Mexico. The Indian instinctively knows how to do up a bundle or a basket or a pile, and how and where best to balance it for efficiency and safety. Backs and legs are strong. In Mexico City enormous articles of furniture may frequently be seen moving down the street on the bulging legs of some small man.

The Mexican carrier is not only strong but skillful. One may see him carrying a cake of ice at an impossible angle on his head, with no ice tongs in sight; or perhaps he has a bag of candied figs on his head and a sweetheart on his arm.

Knew Enough to Make Careful "Test" of Wire

News had been received by the inspector of the seaside tramway system that an overhead wire had fallen in a crowded street.

The inspector betook himself to the spot.

When he arrived he found a crowd of people handling the wire in a most careless manner.

Going up to the nearest man he shouted:

"You had no right to touch that wire. If the current had been on, you would have been killed outright by the shock!"

The other looked at the inspector with a knowing air.

"Ah," said he, "I was mighty careful! I felt it carefully before I took hold of it!"—London Answers.

Snakes Once Boy's Pets Return for "Handouts"

Last year Lionel Maheu, a sixteen-year-old Franklin (N. H.) lad, collected nearly 100 snakes of common varieties and kept them all winter in a specially arranged compartment made from a wash boiler. He experimented with foods, and the snakes thrived in captivity. In the spring he decided to give them their freedom and turned them loose in woods some distance from his home. Since that time a certain number of the snakes return regularly to the Maheu home in quest of food. Often when he opens the door of the shed where he kept his strange pets he finds a hungry snake looking for a bite to eat and he always treats the wriggling visitors to an apparently appreciated handout.—Indianapolis News.

Myth Exploded

The widely credited possibility of ships becoming embedded in the weeds of the Sargasso sea, and being unable to escape, was disproved by the expedition of the Michael Sars under the direction of Sir John Murray in 1910, which found the surface covered with weeds only in patches, not continuously. The Beebe expedition later verified this statement.

Selvig Bill Asks For Flour Tax

Wathington—Congressman Selvig of Minnesota introduced a bill providing for the imposition of a federal tax upon every barrel of flour milled in the United States. The tax would be collected from millers by the United States government, and all moneys collected would be refunded to wheat growers on the basis of their total wheat sales for the year.

The United States treasury department would refund to millers the tax paid on any flour exported from the United States, the amount on such refunds to be deducted from the total tax collected and before the time of making refunds to the farmers.

At 1 cent a pound, or $1.96 a barrel on 200,000,000 barrels, an export of fifty million barrels and a stamp tax of $1.96 per barrel, the total stamp collections would approximate $400,000,000. The refunds for export flour would be approximately $100,000,000, leaving the amount to refund to growers $300,000,000 for the year. This refund to be pro-rated back to growers on the basis of the total state wheat sales.—Polk County Leader.

Pastors of this community have been invited to join with ministers from all other communities in the state in a Minnesota State Pastors Conference in St. Paul January 12, 13, and 14, which will bring together for the first time in the history of Minnesota pastors from nineteen leading evangelical denominations to consider common problems and advance the cause of the the church.

Plans for the conference were outilned in a communication received here this week from a volunteer committee made up from representatives of nineteen denominations and six religions organizations, which are joining their efforts to make the meeting a big success.

Invitations for the conference have gone out to 2064 ministers in the participating denominations, the volunteer committee reported, and hundreds of pastors are expected to gather for the meetings. Churches in many communities already have made plans for their pastors to attend the conference, and inquiries have been received from many others, the committee reported.

306 Die of Tuberculosis in Marshall Co. in 21 Yrs.

Three hundred and six Marshall county residents died of tuberculosis during the last 21 years according to a report issued by the Minnesota Public Heath Association in connection with their annual Christmas Seal sale. Of these, 195 died in the ten year period previous to 1918 and 99 died in the next ten years showing that the number of deaths from this cause is slowly decreasing and indicating that tuberculosis in Marshall County is gradually coming under control. However, twelve Marshall County residents died of this curable, preventable disease du- 1929.

Records of tuberculosis deaths throughout Minnesota show that a total of 42,932 men, women and children have been victims since 1909, the report states. "The death rate at the present time is only half as high as it was when the organized work was started over 20 years ago. Tuberculosis deaths for 1929 numbered 11[illegible] in the state, or more than three every day. Half of these deaths occurred from 15 to 45."

Skating Rink Dance Not So Hot

We are sorry to report that we did not clear very much money for the skating rink at the benefit dance given for that purpose Saturday night. However, the dance committee were able to raise enough money that night to pay the orchestra and have $2 left over.

After paying for the advertising and tickets the rink fund will consist of about $18. But, how long will this last when we are forced to hire some one to do the work of building the rink.

Show your loyalty by paying your share of the donation for maintaining a rink here. There are several who have not paid anything yet but, they all have children who will play on the rink when it is finished. Put in a dollar like your neighbor did and help the thing along instead of trying to skate along for nothing.

Don't jump on our neck about the dance as, we noticed that you stayed at home that night it was held instead of turning out to help make it a success. We asked for a little co-operation but failed to get it and, we mention this only because it is a fact that no one man is going to spend all his time in making a rink while the rest sit and look on and to top it of by turning us down when we ask for a dollar to fix a place for their children to play.

Remember this, that when you leave this earth you won't have any use for money.

Preparing for More Traffic on Lake of the Woods

An order for a magnificent cruiser to cost $500,000 and which will ply on the Lake of the Woods waters this coming summer, has been given to Ditchbur's Limited of Orillia, Ont. by John A. Frolong, manager of the Capitol Loan company, and son-in-law of the late Alexander McDonald pioneer wholesale grocer.

Mr. Frolong is at present in St. Petersburg, Florida where he is spending the winter with Mrs. Frolong and children, and will not be back in the city until May 1st, it was learned at his office. Mr. Frolong's chief engineer, who resides at Kenora, left for Orillia where he will complete plans for the starting of construction.

The new boat will be 83 feet long with a 17 foot beam. The Orillia plant will reopen to build this boat and will employ about thirty men. The construction will require 35,000 hours' labor, which runs well over the five month term. Work will start almost immediately, the only thing that is delaying the company at present is the arrival of material which is due this week.

Value of Farm Crops For 1930 Estimated

The farm value of 1930 crops in the United States was estimated today by the deparment of agriculture at $6,274,824,000, against $8,675,420,000 in 1929.

The values, it was explained by the department, are based on prices paid to farmers on December 1, or, in the cases of commercial truck crops, on the seasonal farm prices. The department lists about sixty-two kinds of crops.

The total area of crops for which acreage figures are compiled was 366,507,000 acres in 1930, compared with 364,522,000 acres for the same crops in 1930.

Floating Lighthouse for New York Harbor

FIRE ISLAND

The new "Fire Island" lightship—a floating lighthouse—on its arrival at New York from Portland, Ore., a distance of 6,286 miles. It will be stationed at Fire Island to help protect the billions of dollars worth of shipping which enters New York harbor. It is the most efficient lightship ever built in this country.

Census Total of U.S. 122,775,046

Population Increase Over 1920 Is 17,064,426, or 16.1 Per Cent.

Washington.—The population of continental United States on April 1 was 122,775,046, the census bureau announced as the final result of the 1930 census. This final figure was an increase of 17,064,426, or 16.1 per cent over the 1920 census.

Adding to this figure 2,151,023 included in outlying possessions and the military or naval service abroad, the total number of persons under the American flag was brought to 124,926,069, as compared with 107,508,855 in 1920.

Numerous changes were made in the population of the various states over the preliminary count recently announced by the bureau, corrections being made in all but three instances. Thirty-three states attained populations showing increases over the preliminary count while twelve had less.

New York had a population of 12,588,066, while New Jersey had 4,041,334 and Connecticut 1,606,903.

Concentration of the Increase.

More than a quarter of the total increase in the United States was concentrated in California, with 2,250,390 and New York, with 2,202,839.

Over half the increase came in six states, five of them industrial, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania in the East; Illinois and Michigan in the Middle West, and the sixth, California, on the West coast.

On a percentage basis, California showed the greatest increase in the past decade, amounting to 65.7 per cent, although its actual numerical increase superseded by only 47,551 that of New York with an increase of 21.2 per cent.

Other percentages of increase, in the order of their importance, were: Florida 52.6, Michigan 32.0, Arizona 30.3, New Jersey 28.1, Texas 24.9, North Carolina 23.9 and Oregon 21.8. New York was ninth and Oklahoma tied with West Virginia for tenth place at 18.1 per cent. Connecticut's ratio was 16.4 per cent.

Only one state, Montana, showed a decrease below the 1920 census, amounting to 11,283, or 2.1 per cent.

Increases were shown in the outlying territories and possessions, the Virgin Islands alone showing a decline, which amounted to 4,039, or 15.5 per cent. A decline was noted in the number of persons in the military and naval service abroad, there being 27,785 less than in 1920.

The Population by States.

The nation's population by states in geographical divisions and the outlying possessions, with the amount and percentage of the increase or decrease over 1920, is as follows:

Lightning Strikes Two Buildings at Same Time

Pinehurst, N. C.—Lightning may not strike twice in the same place, but apparently it can hit two places at the same time. Back in September a bolt set fire to a shed at the Pinehurst Gun club and burned it up along with nearly $500 worth of traps. It was believed at the time no other damage had resulted. However, the curator of the club, while getting the clubhouse ready for the season opening the last week in October, discovered the bolt had struck the end of the building near where the shed stood, though about 50 distant.

SECRET PLANE LIFTS BIG GUNS TO ITALIAN ALPS

Helicopter Type Machine Perfected and Tested; Craft Also Can Fly Backward.

Paris.—An airplane similar to the Cierva autogiro, but capable of being used to hoist heavy artillery to the crags of the Alps for long-range bombardment, has been perfected and tested in Italy.

Reports of the new machine were brought to Paris by French international experts who witnessed the trials. They state that the helicopter demonstrated remarkable facility in taking off vertically in the strictest sense, and can remain stationary in the air indefinitely besides being able to move horizontally in any direction, even backwards.

Military and naval authorities in Italy are described as confident that the helicopter can rise vertically from the deck of a warship as well as lift artillery to mountain heights from which fire could be directed at great range against enemy or target.

The experimental machine was made possible by a contribution of $100,000 by Baron Trojani, plus $30,000 advanced by the Italian government.

All work in connection with the plane is being done under the official supervision of Air Minister Gen. Italo Balbo with the flight work under command of Major Mellini, air corps pilot.

Although it is reported the plane has set an altitude record for its type, the figures have not been given out, and further secret tests are to be held. The plane is capable of lifting 30 pounds per unit horsepower in a vertical line, it was said.

Hides Clothes to Keep Wife at Home

Ohio Parrot Sings Hymns and Swears

Pomeroy, Ohio.—A parrot that repeats the Lord's Prayer and sings "Nearer My God to Thee" is owned by Miss Sarah Brannon here.

A short time ago a neighbor walked into the Brannon home singing the hymn, slightly "off key." Polly immediately broke in with "Hold on there, Newt, you've lost the tune."

According to Miss Brannon, the only thing the matter with Polly is that she swears oftener than she sings or prays.

Ledge Catches Auto; Saves Six from Death

Newburgh, N. Y.—Six persons escaped possible death when their automobile plunged off a 100-foot cliff on the Storm King highway and landed upright on a ledge 30 feet below. The automobile became wedged, preventing it from falling into the Hudson river 70 feet below. Several of the occupants were injured severely.

White Whiskers Saves Man from Term in Jail

Schenectady, N. Y.—An old man with white whiskers and a youth pleaded guilty here to intoxication charges. The former's sentence was suspended on his promise to leave town. Whereupon the youth made the same promise if released, but Justice Fryer demurred, telling the youth he didn't have white whiskers.

Donkey Skin Diploma Planned for Writer

Paris.—A new literary prize, a ludicrous diploma upon donkey skin, is being offered to the author of the greatest number of ridiculous articles and stories for the French press. The competition is organized by the humorous magazine, Rouge et Noir, which is campaigning against theatrical literature. Readers will be given substantial prizes for pointing out ridiculous articles and the author who is most often caught will get the donkey skin diploma called "Le Prix des Grotesques."

A Few Little Smiles

THE AWFUL TRUTH

Two faces were close together, the man's grim, tense; the other face was small and white, with two slender hands pressed tightly against it. It was those frail hands that riveted the man's horrified gaze.

"Heavens!" he said, still staring; and in his voice was hopeless, stark tragedy, for that other face was the face of his watch, and those little hands told him that he had missed the last train home.—Tit-Bits.

The Doctor Plays Safe

Doctor—You are slightly morbid, my dear lady. You should look about you and marry again.

Widow—Oh, doctor, is this a proposal?

Doctor—Allow me to remind you, madam, that a doctor prescribes medicine, but he doesn't take it.

On White or Rye?

Ernest—Didn't you enjoy the obelisks in Egypt?

Dora—M-m, delicious!

Divided Authority

"Who is really the boss in your house?" inquired the friend.

"Well, of course, Maggie assumes command of the children, the servants, the dog, the cat and the canary. But I can say pretty much what I please to the goldfish."

Proof Enough

"Do you love me?"

"Do you think I'd eat coffee and sinkers for lunch all week to have money to date with you if I didn't?"

"THEY ARE MADE THAT WAY"

By FANNIE HURST

(©, 1930, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

REVEREND DOCTOR FLOX and his wife, Deborah, were somewhat of an incongruous pair on the great transcontinental flyer known as the "California."

It was one of those magnificent, through-service trains that stopped only at such major points as Kansas City and Albuquerque.

It was a train whose chief clientele was the glittering one of motion picture folks—players, directors, magnates—plying their way back and forth between California and points East.

The crew of the "California" all possessed autograph books, in which were written the names of the great and the near-great ones of the cinema world, who had traveled on this road from time to time.

It was an exciting experience to the layman to find himself on one of these journeys. Not only were there apt to be the great and the near-great on board, but one was so apt to meet the charming and oft pathetic picture of youth, setting out on the great adventure of seeking a career.

The "California" was really an adventurer that was carrying them into the unknown.

Reverend Flox and his wife, who were in the act of transferring their modest habitat from a town called Emporium, Mo., to the sun-kissed slopes of Los Angeles, were scarcely part of this picture. They were rather a dim, gray, timid-looking pair, showing frankly in their faces the handwriting of time. They were the last pair in the world you would have even remotely connected with the spangled scene of the motion-picture universe. And rightly. They were just what they seemed to be, a tired old pair who, at fifty-eight and sixty, were for the first time in their lives experiencing freedom from the yoke of the responsibilities of family, parish and duties.

At sixty, Reverend Flox, with a tiny pension sufficient to sustain him and his wife in tiny fashion were bound for the Mecca of California.

His parish, which he had served indefatigably for thirty-five years—to say nothing of the wife who had served in like fashion beside him—had sent them with God's speed to finish their gentle days in the land of benign sunshine.

They were a tired and grateful old pair.

For twenty years the wife of Reverend Flox had carried on her slim shoulders the responsibilities not only of the sick, the lame and the blind of her husband's parish, but, within the confines of their own little home, the mother of Reverend Flox and the mother of Mrs. Flox had lived out their lives. For twenty years Mrs. Flox had waited hand and foot on the paralytic figure of her mother-in-law, and had danced devoted attendance upon the whims and fancies of her own mother, whose last years had been clouded by a failing mentality.

The old ladies had died within a week of each other—a querulous, demanding pair of little people, filled with the inconsistencies, the pathos, the lovableness, and withal the tyrannies of the aged.

There was no doubt about it, there was a more important reason for Reverend Flox moving to southern California than even the frailty of the reverend doctor himself. The long, exciting years of service and servitude had worn down the nerves of Mrs. Flox. Gentle soul, she was tired. So there were legitimate reasons why Reverend Doctor Flox decided not to accept even the part-time position of rector in a small outlying Los Angeles community, but to devote these last years to the kind of leisure so necessary to the well-being of them both.

A strange enough pair to be traveling out to the land of sunshine, in the gaudy company of the cinema world. And it was natural enough that, during the long journey, they should drift into acquaintanceship with the sole other passenger on board who, in many ways, seemed to be of their kind. She was a little white-haired wren of a person, who occupied a berth opposite theirs. A fussy little soul with a canary-bird in a cage, profuse and somewhat outlandish luggage, and a pair of tiny, nervous feet, which she kept propped up on the seat opposite her in pink knitted slippers.

The outstanding note about her was the quality of her rich, deep hair. It was absolutely the color of snow that has drifted into a high dazzling plush. It was white and silky beyond the telling. She wore it fluffed beautifully around her little old face. Against the whirling sands of the desert, as the train drove through, she kept it quaintly covered with a large silk nightcap.

She was a querulous, fussy little old lady, making constant demands on the porter, in a tiny, chirping voice that for all the world was like that of a gullfinch chirping in his cage.

That was how the Floxes met her. She kept chirping so. Demanding, complaining, requesting, reiterating. What time? Open the window. Glass of water! Too hot. Too cold! Open the window. Close the window.

After a while it was Reverend Flox himself, and Mrs. Flox, who found themselves doing these things on the jump. The porter ceased to respond to her rings. Even the blonde young baby-doll, who was occupying the upper berth of the old lady's section managed to have herself removed to another coach.

The little lady was a trial.

And yet, if anybody in the world was equipped to attend to the needs of the little lady it was Reverend Flox and his wife. They were so attuned to years of that kind of service. Not only in the parish; but in their very home itself two little old ladies had exercised just that type of tyranny.

And the little old lady, mind you, was bound for Hollywood. With exactly fifty dollars in her pocket, and the blessing of a son in Moline, Mo., who as she innocently described him, had all the earmarks of a ne'er-do-well, she was setting out to battle her final years on the far-famed precincts of Hollywood.

Back in Moline, legend had it that in Hollywood fame and fortune awaited the old. The screen clamored for sweet-faced, white-haired grandmothers to play the roles of old age.

And the little old lady was thither-bound, tired to the soul, frail as a match, but hoping that there awaited security for her in the sunset of her life.

You see, gentle-faced old ladies, with breeding, mind you, were in demand in Hollywood. There was a certain instance, well known to newspaper headlines, of a little old lady in the twilight of her life who had found fame and fortune in pictures at the age of sixty-eight.

This little old lady was turning a small, lined face toward some of that fame and fortune. The son, whom she so unconsciously described as the ne'er-do-well he was, had aided and abetted her in this tardy ambition. So had a daughter-in-law, who had apparently gone much out of her way to see to it that the exodus of the little lady from the home of her son was a final one.

Here was a small, aged soul being sent on her way. A way that was perilous beyond the telling; a way that was sure almost immediately to develop pits and holes that would swallow her up.

Reverend Flox and his wife listened sadly while she prattled of the rainbow that stretched across the small span of sky that was left to her. She had been cast adrift subtly, cruelly, haplessly. Dark forces were about to pounce upon her remnant of life. And, all the while, innocently, a little childishly, she sat fussing and chirping in her berth, demanding of life and on the verge of getting in return less than nothing.

The Floxes saw her plight and could have wept for her. And of course in the end the obvious happened.

They could no more have permitted this frail wisp of a little old creature to slip into the maelstrom of the struggle for existence than they could have done likewise with any of the many old ones whose responsibilities had for so many years been resting upon their shoulders.

The little old lady never found herself in that maelstrom. She lives in a tiny bungalow, which she querulously shares with the Floxes. Because of the addition to the household, Reverend Flox has been obliged to accept part-time work in an outlying parish.

The wife of Reverend Flox has not very much time to herself. The little old lady keeps on chirping: Open the window. Close the window. Too hot. Too cold.

The Floxes dance attendance.

They are made that way.

Here's Boston's Idea of Spinach at Its Best

The objection to eating spinach is taking serious form. The professional jokesmiths are flinging fun at it and that may drive this splendid vegetable from our tables. Small boys may rejoice at this result, but small boys have been known to rejoice when the schoolhouse has been destroyed by fire.

Why spinach should fail to raise enthusiasm among gustatory critics is not difficult to understand. Perhaps if a modicum of trouble were taken in its preparation, spinach would find itself highly esteemed. To plunge it into a saucepan of water and to let it boil until it is soft renders it palatable enough to those who are in the habit of eating it plain, but for those whose palates have to be tickled, it is better to have it prepared with fried onions and—and not or—hard-boiled eggs. And the spinach should be thoroughly minced before serving and should be brought to the consistency of mashed potatoes. Then spinach is a delicious vegetable, agreeable to all, even to the small boy.

It shall be admitted here that there is sand in spinach. But the careful housewife and experienced cook easily remove it. It needs only three or four immersions in cold water. The ancients ate spinach, which is a native of Asia, and, so far as we know, the old Greek and Latin poets and prose writers gave off no splenetic remarks on its flavor. Indeed, all the cooks that have gone before have lauded it for its excellence—for its taste, appetizing character and its healthfulness. That spinach has tonic qualities, good for blood and bone, has long been admitted by physicians and perhaps that may account for the small boy's opposition to its presence at table.—Boston Transcript.

THE STORY

Commissar Vilinsky's Soviet squad invades the home of Krassin, aristocrat at Kazan. Vilinsky insults the daughter, Musia. Commissar Loris is urged to confiscate the home. The family consists of Judge Krassin, Mrs. Krassin, Ilya, former officer, and Musia. Vladimir, former officer, is Musia's fiance. Mrs. Krassin expresses fear for her son's safety. Ilya recognizes in Vilinsky a former dishonest steward. Mrs. Krassin conducts Vilinsky in an inspection of the home and contrives that he shall not see Ilya.

—8—

"Oh, those are rooms we saw long ago," said she. "Here are the last on this side. Enter, please."

"Yes," said Vilinsky to protect his self-respect, "I remember now."

He entered Musia's room, as we have seen. He swept aside the hangings which masked the door to the inner room. He refused to allow the young girl to retire when her mother, horrified by his familiarities, requested her to do so. He asked her to play for him—to play anything—he in his peasant's smock!

If Mrs. Krassin had harbored the idea that he might forget Ilya Krassin in this room, her surmise was correct. Mrs. Krassin understood his indescribable leer as he addressed her, and knew what he meant when he said that he wanted this room and everything in it left just as it was when he came there to live; but she quite trusted to Musia's rearing to prevent her from understanding. In fact, that she could not understand was, as between Mrs. Krassin and Musia, what the law calls "an indisputable presumption," and Mrs. Krassin as the court, would have refused to admit any evidence to overturn it. Of course Musia could not understand!

And the girl from force of habit carried out this false presumption of naivete. She stood there with her face blank of all comprehension, like that of a child, her slight rounded figure revealed by her informal attire, a very bewitching person to the eyes of the coarse and brutal intruder. Little, graceful, very feminine, with hair of straw color, and brown almond-shaped eyes, she was a new type to Vilinsky—and he acted according to his lights in the premises. He suddenly sat down beside Musia and pulled her down upon his lap.

Vilinsky's attendants, who were waiting in the hall outside the room, were astonished to see a pale slim girl in negligee run out of the room, start back at seeing their sinister group, and then speed away past them into another part of the house. They stood amazed for a moment, followed her to the next turning, found that she had vanished, and then they ran back with thoughts of assassination or other resistance in their minds. They found their chief standing with a rather foolish look on his face, over the form of an old woman who seemed to have fainted on a sofa in the luxurious room.

"I will show these nobles," said Vilinsky, "that their time has come! . . . . Well, old woman, come to life here!"

Mrs. Krassin slowly rose to a sitting posture, and looked upon him with an expression in which hate, indignation and pacification were curiously mingled.

"I've seen all I want to see here this morning," said he. "When we want the house we'll send you an order. And leave this room just as it is! Come. We have wasted too much time here now! Tovarisch Loris will be complaining because I am late!"

They went out swaggering through the doors, to their cars, and away. Mrs. Krassin watched them as they went out of sight, and then made her way quickly to where her child was concealed. Which child? Not Musia.

And Vilinsky had never even asked about Ilya!

CHAPTER V

Defenseless!

Musia's world came crashing about her in downfall, in that scene with Vilinsky. She had two contending feelings: she must be avenged for this insult. Should she, a daughter of the boyars, have laid upon her, in her own room, the filthy hands of this creature Vilinsky, and upon her soul the stain of his commands and his innuendoes—and must this thing go unavenged? She grew hot with rage.

And then her other feeling blanched her face and left her cold with fear—the feeling that she, even she, was defenseless! The very gods would have fought for her ancestors. The very moujiks could now exult over her, lay their hands on her, in her own house, in her mother's presence. And there was no one to whom she could fly or appeal for vengeance or protection. She could not go to Ilya—he must not be endangered on any account. Vladimir? Yes, he would fight for her—but where was he? He had come into the Krassin house in the night like a mouse, and was awaiting the proper time to slip out—and what could even as gallant a champion as Vladimir do against the risen sea of the people?

What could not the wretches do? She had heard awful tales, not yet contradicted, of the nationalization of women. Was she to be the first victim of it in this doomed city of Kazan? It was almost inconceivable, but she, Musia Krassin, was defenseless against it, unless the Bolsheviki had some rules for her protection: she was an easy victim to this bushy-browed lout in the peasants' smock.

Her father? He was the last person, in prosperity or adversity, of whom any of the family thought. Yet, hiding away even from the servants' eyes in closets and attics, after stealing back in the dusk to her own rooms, and on finding them vacant of visitors, changing her clothes to something more fitting, she stole, for the first time in weeks, to the rooms to which her father had for years been confined as an invalid. The dusk was just shutting down into the night. Judge Krassin was sitting in a long flowered dressing gown which was wrapped carefully about his feet, reading a law book.

"Who is it?" he exclaimed fretfully. "Oh, it is you, my daughter? My nerves are very bad tonight, and you startled me. I am very glad to see you, of course, Maroosia."

"I am sorry I startled you, father."

She had come to her father, a frightened child, to cling to his hand, with some instinct that he might stand between her and a danger to which he was himself immune; for neither father, brother nor mother was under the shadow in which she moved. They could only be made to die. She stepped to her father timidly and took his hand; he allowed her to retain it for a moment, and then drew it away to turn a leaf of his book. There was no harbor here for this trembling soul.

"I do not agree with this decision," said he. "When I was on the bench I should never have agreed to such law as this. My duty to my sovereign would not have permitted it."

She asked him if it would trouble or disturb him if she sat by him for a while. She felt hurt, though she had no reason to feel so, when he looked up at her in surprise, and said very politely that he would be very glad. He had not been, he went on to say, as if delivering an opinion in court, often favored by the company of his family; and it was a pleasure to note an agreeable exception to the rule. And servants were not what they used to be. His man, Simon Boschkov, seemed to take the liberty of having things outside the house to which he was attending, even now. Mr. Krassin did not ask much, but it seemed to him that, tied as he was to his chair, or at least confined to his room, he had the right to look upon such neglect as a hardship.

"May I sit with you tonight?" asked Musia. "I will be very quiet. Perhaps I can read to you."

"It will be very kind of you," said the old judge; "but few people read the law with understanding."

Musia settled down on a low chair at his feet and read. Sometimes he would correct her pronunciation, and once or twice he gave her a little lecture on the law. He did not know that it was a wise old Aztec coming back to lecture on the laws of the Montezumas—obsolete! After he had grown petulant because he wanted Simon Boschkov to put him to bed, Simon really came with muttered excuses, and Musia told him to sit outside while she waited in his place beside the door of her father's bedroom. She sat and listened—listened for the Terror announced by a ring at the door; or by heavy trampling in the passages; or by stealthy footfalls in the hall; or by the bursting in of the door of her father's suite by a man in a peasant's smock.

Sentimental Song Made Official Royal Melody

"Home, Sweet Home" is not the only operatic air that has become a kind of national melody, for France has a tune with words of a similar sentiment. This is "Ou peut-on etre mieux qu'au sein de sa famille?" ("Where can one better be than in the bosom of one's family?"). It was written by Gretry as a quartette in his opera "Lucille" and first achieved a political position when it was sung at Versailles on July 15, 1789, when the Bourbons were being turned out. It was also sung at Carlton house when George III and Queen Charlotte paid their first visit to the prince of Wales and his bride in February, 1795, which possibly caused the homesickness of the princess and made the marriage an unhappy one, and again at Korythnia on the retreat from Moscow on November 15, 1812. It was adopted as an official royal melody on the restoration of the Bourbons in 1814.—London Mail.

Elementary

"My boy," said the business man to his son, "there are two things that are vitally necessary if you are to succeed in business."

"What are they, dad?"

"Honesty and sagacity."

"What is honesty?"

"Always—no matter what happens, nor how adversely it may affect you—always keep your word once you have given it."

"And sagacity?"

"Never give it."

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

The Greatest Hero

The soldier named by Gen. John J. Pershing as the greatest individual hero of the World war earned a Congressional Medal and a bucketful of other decorations without suffering a scratch—but when he started to march into Germany after the fighting was ended, he broke his leg!

Lieut. Samuel Woodfill, Sixtieth infantry, was the soldier. His special feat of glory was the annihilation of something like 19, (or was it 22?) of the enemy. Also, the destruction of a series of machine gun nests in that busy sector of the Argonne north of Nantillois.

Old Sam Woodfill's company helped relieve the Eightieth division, early one foggy morning in October and, without any artillery assistance whatever, launched an attack.

Anyway, old Sam Woodfill seemed to realize the entire job was up to him. So, whether the total was 19 or 22, it is definitely known he got the last three of his kill with a pick-ax when he jumped into their emplacement and found that his pistol would only snap futilely, which wasn't surprising, since he'd emptied all his clips long ago.

They made Woodfill a captain, over in the Sixtieth. He was in charge of a company when the post-Armistice march toward Germany began. "Not a scratch on him. Woodfill's a lucky guy," the doughboys said.

The first time the regiment pitched camp, Woodfill, who came into the army an enlisted man and went out the same way, challenged one of his soldiers to a wrestling bout. And just as we told you in the beginning, the hero who won a Congressional Medal without so much as a scratch, promptly fractured a leg.

The First American Killed

The first American citizen killed in the World war lost his life on February 27, 1915, more than two years before this country formally entered the conflict. He was Edward Mandell Stone, a native of Chicago, who was twenty-seven years old at the time of his death.

Stone's sacrifice is remembered. Each year his death is the inspiration for two separate ceremonies. The date of his passing, February 27, has been designated as the time when the Association of American Volunteers With the French Army, 1914-1917, each year reanimates the Eternal Flame on the tomb of France's Unknown Soldier at the Arc de Triomphe.

On Memorial day every year the American Legion directs a rite at the grave of Stone in the cemetery of Romilly-sur-Seine. One of the interesting features of this latter ceremony is that the French woman who, as volunteer nurse, wrote the last letter for Stone and was beside him when he died, is a participant. She is now schoolmistress of the school in La Villeneuve-au-Chatelot.

Stone lived in Paris and was in the American diplomatic service when the World war began. He enlisted in the French Foreign Legion, August 24, 1914, with the first group of American citizens.

Less than six months later—on February 15, 1915, while serving as a private in Battalion B, Second Regiment of the Foreign Legion, he was wounded so severely he died 12 days later.

Stone was in the trenches near Craonelle in the Aisne when wounded. He "went west" in the military hospital at Romilly-sur-Seine. The first American citizen to die received, posthumously, both the Croix de Guerre and Medaille Militaire.

The Cited Captives

As a tonic for morale which sometimes needed stiffening, the German "all highest" adopted a policy of praise for certain Austrian divisions on the Western Front.

Among papers seized by Americans from an Austrian regimental p. c. near the end of the war was a German corps order which highly praised the First Austrian division. The document mentioned especially the heroic and wonderful work against the Yankees by the Fifth Austrian regiment of infantry.

A short time later, the order was sent to the front to be read to troops of the Fifth Austrian infantry. And on this occasion even the youngest Austrian private of the rear ranks roared with laughter—for the document was read to them by an American captain as they loafed in an American prison pen. The entire Fifth regiment, including 800 men and officers, had been captured by the Yanks.

Several days later a message was dropped from an American airplane for the German high command. It contained the reassuring information that members of the Fifth Austrian infantry would continue their good work—mainly in building roads and in other construction to which prisoners of war were commonly assigned.

Billy's Christmas Flowers for Mother

By Martha Banning Thomas

BILLY loved flowers, particularly red ones. From the moment he could toddle around alone, he had gone straight to the poppies in his mother's garden and pulled off all the heads. This was out of sheer love, not naughtiness.

When Billy grew to be three years old he still loved red flowers, but he did not pull off their heads. He kept them tightly in his fist, and smiled with contentment. One afternoon his mother took him shopping with her. There were a few last things she needed before Christmas. Billy was enchanted by the gay stores and happy looking people. He chattered by his mother's side and looked at everything with all his might. Once, when they were waiting to cross a street, Billy's eyes grew rounder than ever, for they were looking straight into a large, red poinsettia in a shop window. He had never seen anything so beautiful.

The policeman's whistle blew. People streamed across the street. But Billy's mother found that her little boy had not come with her. Somehow he had slipped away. She felt a moment of panic and ran back to the policeman before the traffic light changed. "My little boy," she gasped, "I don't know where he is!"

Then she heard a clear call. "Mamma! Here's—a—present—for you!" Billy's voice. She and the big policeman looked toward the other curb. Wedged in between peoples' legs and bodies stood Billy waving a great red flower. His face was all smiles. "A—SSSmas present!" called Billy again.

His mother and the policeman made a dash for him. The lights changed. Traffic roared by. "I found it in a garden," said Billy, "right there!" A surprised clerk was looking out of the flower shop window.

"Lots and lots of pretty flowers," caroled the child, "not deaded like our garden."

"Thank heaven!" breathed his mother, "and thank you, Billy, for my present."

The policeman grinned and Billy's mother went in to pay for the flower.

"He doesn't know any better. He thinks your shop is a garden," she explained. "I'll try to make him understand."

"Oh, that's all right," replied the clerk, "Merry Christmas, I'm sure!"

Billy's mother hugged the child with a prayer of thankfulness in her heart, and shuddered to think of what might have happened. "This is a Merry Christmas!" she smiled, and Billy wondered why she held him so close.

HOW SHE WORKED IT

BABE OF BETHLEHEM

ON CHRISTMAS the whole Christian world prostrates itself in adoration around the crib of Bethlehem and rehearses in accents of love a history which precedes all time and will endure throughout eternity. As if by an instinct of our higher, spiritual nature, there well up from the depth of our hearts emotions which challenge the power of human expression. We seem to be lifted out of the sphere of natural endeavor to put on a new life and to stretch forward in desire to a blessedness which, though not palpable, is eminently real.—Cardinal Gibbons.

Would Use Phonograph in Teaching Elocution

Elocution should be taught in the Swedish schools by means of specially prepared phonograph records, asserts Dr. Nils Hanninger, councillor of the national board of education. Last summer the leading Swedish authors read from their works for school records to be used in the literature classes, and Doctor Hanninger believes competent readers should be engaged to make special records to show proper pronunciation. It is also the aim of the Swedish school authorities to make Swedish spelling as phonetic as possible, but the spoken language does not always conform to the more formal written one. These problems Doctor Hanninger will take up at the next congress of the teachers in the Swedish public schools.

T. B. TESTED

She has been tested to determine whether or not the germs of the disease have lodged in her body, and is prepared if necessary to protect herself from them.

Several thousand school children in Minnesota have been similarly tested in the new campaign to detect tuberculosis infection early, so that the disease may be nipped in the bud. This new program of tuberculosis prevention has been started or planned in at least 20 Minnesota counties.

That children infected with tuberculosis can be protected from the disease through proper treatment is shown by the records of the Ramsey County Children's Preventorium follow-up service, which is made possible through Christmas Seal funds. Of 344 boys and girls, all of whom had been exposed to tuberculosis and were infected, cared for at the institution in the past 15 years, only three have died of this disease with which all were threatened.

Continuance and extension of this and all other phases of the anti-tuberculosis program depend on the success of the Christmas Seal sale, which finances local, state, and national health work.

PLAYING THE GAME

Not all heroes playing the game are to be found on the football field. "Tiny" is one of Minnesota's unknown heroes, many of whom are to be found in every tuberculosis sanatorium playing the game with a smile as they fight for health and life.

To protect children from tuberculosis is the special objective for 1930 and 1931 in the Christmas Seal anti-tuberculosis program in Minnesota. In the past five years more than 1100 boys and girls under 19 years of age have died of tuberculosis. Special effort is now under way to protect youth from this disease by searching out infected children and protecting them.

SEES HEAVY CLAIMS ON FUTURE BANKERS

American Bankers Association Official Declares That Banking Changes Creating Large Bank Systems Will Call for Broader Social Viewpoints.

Larger scale group or branch banking will inevitably bring a new era of banking organization and operations to the United States and bankers will have to develop "new conceptions, new administrative methods and new economic views," Rudolf S. Hecht, Chairman of the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association, recently told the members of the American Institute of Banking.

The institute is the educational section of the association and he emphasized the point that the new era in banking demanded "that we must step up our education so that banking shall be fortified for new responsibilities."

What the Future Calls For

"We must broaden our social conception of banking," Mr. Hecht said. "Not only for the technical operations of the new banking must we fit ourselves, but both as individuals and an organized profession we must charge ourselves with serious consideration of the social problems that are involved. Already we hear murmurings and fears and doubts as to whether the changes that are coming about in banking in the extension of group and branch systems do not constitute the looming of a new financial menace, a monopolistic threat not only to the individual unit banker, but to the financial liberty of society in general. I am stating these things merely as facts that must be taken into consideration in our studies.

"Public opinion cannot be ignored by any business, least of all by banking, which is admittedly semi-public in character and is, therefore, subject to special supervision by the constituted authorities. If banking develops tendencies that give rise to public fears, we must so conduct ourselves as to reassure all doubts.

"For this is true,—that business succeeds only by serving society—that no business can permanently prosper which does not both render service to the public and at the same time convince the public that it is rendering that service. Banking, therefore, must take cognizance of what the public is saying of this new era in its development.

"It must be part of the technique of modern banking administration, whatever form our enlarged institutions take, to avoid the creation of monopolies, or even the appearance of such a centralization of financial power as to be able to exercise an undue influence over public or private finance or other lines of business. The public's right to the safeguards of fair competition must be observed.

Must Preserve Individual Initiative

"It must also be an item of management that individual initiative and opportunity shall be maintained. If America has outstripped other nations in the distribution of the benefits of its progress, it is due to the fact that there are no barriers of social caste or business tradition against advancement for character, ability, and initiative. American business has learned that it serves itself best by encouraging by every practical means individual ambition and initiative, and hurts itself most by repressing or neglecting them. Competition for efficiency, both within an organization and between organizations, will prevent any institution from long enduring in which maintenance of opportunity and recognition of initiative are not controlling principles of management. As heads of the greatest of our financial and industrial institutions stand men who started from the humblest of beginnings. Through all the grades of executive authority and reward stand men in positions in keeping, generally speaking, with their individual merits. I, personally, see no reason for fearing that the enlarged banking organizations which the future may hold would necessarily supply future bank employees with any less opportunity for achievement than unit banking.

"Again, a major consideration of administration in any multiple form of banking organization must be its public relations in every community it touches. Its foremost consideration must be actually and visibly to serve the economic upbuilding of that community. No system will be long tolerated whose local members work, or are suspected as working, to draw economic strength from one place to enlarge the finanical power of another. The local unit bank has always been part and parcel of the communities where it lives—and no system can last which does not make it a major principle of operating technique to serve, and not exploit, the communities into whose business lives it enters."

Growth of Banking Education

DENVER, Colo.—At the American Institute of Banking convention held here last month the growth in the effort among bank employees to provide themselves with banking education was shown by the fact, as reported by one speaker, that 12 years ago the institute had 80 study chapters, today 208, and that its enrollment in the study courses had grown from 11,000 to 45,000, or an increase of over 300 per cent. The graduates number nearly 14,000. The institute is the educational section of the American Bankers Association through which bank w[illegible] given instruc[illegible] jects relating to their business.
